JULES VERNE NOVEL FILMED

AN EPOCH-MAKING EVENT

JULES VERNE is a name to conjure with. It stands for that school of prophetic scientific fantasy to which the world is indebted for the inspiration that has led to so many modern inventions.

Incident is piled upon Incident in a wealth of variety that is almost bewildering, and the incidents are such as are dear to the hearts of all sorts and conditions of picture-goers, because they are full of intellectual excitement.

The fact alone that the active cooperation and collaboration of M. Michel Verne, the gifted son of the great Jules, have been employed during the preparation of these epoch-making films, is an event of no small importance in the World of Cinematography.

Facts and Comments

EXHIBITORS rarely make a mistake by taking the public into their confidence. We heartily commend the exhibitors of Philadelphia who have made an appeal to their patrons on behalf of a higher price of admission. They are proceeding slowly and carefully and propose to raise the price for the present only on Saturdays, when they will charge ten cents instead of five. Following the suggestions often made in these columns, they have addressed themselves to the daily newspapers of their city to explain and justify this increase in the price of admission. The press has given them all the space they wanted. The arguments for this moderate increase in the price of admission for just one day in the week are bound to have their effect on the public. The fairness of the charge of ten cents on Saturdays is obvious. The arguments in favor of the proposition have been put in the form of a letter to the editor and have been prepared by THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, which will gladly send them to any reader who cares to ask for them. We earnestly hope that the movement for higher prices will be entirely successful. Philadelphia has been one of the persistent "nickel-towns," but there are others just as much wedded to the five-cent unit. If the movement in Philadelphia is successful we may hope for similar agitation in other cities. Baltimore, for instance, has never risen above the dead level of the nickel, and the example of Philadelphia might prove an inspiration.

IN the pursuit of new sensations some moving picture actors have been badly burned, and for a time hovered on the brink of death. This insensate thirst for the horrible ought not to be gratified by means of the motion picture. Morbid instincts and atavistic cravings grow by what they feed upon. Nothing would draw a crowd more quickly than a public execution, but the growth of humanity and modern enlightenment have banished such hideous spectacles within prison walls. It has been proposed in the press to stop this risking of human lives for the sake of the dollar-hunting irresponsibles by an appeal to the legislature. There may be merit in this suggestion. It is true that human nature is the same always, but it is also true that Christianity and civilization have tamed and often extinguished the brutal and bestial instincts. This has been the work of many generations, and it ought not be imperiled. The motion picture is destined to help the advance of humanity, not to retard it. A man who depends for the success of his film solely upon the hideously sensational, avows his mediocrity, and will never get very far in any branch of our industry.

MOVING picture men who are agitating Sunday exhibition often make the mistake of failing to emphasize the fact that they are willing to give a special program on Sundays in deference to the character of the day. We do not have to be fanatical or narrow-minded to resent the "Wild West" picture or the cheap melodrama on a Sunday program. On the other hand, who will object to an educational program on Sunday, with perhaps a religious or semi-religious touch? Why should the marvels of science and the secrets of nature's eternal laboratory be banned from the screen on Sunday. Close the saloons and the dance halls, but open the art galleries, the libraries and the motion picture theaters with good, clean programs. We believe that "a special Sunday program for the Sunday exhibition" ought to be the slogan and the keynote of all agitation for an open Sunday. There is no doubt that such a motto will win public support and conquer narrow prejudice.

IN another part of this week's issue of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD we print an account of the agitation for a national censorship, its origin, its motives and its prospects. The one fact that stands out with unpleasant prominence is the apparent indifference of the industry as to what may happen in Washington. This indifference is in strange contrast to the zeal with which the self-constituted regulators of the motion picture pursue their ends and purposes. It is an article well worth reading and well worth acting upon.

Evidences of the evils of all kinds of censorship are in the meantime accumulating on every side. The latest absurdity is reported from the state of Pennsylvania. The official board of censors in that state has promulgated a set of rules, among which we find the following: "Farce, burlesque or drama, which is actuated by levity or any other than serious purposes, will be discouraged." In other words, only solemn farces or mournful jokes or tragic burlesque or sober satires will be permitted. There is no particular reason for it, but it does seem that every time the censors get a chance to make themselves ridiculous they rise to the occasion.

No Longer Alone

By Louis Reeves Harrison

SURPRISE was the effect upon my mind when I came suddenly and unexpectedly upon "A Chat with Authors," by Percy N. Verkoff, in our issue of April 25th of this year. His title was not remarkable, nor did there appear to be anything unusual in the general character of his article at a glance, but the great and striking idea involved in what he had to say and his method of handling a subject of high importance so astounded me that I could scarcely believe my eyes. Here, at last, was a breadth of view and a comprehension of the full meaning of moving pictures with which I am in deep sympathy, for which I have been battling all alone for many years.

"We have increased the mechanical length of our productions," he says, "let us now broaden their scope. Let us show what makes some people excessively powerful and others excessively weak. Let us paint with unmistakable colors that type of octopus who has gained power through knowing how to take advantage of the weak. Let us help those whom the octopus grinds and squeezes by pointing out how much was lost through apathy toward things concerning public welfare. Let us help educate the young to understand their individual and collective responsibilities. Let us study these things and write about them so that they can be visualized accurately, artistically and convincingly. Then, and only then, may we pride ourselves that we have helped the photoplay to being the potent amusement and educational factor it should be."

Mr. Verkoff asks authors to bear their share of social responsibility, to study ideals for the human race and set them forth with all the courage and skill they can summon. He contends that the function of this new art is not merely to reflect what has been done on the stage and in literature, not to mirror the thoughts and methods of other mediums of expression, but to record in its own way the events and feelings of the time associated with its birth and growth, to visualize ideas and ideals of contemporaneous interest in storied or other form. I am no longer alone in the contention that motion-picture production constitutes a distinct art in itself.

Many thousands may entertain that belief, but they hide it within themselves. It is the man who turns a Rontgen ray of combined observation, reflection and judgment on the subject and dares assert his convictions, as does Mr. Verkoff, who counts. "To ignore the question," he says plainly, "is to kill the goose that lays the golden eggs. You may hypnotize the public into biting a lemon and imagining it is an orange for some time, but not for all the time. The author must select his themes from the life of the present and not from the literature of the past. He must cultivate powers which will enable him to dissect and analyze conditions as they exist and make sure that his own vision is not blurred by false impressions, political hysteria or religious dogma."

These are brave words. The author of them would have plays that would draw millions to the picture shows who now smile tolerantly at the very idea or attend for the sake of the children and sit bored through a lot of presentations of the "good photography" or "good acting" kind. We may well praise a novel that is nicely printed and prettily illustrated, but the main thing is what it contains. Just so with the photodrama. Even reviewers concentrate upon the medium itself irrespective of what it conveys. People in front are interested or bored by the story and its significance. Do not lose sight of that fact.

Every department of this new art of expression has been constantly discussed—and they all deserve discussion,—but it is in the interest of every one engaged in production and exhibition to now consider what is to be expressed. That we have a new and rarely beautiful language, one comprehended by the intelligent of all nations, is bound to become a source of joy to all who have eyes to see and brains to perceive. What is this language to convey? Those of us who are demanding the best photodramas that the mind of man can create hope that what is conveyed may throw luminous daylight upon those false and misleading conceptions which Mr. Verkoff warns authors to avoid.

Coste, French scientist, says in "Dieu Et L'Ame": "False ideas in a healthy brain which has no opportunity to correct them are responsible for most of the fanatical and foolish blights of crime and insanity from which we suffer." We do not want authors "of blurred vision," but those capable of correct deductions from human experience—that means truth. Behind every screen story of significance is a conclusion whose truth or falsity depends largely upon the author's amount of knowledge and ability to reason correctly. He can not be expected to offer anything of value if his idea of living is restricted to self-preservation and reproduction. There are too many like that in the business already.

To eat, sleep, button and unbutton in security for the rest of his life and then expect to sing tenor in "The Choir Invisible" may do for the individual who is self-centered and incapable of even passive sympathy for his kind, but the author who expects to flame across contemporary consciousness must be made of finer material. He must dare assert his individuality in terms of no equivocation and walk the path of democracy, be an uncompromising plebian of the soul.

I do not mean that the author need disregard the commercial value of his labor. The fact that making money is the mainspring of action need deter no one from giving the world his best, for it is a commonplace and entirely intelligible fact that the best-paying features have been those loaded with an armor-piercing idea and not those fired with blank cartridges simply to make a loud noise in imitation of an idea. The day of the author is near at hand, and it is up to his sincerity and to his determination of purpose to make millions understand that moving pictures are becoming the pigments of minds artistic, that they are offering an outlet for artistic sensibilities in combination with virile intellectuality. The whole amazing drama of variegated human existence may be comprehended within their scope.

Some story writers go to Alaska for backgrounds and others to the South Seas. They are like novelists who lay their scenes in ancient history, seeking the shelter of unknown conditions, but your real genius dares criticize human life as we all know it, the present phases of our spiritual and cultural evolution. Our existence is replete with dramatic material; the transformations going on at this moment furnish both themes and settings; there is nothing richer in wonderful material than the character of man as we know him, as we laugh at him, as we pity him. Militancy and world-peace are on trial at this moment. Millions are concerned about what vitiates our social strata and many more millions are deeply interested in what may be done for its improvement. Moving pictures are a golden medium for the promulgation of modern and advanced ideas.

For National Censorship

Some X-Rays on an Interesting Situation—The Forces Behind the Censorship Bills in Washington—Intervews With Senator Hoke Smith and Congressman Dudley M. Hughes —A Great Opportunity for the Motion Picture Interests.

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE fifth of May has been designated as the day for a further hearing on what has become known as the Smith-Hughes National Censorship bill. The hearing will take place in room 510 of the building where the various House Committees have their offices. Room 510 is the meeting place of the House Committee on Education to which this bill has been referred. I earnestly hope that moving picture interests will be suitably represented upon this hearing. The committee, of which Hon. Dudley M. Hughes, of Georgia, is the chairman, is most anxious to hear from moving picture interests, but they do not intend to send out invitations to individuals or corporations directly. They take it for granted that the men interested in the welfare of the industry read either the daily press or the Moving Picture World or both. The members of the committee reason further that producers, distributors or exhibitors having received public notice, will be sufficiently interested to appear before them. In the absence of such representation the committee assumes that the men interested have decided to let the matter go by default and the committee will act accordingly.

I am urging a suitable representation of motion picture interests before the committee, not because I believe that there is any real danger of the Smith-Hughes bill becoming a law during this session of Congress. Even if the conflict with Mexico had not come and overshadowed every other issue before our National Legislature, the chances would have been all against the bill becoming a law. There is the President's program, particularly the anti-trust legislation, there is the matter of appropriations, all of which would have crowded out any but the most vital numbers on the legislative program. Indeed, I may go one step further and say that the legislators who have introduced these bills would probably never make any move of their own accord to have them enacted into laws. Senator Hoke Smith, of Georgia, is outspoken in his unfriendly attitude toward the measure, while Representative Hughes declares that he is in no way committed to the passage of the bill. The United States Commissioner of Education, Dr. D. P. Caxton, who is to exercise certain functions under the bill, is far from enthusiastic in favor of its passage and intimates that he considers censorship as a political expedient of doubtful value.

With these facts clearly established it might be asked why a proper representation of motion picture interests at the coming session of the Committee on Education is advisable. It is advisable for two reasons. In the first place the advocates of this censorship are anxious to have the hearings heretofore had before the committee printed at the expense of the government and then spread broadcast all over the country. As only the advocates of this bill have been heard before the committee and as the committee desires to be fair to both sides, it has held off the printing of the arguments advanced at previous hearings. If the motion picture interests desire to have their views on censorship made known to the people of the country, this hearing will give them the wished for opportunity. Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, the superintendent of the International Reform Association, who drafted this censorship bill himself, and Canon Chase, of Brooklyn, have declared to the members of the House Committee on Education that the producers were in favor of the bills. The members of the committee have no means of knowing to what extent the motion picture interests have authorized Mr. Crafts and Canon Chase to speak for them and they are today under the impression that the producers are in favor of these bills. It is perhaps somewhat presumptuous on the part of Mr. Crafts and Canon Chase to make such declarations before the committee, but until they are properly rebutted by the moving picture interests themselves, the erroneous impression produced on the members of the committee will continue. It certainly would be deplorable to have Uncle Sam print and largely distribute a special plea made by advocates of official National Censorship. It would be a one-sided document and a mighty weapon in the hands of self-constituted reformers from one end of the country to the other.

In the second place a strong and suitable representation of the motion picture interests ought to be part of the committee meeting on the fifth of May because this is the right moment for administering ounces of prevention. Later it may cost considerable time and money to engage in the more difficult task of curing.

The Man Behind the Bill.

It may as well be understood that the forces behind this bill are extremely active. They have so far had the field all to themselves and by dint of persistent and methodical agitation they have succeeded in creating a sentiment and an atmosphere in favor of their pet measures. If this state of affairs is allowed to continue, Mr. Crafts and the forces behind him will write their own notions on the subject of censoring and regulating motion pictures into the Federal statute books. This is no new field to them. They and they alone, are responsible for the law which forbids the transportation of a prize fight film from one state into another. There is no decent sentiment within the ranks of the industry nor indeed in the community at large which does not heartily approve of this particular piece of legislation, however questionable its constitutionality may be. Mr. Crafts asked incessantly for the passage of this bill. It is no easy thing to get an act through both Houses of Congress and obtain the approval of the members. It requires a trained campaigner. Mr. Crafts is a trained campaigner and the methods which have enabled him to place the law against the prize fight film on Uncle Sam's digest of laws, will be successful in passing the present censorship bills. Mr. Crafts never tires. It would take more space than I have at my command in this article to describe in detail his effective method of campaign. He selected a senator and a congressman from the same state, Georgia, to introduce the bills. He then went into Georgia, lectured to many Georgia constituents on the necessity of these bills and spoke before organizations specially interested in child welfare. Wherever he went he converted many people to his way of thinking and had no trouble in inducing them to write to their representatives in the national halls of legislation. He followed this up by disseminating all through the state of Georgia and, indeed, in some measure all through the United States, considerable quantities of literature asking co-operation for the establishment of federal censorship of motion pictures. Here is a sample of the literature sent out:

A Federal Motion Picture Commission Proposed.

A bill known as the Smith-Hughes bill, introduced in the Senate (S. 4941) by Senator Hoke Smith and in the House (H. R. 14895) by Congressman Dudley M. Hughes, both of Georgia, proposes a new division in the United States Bureau of Education to be called the Federal Motion Picture Commission.

It will consist of three or five commissioners, with a large number of deputy commissioners, to whom all films will be submitted that are to pass in interstate commerce or to be exhibited in the District of Columbia or in any of the territories, or the Canal Zone, or any place under the jurisdiction of the United States government. The unique part of the situation is that the films come to Washington for copyright, and under this law they would have to go first to the commission, and if disapproved there they could not secure a copyright, just as a copyright is refused for a book or a picture that has been condemned by the courts.

The failure of the unofficial "National Board of Censors" in New York to give satisfaction is shown in the fact that four State boards have been organized, and many local boards have rejected many of the pictures approved by this unofficial board, which is altogether too closely connected with the film manufacturers to exercise an unbiased judgment.

The picture men, seeing the great number of censorship boards springing up all over the country, are themselves now favoring a National Board on the theory that one censorship is vastly better for them than a multitude, and for once, the money interests and the moralists are advocating the same bill. There will be opposition, however, from those film makers and exhibitors who cater to the baser elements, and a strong, swift support of this bill will be needed to carry it through before the close of the session.

It is in the hands of the Committee on Education in the House and the Committee on Education and Labor in the Senate, the chairmen of which are the sponsors for the bill.

A very favorable hearing on the bill was held on the morning of March 20th before the House Committee, at which arguments in its favor were presented by Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts, superintendent of the International Reform Bureau, and by Rev. Henry N. Pringle, assistant superintendent, and Rev. Wm. Sheafe Chase of Brooklyn, who is probably better informed on the subject of moving pictures than any other man outside of the business, and he is the chief champion of an official censorship.

No other moral measure before Congress has so good a chance to pass as this, and few, if any others, are adapted to meet so urgent a demand and need.

Another appeal sent out on the stationery of the "International Reform Bureau, Inc.," is the following:

We ask your co-operation to secure the Smith-Hughes bill . . . establishing a federal censorship of motion pictures, in view of facts below and others:

1. The 62d Congress enacted a law forbidding interstate shipment of motion pictures of prize fights.

2. The 63d Congress, in the tariff bill, gave the Secretary of the Treasury censorship of imported motion pictures.

3. A nation-wide demand for more censorship is seen in that Pennsylvania, Ohio, Kansas, and California have official State censor boards and San Francisco and many other cities official local censors. Manifestly it is fairer to moving picture makers and exhibitors whose films go all over the country, to have one adequate national censorship, as it is also more satisfactory to those seeking to guard moral interests. Some motion picture promoters as well as most advocates of censorship approve the establishment of an official national board. Supervision by the U. S. Bureau of Education will give dignity to motion pictures as an educational agency when rightly used. The unofficial "National Board of Censorship of Moving Pictures" in New York City has no power to compel submission of films for censorship and therefore does not have opportunity to censor all films, nor does it have facilities for thorough censoring, and consequently many films that it has passed have been rejected by official State and local censors.

4. There is precedent for withholding copyright from films condemned by the National Commission in that the law now provides for the refusal of copyright to productions previously condemned by the courts.

5. An example of many official testimonies as to the harmfulness of uncensored or inadequately censored films, which are seen by five millions of people daily, one-fourth of them children, is the following statement of Judge Edward Swan in the New York World of March 15, 1914: "I have had a great many young people of both sexes tell me that they got their first suggestion to commit crime from scenes portrayed in motion pictures."

6. The cost of this federal censorship is provided for by a small fee or tax on each film.

Respectfully,

WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

The International Reform Bureau, Inc., has for its president the Rev. W. R. Wedderspoon, D. D.; Secretary, Rev. Donald C. Macleod, D.D.; Auditor, Mr. B. B. Bassette, New Britain, Conn.; Assistant Auditor, Mr. F. S. Ray, Washington, D. C., and Honorary Missionary Secretary, Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts. Mr. Crafts was not in Washington when I called at the headquarters, No. 206 Pennsylvania Avenue S. E. I was received by Mrs. Crafts, a lady well known in connection with moral and social reforms, and evidently a woman of great culture and refinement. Mrs. Crafts declared that she was in thorough sympathy with her husband's work. She told me that her husband was lecturing before schools and churches in Arkansas, Louisiana and Texas advocating the adoption of the National Censorship bill and meeting with much encouragement. He is urging his hearers everywhere to write to their representatives in Congress and to urge their support of the national censorship bill.

The Fatal Error in Mr. Crafts' Assumption.

It will be seen that Mr. Crafts, author and advocate of the bill, takes it for granted that federal censorship would supersede all other censorship of whatever kind. This is far from being a fact. On the contrary, both Senator Smith, of Georgia, Congressman Hughes, of Georgia, and Dr. D. P. Caxton, of Tenessee, and generally legislators are quite emphatic in their belief that national censorship of the variety proposed by Mr. Crafts will not hinder any individual state from establishing a censorship of its own. All admit that the state would have concurrent jurisdiction with the national authority. Herein, lies not only the fatal error in Mr. Crafts' reasoning, but the positive danger to the motion picture interests. If federal censorship were possible and the proposed measures would be enacted into laws, the motion picture interests would have to satisfy not only the vagaries of state censorship, but would be in addition subjected to national censorship. The prospect staggers the imagination. After having been treated by all these various boards and institutions, the moving picture films would be in a pitiable state. As moving pictures are, practically without exception, objects of interstate commerce, the federal censorship which bases its jurisdiction on the interstate commerce clause of the Federal Constitution, would have to be satisfied first and it is entirely possible and even probable that the moving picture film would have to be passed by the national board, then by a state board and finally by some minor municipal or county board. To sketch the picture is enough, it need not be finished.

A tremendous machinery would have to be created to carry out the provisions of the censorship law proposed by Mr. Crafts. The present weekly output is not far from 150 reels. What with excisions and alterations and prohibitions a large corps of experts will have to be hired, not only to examine films, but to keep records and hear complaints, etc.

Where Senator Smith and Congressman Hughes Stand.

Congressman Dudley M. Hughes, who hails from Georgia, is the chairman of the House Committee on Education. He is an attractive type of the Southern gentleman of the old school and a man evidently familiar with public affairs. Mr. Dudley introduced the bill in the house by request. He is the very antithesis of the professional reformer and has old-fashioned Democratic ideals of fair play and an even chance. He has taken much for granted of what Mr. Crafts told him, but his mind is entirely open and his disposition entirely impartial. He is anxious to hear from the moving picture interests on this proposed measure of national censorship. While I was talking with him a telegram arrived from New York signed by W. N. Seligsberg, the attorney for the Mutual Film Corporation, asking for a postponement of the hearing which originally had been set for April 27th. The telegram was answered at once granting the request for a postponement and fixing May 5th as the date of the hearing. By the way, the Mutual Company seems to be the only concern which has asked for a chance to appear before the committee.

Mr. Huges listened with great interest and attention to such information as I was able to give him in response to his many questions and then proclaimed himself a "crank on motion pictures."

"Why," said he with a smile of pleased recollection, "there is hardly a night I do not go to the motion pictures. I just love them. As a form of entertainment I prefer them to everything else. I would rather go to the pictures than to the opera. Now I generally go to the same two places here in the city of Washington and I certainly have never seen a bad picture in either of them. One night recently I went to another theater in a different section of the city and I saw nothing wrong there either. I would not hesitate to take my family there and I am only sorry we have not got a theater in my little home town in Georgia. It's a small town, about five hundred inhabitants, but I think a picture house there would pay. There are so many things in the motion picture that give one valuable information and a lot of education that one could not get in any other way. Now, in regard to this bill that I introduced and that you are asking me about, I am not committed absolutely. I have heard it said that you moving picture people would not object to such a bill. Well, I want nothing extreme, nothing illiberal. I think that if pictures were censored by a high class commission under the authority of the Federal Government it might induce the parents of a good many children to send them to the picture shows, while at the present time many of the religious-minded people still have a prejudice against the pictures and would not let their children go under any circumstances."

"Do you think, Mr. Hughes," I asked, "that this national censorship would do away with all other kinds of censorship all through the country?"

Mr. Hughes poised his pencil thoughtfully for a while and then replied:

"Well, I scarcely think so. The states could have their own censorship concurrently with the federal censorship. I will say, however, that the prestige of a high-class national commission appointed by the president would in all probability be accepted by the public. There might not be much other censorship left after a while. The trouble is with some of these fellows who show pictures like the 'White Slave' films. They were not allowed to be shown in Washington and I am glad of that. I wish you would make it plain in the Moving Picture World that the committee on education in the House is most anxious to hear from the film people. We would like to have some of them here on May fifth."

Senator Hoke Smith, of Georgia, who stands high in the favor of the present administration and who was a member of the second Cleveland Cabinet, was on the floor of the Senate following the debate on the President's "War Resolution," when I sent in my card with one of the attendants. The senator was a very busy man and it looked doubtful whether he could be coaxed away from his desk even for a minute. Indeed for a while nobody could be found with hardihood enough to present the card. Luckily I made the acquaintance of a bright young page whose interest was enlisted the moment he heard that I had something to do with motion pictures. Patience and diplomacy won out and the senator came into the reception room after a long wait.

"Senator," I began, after a brief exchange of courtesies, "we motion picture people are greatly interested in the bill providing for national censorship. You have introduced the bill and—"

"I introduced the bill by request," interrupted the senator. "Bear that in mind—by request. Now I tell you that I have not even read the bill and I have not given it a thought."

I told the senator that there was much doubt in motion picture circles as to whether Congress had any legal right to deal with the subject of censoring motion pictures.

"Now you may be quite right about that," replied the senator. "It may be a matter for the states. I am not at all saying that Congress has such a right and what is more I am not at all sure whether I would vote for the bill if it ever reached that stage in the Senate. I tell you again that I have not even read the bill."

"Will you have early hearings on the bill?" I asked.

"We will do nothing whatever with it," responded the senator, "until the House has taken some action. Nobody can tell when that will come."

The senator declined to commit himself further and presently messengers appeared to call him back to the Senatorial chamber where the debate was still raging plainly audible in the reception room. The senator was courteous to the last, declaring that he would be in better position to speak on the bill after he had made himself acquainted with its provisions.

The United States Commissioner of Education.

The bills conceived and written by Mr. Crafts provide (Section 14) "that the commission shall annually . . . submit a written report to the United States Commissioner of Education."

The United States Commissioner of Education herein referred to is Dr. D. P. Claxton. Dr. Claxton said he had been asked to give some advice in the matter of drafting the bill, which was afterward introduced into the Senate. Dr. Claxton declared that the bill was not his, but Crafts'.

"I am not sure whether such a bill really would serve the purposes for which it was intended. As an American and a believer in Democracy I believe, of course, in the utmost freedom of expression. Like books or newspapers the pictures serve a very fine purpose, they are educational and it might be an unwise thing to attempt any drastic regulation. Nowhere is the importance of the motion picture as a medium of reaching the human mind appreciated more thoroughly than right here in this office. Only a short time ago we received four inquiries in one day, all relating to educational motion pictures. Of course the state has and always has had the right to regulate the stage and it may be that purely dramatic films ought to be subject to governmental action, but the educational picture ought to be exempt. I do not think there is much danger that a censor will ever refuse his assent to the display of an educational picture, but then such a thing is possible and it might be the entering wedge to an abuse of power. I have reached no definite conclusion in my own mind as to whether the present evils will justify a censorship of motion pictures. The cure might be worse than the disease. Personally I have given much thought to the motion picture and I would be glad of an opportunity to serve it and put it on the highest plane possible. The thing that impresses me most about the motion picture is its universal appeal. You can reach the whole world with the motion picture while with the book or newspaper you can only reach a certain portion. Where you can get one man to read a book you can get a thousand men to look at a picture. I should think that any educational propaganda that can get the motion picture men as allies would be assured of success."

The Status of the Bills.

The bills in House and Senate are substantially the same. There has been a slight change in the text of the House bill, the examination fee for each film being reduced from three dollars to one dollar. There is no mention of any definite appropriation in the House bill, which is now in the hands of the Committee on Education. Only one hearing has been held. Whether or not the bill in the House will be reported out of the committee before the date of the adjournment of the present session of the Sixty-third Congress may be doubted. The present session may adjourn in October and it may adjourn before or after that date. The Sixty-third Congress will not expire until March, 1915, and if the bill is reported out of committee before the adjournment of the present session such action will count for any part of the Sixty-third Congress in the present year or in the first sixty days of the next year. If the bill is reported out of the House Committee it will take its regular course on the legislative calendar. Unless advanced by special resolution it will hardly be placed upon its final passage in the present Congress. If it should pass the House it will have to encounter opposition in the Senate. Amendments are sure to send it back to the House and joint conferences will mean further delay. It seems at this writing a moral certainty that the bill cannot become a law during the life of the Sixty-third Congress.

In the meantime let us remember that the next meeting of the House Committee of Education will occur on May 5th and that the sole program before the committee on that day will be the hearing and considering of arguments on the National Censorship bills.

BRUCE McRAE TO FAMOUS PLAYERS.

Among Bruce McRae's recent stage triumphs are numbered "The Lily," "Nobody's Widow" and "Nearly Married." Through an odd coincidence, as in the case of James K. Hackett and Cecilia Loftus, previous Famous Players stars, Mr. McRae began his stage career with Daniel Frohman, to whose management he now returns for his first appearance in motion pictures.

"Escaped from Siberia"

Stirring Story of Russian Life Offered by the Great Players Feature Film Corporation—A Five-Part Feature.

THERE is another strong document in Humanity's fight against Russian opression in the five-part photoplay being offered to state right purchasers by the Great Players Film Corporation under the title "Escaped From Siberia." As such it will have a strong appeal to all who are interested in that conflict and especially to those who have felt the heavy hand of the Czar, of which class there are many thousands in this country. As a picture play it possesses much interest aside from the peculiar value mentioned. There are bits of Russian life admirably depicted by competent players that are commendable for their faithfulness in matters of detail.

Scene from "Escaped From Siberia" (Great Players).

As for the story there is, no doubt, ample ground upon which to base all its incidents. It is not surprising that the young Russian count, Boris, should be disgraced and stripped of his military rank by his own father when he announces his love for a Jewish maiden. That the irate father should condemn the girl and her parents to Siberia unheard, because of his son's infatuation is not beyond belief after all, the stories of Russian atrocity that have become known truths. The escape from Siberia and the subsequent landing in New York under the shadow of the Statue of Liberty, are scenes that have the strongest appeal to those who best know what it all means.

The decision made by Count Boris to join a band of nihilists headed by the brother of the girl with whom he was in love is a bit unusual, yet not without precedent. It is his attitude of deep respect and then love for the little helpless Jewess who, under most circumstances of a similar nature, would have become the victim, creates a sympathetic interest in the young nobleman from the first, and he seems to merit our sympathy all through the picture because of his considerate treatment of all who are victims of oppression.

The types and costuming are excellent and the photography is better than average. There is plenty of action throughout the five reels to hold interest and a considerable thrill in the scenes of the burning of the palace and the assassination of the Czar's Minister at the Embassy Ball. This subject will be disposed of on the state rights plan.

GOLDFISH ON WESTERN TRIP.

Samuel Goldfish, executive head of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, left Monday, April 27, for a four weeks' visit to that company's studios at Hollywood, Cal. Mr. Goldfish will spend two weeks at the studios in Hollywood, and two weeks in transit.

The visit of the general manager to the Coast studios is more in the form of a social call, although Mr. Goldfish will probably make an executive inspection of the plant and watch the progress of the players in the making of "The Virginian" and "The Only Son," which are now in the making, with Dustin Farnum and Tommy Ross, respectively, in the leading roles. It is Mr. Goldfish's first trip west of the Rocky Mountains.

"Neptune's Daughter"

Universal's Seven-Reel Subject Featuring Annette Kellermann a Strong and Beautiful Picture.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THERE is something new on the screen. It is a marine fantasy, an interweaving of the real and the mythical, a craftsmanlike blending of the spectacular, of the sensational, of the dramatic, and above all of the pictorial. "Neptune's Daughter," the seven-reel production of the Universal Company now showing at the Globe Theater in this city, takes us far out of beaten paths. It was photographed under the brilliant sun and in the clear atmosphere of Bermuda—in gardens framed by the hand of man and in primitive wood, on beach and on cliff, in ocean waters above the earth and in stalactite-mirroring caved pools beneath it.

The story comes from the pen of Captain Leslie T. Peacocke, of the Universal staff. It is written around the superb figure of Annette Kellermann, the famous diver and swimmer, artistic and accomplished dancer, and also, it is fair to add, acceptable actress. Captain Peacocke is not content to rest his plot upon the aquatic or terpsichorean skill of his chief subject. He goes further and tells a story that is independent of her and doubly strong by reason of that fact.

Producer Herbert Brenon surrounds Miss Kellermann with a strong cast. Nearly all the players are members of Mr. Brenon's Imp Company. William E. Shay is King William, William Welsh is King Neptune, Leah Baird is Princess Olga, Mrs. Allen Walker is the Sea Witch and Mr. Brenon is Roador the Wolf. Edward Mortimer is Duke Boris, Lewis Hooper is Count Rudolph and Millie Liston is the jailer's mother. And there is wonderful little Katherine Lee, the mite who plays Angela, the mermaid sister of Annette, who by her portrayal centers upon herself the chief interest in the first quarter of the story.

The locale is in King Neptune's realm and in King William's. The action has to do with the ruler of the water and his subjects and with the ruler of the land and his dependents. It is through Annette, the daughter of Neptune, that the two divisions of the tale cross. When Angela is caught in the fishermen's nets and meets her death, Annette swears vengeance. The Sea Witch gives her a charm by means of which she is transformed into a mortal. In this state she meets the king incognito and falls in love with him. When she receives an invitation to dance at the king's ball she goes prepared to carry out her oath. She learns the identity of her lover and realizes she cannot fulfill her mission; she returns to the waters as mermaid. Not for long, however. To see the man she loves she again makes use of the charm and returns to the society of mortals, this time to stay.

There is a wealth of incident in "Neptune's Daughter." The story of intrigue at court is convincing and well portrayed. The transition of Annette from the dominions of Father Neptune to the world of mortals and vice versa is so skillfully treated that it seems the perfectly natural course of events. Right at the beginning of the story we see the mermaids on the beach. Off at a distance old Father Neptune suddenly appears in a little coral ring, his trident in one hand and horn in the other, and sounds the recall. The mermaids wriggle into the water and swim out to him, little Angela with her arms about Annette's neck. There are many of these views of the sea.

On the dramatic side are the pathetic death of Angela, her discovery by Annette and the bearing of the limp-armed little body to grave Neptune; the farewell of Annette and Neptune, and the recognition by Annette of her lover in the king she is about to slay, the supreme moment of the story. Of other strong situations there are many—the revolt of the fishermen and then the guards; the imprisonment of Annette, her subsequent binding hand and foot and hurling into the ocean from the top of a cliff and her successful struggles to free herself; the combat between Roador and Scene from "Neptune's Daughter" (Universal).

Annette, the sensational fall from the cliff of the two in deadly struggle and the battle under the water in which Roador is drowned; the spectacular sword fight between the king and Annette on one side and Boris and Rudolph on the other.

It is in the pictorial quality, however, that lies the factor that will bring to "Neptune's Daughter" its greatest houses and its longevity, for beyond question it is a picture that will live. Let us ignore the marvelous views of the great Crystal Cave, with its weird stalactites reflected in the glassy waters of this underground pool, and for the illumination of which

Crystal Cave, Bermuda, in "Neptune's Daughter."

Electrician O'Donnel installed lamps and ran a four-mile-long supply wire. Nor will we make extended reference to the scenes of the story enacted here. What cannot be overlooked is the "Dance of the Morning Glories." Annette is a veritable elf as she lightly and swiftly glides about the clearing, the sun's rays striking through the trees and falling upon the troop of amazed little girls circling about her. No wonder the king, looking on from a distance, falls in love with her.

There is one other scene that particularly will live in the memory. Annette, a mortal, feels the lure of the water. Behind a bush in the forest she discards her peasant dress. Out darts a white-tighted figure. From a vegetation-faced cliff over an inland bit of still water Annette performs the evolutions that have thrilled her audiences in settings far different. Over the top of the edge on the second side of the walled water peer the same group of wonder-eyed little girls. Annette eventually discovers the presence of the "peeping Toms," as the sub-title describes them, and chases them away into the woods.

A striking picture is the meeting of the king in his peasant garb and Annette by the tree in the shady wood. Another is where the just transformed mermaid comes to the palace of the king and discovers him in danger from the misled people. Behind her is a bank of foliage, but in the center background is a circular natural window through which can be seen in the great distance the rays of the sun reflected on the dancing waves.

Why continue to enumerate? For there are many other scenes worthy of mention, the dancing of Annette at the king's ball, for instance, or the view of the soldiers drawn up in front of the king's palace. Real soldiers they are, and they look it; the great structure behind them is Government House.

Mr. Shay is excellent as the king; by his work in this picture he will materially add to the extending number of his admirers. So, too, will Mr. Welsh as grave old Father Neptune. Miss Baird was queenly as Olga. As the mermaid she deserves credit for her spunk, as she is not a swimmer. Mr. Brenon has a right to more than ordinary congratulation for his success in "Neptune's Daughter," for to the making of it he gave much of his blood as his company gave much of its treasure. It was in enacting the spectacular and thrilling under-water tragedy with Miss Kellermann that he met such severe injuries through the breaking of the glass side of a great tank.

The writer witnessed the first exhibition of "Neptune's Daughter" to the public, on the afternoon of Saturday, April 25. The photography is notable, and he is bound to add the projection matches it. The Universal has not made the mistake of suspending the operating booth from the ceiling. Seating space was sacrificed in the balcony; the result is a nearly flat throw and a rock-steady one

ELLA HALL.

IT is natural to suppose that the film children of today will be the film stars of tomorrow. Ella Hall, who for the past six months has been playing ingenue leads in the Rex Company, of which Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley are co-directors, is just betwixt and between. She is sixteen years old and she can still play the parts of a woman or a child. She has been upon the stage or in pictures since she was a very little girl, but a glance at her career shows that she is progressing and consistently working toward greater things. In each picture which she appears she shows to better advantage and each time she is given a better part.

Ella Hall.

She looks upon Lois Weber as the mother of art and parent of her success, because she has grown under the direction of Miss Weber to a realization of the deeper meaning of the actor's art.

Miss Hall has been seen in practically every production of the Smalleys during the past six months and recently she played the lead in "A Modern Fairy Tale," produced by the Rex company. She also played leading ingenue roles in the Smalleys' production of "Memories" and "The Female of the Species."

Ella Hall was chosen by David Belasco to play a principal part in the production of "The Grand Army Man." This was her first stage experience. She understudied Mary Pickford in "The Warrens of Virginia," and following this engagement appeared with Isabel Irving in "The Girl Who Has Everything." While playing with Mabel Taliferro, Miss Taliferro suggested to her that in motion picture was the great opportunity for her.

Shortly after this she began her career in pictures. She first worked under the direction of David Griffith with the Biograph for two years. For one year she was with the Reliance under James Kirkwood and before joining the Universal forces she played in Bison dramas under the direction of Fred J. Balshofer.

JEANNETTE GILDER WRITES FOR JOAN SAWYER.

Joan Sawyer is to appear in a photoplay written for her by Jeannette L. Gilder. The play is founded upon incidents in the professional career of Miss Sawyer and is said to be one of great interest. Miss Gilder is the sister of the late Richard Watson Gilder and a woman of exceptional literary talents.

"The Brute"

Malcolm Williams Appears in an Interesting and Well-Put-On Four-Part Famous Players Subject.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE Famous Players released on April 27 "The Brute," a four-part adaptation of the story by Frederic Arnold Kummer. Malcolm Williams plays the title role. The picture will interest all the way. It is well put on and well photographed. The story is filled with human touches, the sort that will be better appreciated by men and women who have received a few knocks in the battle of life. As the story works out the appellation of The Brute to Donald Rogers seems more than severe. Certainly the man is not a brute, if we except his behavior when he learns that between his wife and the man who at his death had left her his money there had been at one time an elopement planned. Most men and perhaps a few women will be inclined to allow a husband a certain amount of freedom on an occasion like this. Rogers wins his wife through the departure for the mining country of Billy West, her sweetheart. It is the old story of all chances favoring the man who is on the ground and, in the vernacular, "on the job." Rogers is not particularly successful in business; neither does he fail. He simply does not make progress rapidly. When West comes home a few years later, having become rich, he is taken into the home by Rogers. The old flame is renewed; West forgets his friendship of the old days for Rogers, even as Rogers in the old days had forgotten his for West when he proceeded to cut him out. Before West's departure for his new home he kisses Mrs. Rogers; she reciprocates. Just to prove the fact that both mean it the operation is immediately repeated. That is the limit of the culpability.

Not long afterward West undergoes an operation for appendicitis. It is not successful. Before he dies he makes a will in favor of Mrs. Rogers. There is a momentary objection on the part of Rogers to his wife taking the money, but he waives it. Later when a friend comes East he is told by Rogers in accounting for the evident luxury that his wife has had money left her by a relative. In the course of the conversation West's name comes up. Rogers is told that it was reported in the West that he had left his money to a married woman in New York with whom he had intended to elope. It is right here that things happen. Rogers takes his child and goes back to his old humble home. The wife fights it out with herself and sends for Rogers. Then she tells him of the letter she had written West declaring she would not leave her husband and child. She pleads with Rogers. "I love you," she tells him. "That means more than all the money in the world." That ends the matter. The fortune goes back to the lawyer, causing the remark that it is the first time anyone has ever sent money back to him.

The story opens with vim. The second scene is of a fashionable restaurant. There is another setting a little later, at which we see some of the interesting phases of human nature that crop out in such surroundings. There are quite a number of New York views, of city blocks and of parks.

There is one bit of dialogue between West and Mrs. Rogers, seated on a rustic bench. West starts to kiss the hand of his companion. He collides with a wedding ring. Every ounce of that situation is brought out. At another time, after the departure of West, Mrs. Rogers is thinking of the day in the restaurant when West kissed her, the scene being repeated in double exposure. It is just at that moment that her husband enters and embraces her. Her manifest annoyance is easily comprehended. Offsetting this, after the wife has fought out her battle with herself, she is seen kissing the photograph of her husband. He enters at the moment, sees her and returns the compliment. His reception is quite different. There are many of these touches that appeal.

Mr. Williams does well as Rogers, although his unacquaintance with the camera is apparent. He has plainly been accustomed to looking at his audience, and he was measurably handicapped in seeking a point where he might safely rest his eyes. House Peters as West was in his own superior form. Mr. Peters always makes his presence felt in any scene of which he may be a part. In "The Brute" he is one of the big factors. Helen Hilton as Mrs. Rogers is strong—she gives a fine performance. Mme. Dahlberg as the mother-in-law, always ambitious, is delightful; she furnishes the only bit of comedy. but it is most natural and unforced. Mary Moore is Alice Pope, the sister, and William Vaughn is Emerson Hall. It is a good cast and a good story.

"Captain Alvarez"

Five-Reel Vitagraph Feature.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A DRAMA of South American revolution, "Captain Alvarez" is that of a tyrannical president, Rosas, hated for attempting to quell a revolution under a popular leader. A large part of the action takes place in and around the home of Don Arana, attached to the Federal cause, though his niece, Bonita, is in sympathy with the revolutionists.

Arch villain is Tirzo, the spy, who stands so well with Don Arana that the latter favors Tirzo's suit for Bonita's hand. Tirzo is an active, determined and ever-present villain, one of the good old kind, and the role is admirably sustained by George Holt. He is bold and strong, one of the strongest resources of a cowardly and villainous president, very much of a man except in the character of service he renders, and the only possible foil to such a hero as soon comes on the scene to fall in love with Bonita and complete the eternal triangle.

Scene from "Captain Alvarez" (Vitagraph).

The hero is certainly a corker. We do not learn from the sub-titles of his heroic acts, we see him in the midst of enough reckless exploits to satisfy the most ardent lover of adventures on the screen. He is a magnificent rider, and, quite in the natural course of things, he is a Yankee, plain Robert Wainwright at first, and dashing Captain Alvarez when in military action. He is in South America on business and joins the revolutionists, more or less as a soldier of fortune. His business interests take him to the house of Bonita's uncle, but he is suspected by the spy and given a wild horse, Mephisto, to ride. He conquers the animal before our very eyes, and, at the same time, makes a deep impression on fascinating Bonita.

Wainwright is compelled to leave the country, and is seen by Gonzalo, chief of police, sailing away, but he drops from the ship and swims ashore and secretly meets Bonita, who has been led to believe that he is in cowardly retreat. She gives him Mephisto to enable him to join the revolutionists and take part in a plan to secure a hoard of Federal money deposited at the house of Don Arana. He now follows a series of adventures which lead to his arrest and imprisonment, but he escapes on Mephisto and rides across a narrow foot bridge at full speed, one of the most spectacular feats ever shown on the screen.

Through lively incidents of love, war and intrigue, Bonita and her companion play parts of decided activity, and the parts are well cast. Edith Storey seems to be more in her element as an outdoor girl, which she was in the Melies dramas before she became associated with the Vitagraph Company. Myrtle Gonzalez responds with intelligence to the limited requirements of her role. The men, besides William Taylor in the lead, are exceptional types—admirably chosen and thoroughly capable interpreters of their roles. Director Sturgeon has done well with his company and his settings.

"The Lure of Millions"

An Unusual Photoplay in a Philosophical Vein, But Full of Action. Four Parts. O. S. P. Co.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS feature has the rare merit of having a plot which is unique. It does not depend for its success on mere sensations, though sensations are by no means lacking. It delves deep beneath the surface of things and gets an unrelenting grip on the interest of every audience.

A man having lost his all at the gaming table contemplates suicide when he is approached by a millionaire who has tired of all the pleasures which money brings. The two men strike a strange bargain. The rich man promised to turn over all his wealth to the poor fellow and go out into the world to make his way as best he could. If he found happiness in work and the poor man found happiness in riches all would be well. If, however, either party to the compact confessed failure and wanted to leave the world before his appointed time the other party must accompany him on his journey into the unknown. The rich man turned poor soon finds work and happiness. The poor man turned rich finds satisfaction in wealth. Fate, however, is hard to bargain with. Just on the eve of his marriage to a sweet young woman the rich man turned poor loses his arm in a fire. His fortunes decline rapidly and he despairs of life. He recalls the compact with his friend to whom he had turned over all his wealth. He goes in search of him to remind him of his bargain. As he has determined to end his life he wants the other party to the contract to do the same. He wanders from town to town and is unable to find any trace of his companion until he recognizes him in the person of a judge before whom he has been arraigned for vagrancy. The judge, happy and prosperous, is terror-stricken when he is reminded of the fatal compact which he had signed years ago. He weakens and decides to leave the country. The other party to the bargain pursues him with relentless persistence until both men die in a most sensational and terrifying way. Happily, it turns out to have been nothing more than a dream, from which the luckless gambler wakens at the end of the film, convinced that thoughts of suicide are foolish, and he can work out his salvation by engaging in honest toil.

The play is of that type which puts emphasis on incident, a very popular type with a large number of screen fans. Adventure that is active, plausible and not obviously faked, appeals to us in a way not to be defined in a word. There is a love of it among common people whose lives are humdrum. They possibly find relief from sure-thing drudgery i nthe swift and irresponsible train of circumstances which carry hero and heroine through many perils to a point of security where they may "live happy ever after."

"War Is Hell"

A Four-Part Colored Eclectic Subject With Fine Contrasts Between Strife and Peace.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

EVEN in these days of realistic war pictures this feature with its emphatic title stands out prominently among similar offerings. It has one great advantage over most of its rivals—it is handsomely colored. War being notoriously picturesque and spectacular, the element of color is vital and a portrayal of battles and military adventures in striking colors is an extraordinary attraction at all times.

In this feature enough is shown of the horrors of strife and carnage to justify its lurid title, but the glamour and glory of the tented field are by no means neglected. The film is full of the strange incidents of war and of episodes such as will be possible only in the war of the future. Of these latter the fight in the air and the destruction of a number of dirigible balloons is easily the most sensational.

The plot while not altogether new is strong and simple. It shows a young officer making war upon the nation of his sweetheart. The end of the story is sublime. The sweetheart learns through an accident that her lover has been killed in a desperate encounter, which is portrayed in flaming vividness. Though she has the offer of a new love sincere and devoted the young woman cannot reconcile herself to a new affection. At first peace in the waves beckons to her tempest-driven soul, but she thinks better of it and applies for admission to a sisterhood of nuns. The contrast between the quiet shades of the cloister where nuns pray in sweet contemplation and the hurly-burly of battle is most impressive and is shown on the film with uncommon dramatic power. The larger part of the last scenes is devoted to showing that the young sweetheart of the brave officer has entered into peace and resignation. The old monastery, the simple garb of the sisters, the pious devotions and the great peace that hovers over all are pictured on the screen with a skill and art which is rarely seen even in these days of quality.

Mark M. Dintenfass

This sketch is not about Mark M. Dintenfass, the film man, but it is about Mark M. Dintenfass, the Single Taxer. We all know, of course, that Mr. Dintenfass is the manager of the Universal's Coytesville studio, that he is in charge of the Universal's foreign department, and that he is secretary-treasurer of the New York Universal exchanges. Outside of his business interests, however, there is no question quite so near to the heart of Mr. Dintenfass as is the subject of single tax. It will be recalled that in the last municipal election in New York Cty he was chosen to represent the followers of the late Henry George as their candidate for mayor. So that pretty well demonstrates what his brother Single Taxers think of him. Mr. Dintenfass is in no way half-hearted or faint-hearted in this matter. He is a strong believer in the efficacy of the single tax as a remedy for many ills complained of at the present time, and loses no proper opportunity to further its propaganda.

Recently Frank Smith, librarian of the Screen Club, intimated to his fellow-members that in the library of the club were excellent bookcases, and that on the shelves of these there was room for more books. He even intimated this to Mr. Dintenfass. The sequel is the presentation by Mr. Dintenfass to the club of ten finely bound and printed books, the complete works of Henry George, from the press of Doubleday, Page and Co. In each volume Mr. Dintenfass has written a pithy sentence taken from the enclosed text. As an illustration, in one we find: "For the study of political economy you need no special knowledge, library, laboratory, text books of teachers—if you will but think for yourself." The hearty thanks extended by Mr. Smith to Mr. Dintenfass were in no way minimized by the fact that he himself is a student of the philosophy expounded by Mr. George.

"Through Dante's Flames"

An Excellent Ramo Production in Four Parts, Uncovering a Vein or Originality.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS strangely named production is a feature of the new type aiming at originality and utilizing the special advantages of the screen. Not a little of its inspiration must have come from careful study and from intimate knowledge of screen possibilities. It is titled, "Through Dante's Flames," and is made by the Ramo Company in four parts. I think the future belongs to features of this type. They are destined to supersede the work of mere adaptation. The direction of this film-play is singularly forceful and capable. All through the play are deft and subtle touches of the new screen art, to which the old single reel was an utter stranger. I cannot refrain from describing somewhat in detail one or two of these happy strokes, if only to make clearer my definition of the new art of building real features.

An artist is in search of a suitable model for a picture of the Madonna. Advertisements bring him no results. Still haunted by his longing to paint a Madonna he goes to a fashionable restaurant where they make an attraction of cabaret dancing. With a friend, the artist is seated at a table on a balcony looking down upon the performers. Among the latter is a young man going through the mazes of a modern dance. For a minute the dance halts—we have a closer view of the woman—we see her next leaving the floor for the platform, then we catch a glimpse of her passing through the folds of a curtain. Our interest being thus skilfully aroused, we see at very close range the head and bust of the young woman outlined against the deep black of the curtain—it is an unconscious pose, charmingly natural; though it stays upon the screen but a second or two the idea is flashed at once both into the mind of the spectator and the artist: here is the model for the Madonna. Neither the printed page nor the speaking stage nor, indeed, any art but the art of dramatic kinematography at its best has such power to delight and impress the human mind. Here is another example of this art. The action of the play shows how, through an accidental blow received at a moment of great nervous terror, a young woman was changed from a sweet, gentle and modest maiden into a bold and frivolous creature. The same young woman, who has undergone such mysterious transformation, is the one who poses for the model of the Madonna. She soon tires of the sittings, however, and accepts the invitation of an admirer to take a trip south. Just as our interest enters into a stage of suspense and we are watching the young woman making herself comfortable in the car, the glaring headlight of an engine appears in the center of the screen, seemingly rushing toward us, another moment and we see the smoking ruins of a fearful train wreck, with the girl painfully emerging from the scene of destruction—almost unharmed, but through the terrible shock changed back into her old better self and with no recollection whatever of the days of her recklessness.

All this may smack of sensationalism, but it is sensationalism reduced to a fine art and made acceptable to any audience.

Of the photography I cannot speak in terms other than superlative. The new school of features specializes in novel effects of light and shade and in extending the scope and intensifying the skill of the camera.

The work of Lois Howard is a fine effort of a capable and conscientious artiste. Her personality entered into the very soul of the story. "Will S. Davis proved himself a gifted actor in his portrayal of 'Joe Clark." Stuart Holmes essayed a double part as Richard Harris, the artist, and Joseph Harris, the minister. It was a daring and difficult task performed quite creditably.

The plot is intricate and, though not exactly diffuse, lacks the strength of simplicity.

The public may expect much fine quality from this producer, which is all the more gratifying because the producer is an American.

D'ANNUNZIO WRITING FOR ITALA.

The prediction freely made several years ago that the motion picture would one day attract the notice of dramatists of the highest intellectual eminence as a vehicle for their best constructive work, has been realized by the Itala Film Company, of Turin, Italy. This company, which is conceded to have made the earliest great motion picture ever exhibited, "The Fall of Troy," has made a further step in progress by intrusting the writing of the drama of "Cabiria" to Gabrielle D'Annunzio, who is admitted to be at the head of modern Italian men of letters and the embodiment of the national ideal in the fields of poetry, fiction and the drama. It is the common habit to term Signor D'Annunzio the "Italian Shakespeare," which, if excessive praise, is at least indicative of a feeling of respect for his intellectual output.

His writings are scholarly and realistic, it may be, to excess, judged by the standards of ordinary propriety. Although some of his works possibly are not those which might be prudently placed in the hands of the young and uninformed, he is always intellectual and reverent, even in his analysis of the lower human passions. It is as an intellectual analyst, after all, that this writer may be classed. With the authors previously mentioned he should be considered as a product of his epoch—a qualified exponent of the scientific method of treating life in the poetic, novelistic or dramatic form. It is to such a renowned scholar, therefore, that the Itala Film Company turned when arranging for the story of "Cabiria." The purpose of the company was to present the picture with absolute accuracy in respect of dates, costumes, scenes and characters. In other words, if we regard "Cabiria" as a piece of motion picture mythology, irrespective of its narrative or dramatic value, it is offered as entirely authoritative because the details are correct, are based upon authentic references.

WILLIAM PALEY WANTS A JOB.

William Paley, the veteran cameraman, who has recovered from the accident which happened to him more than two years ago and cost him his right foot and a long and painful illness, is again ready for business. He has secured a wooden substitute for the foot and leg that was amputated, and is able to get about quite spryly for an old war horse. Mr. Paley's address at present is 320 Patton Street, Los Angeles, Cal. Mr. Paley's long experience in camera work ought to fit him for almost any position in that line, though his present disability will probably have the effect of confining him to studio work. Here's a chance for some one to do a worthy deed in aid of a deserving veteran of the moving picture business

"Mother and Wife"

Edison One-Reel Drama—Released Through the General Film Company.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

Author and Director—Ben Wilson.

CAST

Mrs. Steel ..... Lettie Ford.
George, Her Son ..... Ben Wilson.
Marion, His Wife ..... Sally Crute.
Frank Reynolds ..... Edward Earle.

BEN WILSON is an actor; he is a good director; he is a much better author. He has written a story of strong interest for the screen, and has directed it fairly well, but his acting is acting, and not such a performance as one would expect from a man playing the lead in his own drama. Perhaps it is exactly that one should expect, but this story goes over by the creative force he exerted in its composition, and that is the main thing, after all.

Scene from "Mother and Wife" (Edison).

A very beautiful question is raised as to the meaning of love. George, alias Ben, is one of those lucky inventors we read about. He actually makes money out of the labor of his mind and does it early enough to enjoy it to the full. He has the sweetest mother, a lovely wife, and an affection for both that is without flaw. When he moves away from mother's old home to a new and more picturesque house, he takes mother along with them, in reckless disregard of tradition on this subject.

Mother settles down into her old ways, and one of these, a habit of taking a few puffs on an old clay pipe, shocks not only the butler and maidservant, but George's wife, as well. It is possibly a good thing that women are inclined to respect conventions that men often shatter from pure "cussedness"; anyway, Mrs. George strongly disapproves of the pipe-smoking, and other of mother's incurable peculiarities, and decides that she must be submerged. She sends her out of the reception room when company calls.

Company in this case is the other angle, Frank Reynolds, dress-suit villain, without whom French drama and its American derivatives might fall into the shocking habit of offering us something to which we were unaccustomed. When we go to the theater, just as when we sit down to the table, we want to know where we are. Wherever there is a pretty wife and a rich and generously unsuspecting husband, we know what to expect of the unattached gentleman in a dress suit. He is a lady killer, perfectly killing as a rule, and she, poor dear, is so susceptible to the dress suit, no matter whether he hired it or merely bought it.

Now the love of a young wife who wears all the best her husband can buy for her when she goes out to tango, and gives hubby what is left over of her charming consideration, lacks something that mother never withholds. All that self-denying woman can give of her sweetness and sympathy flows in abundance from a mother's heart and the spring never runs dry. When a man has such a mother, when he loves her as many do, does he ever love another woman with the same unchanging devotion?

Mr. Wilson raises the question and solves it too abruptly where there was opportunity for some exquisite revelations. Perhaps he was limited to one reel. The husband resents his wife's attitude when he finds that his mother has gone back to her old home, and he follows her. What comfort! What sweet content! The perfume of the passion rose that lasts for a moment is not there, but the subtler and more persistent fragrance of old rose leaves permeates the home, and there he stays.

The young wife enjoys the privilege of having one man shelter and provide for her while another caters to her bonbon vanity, until the latter discloses his motives in a premature declaration, then she becomes righteously indignant—he should have waited—and sorely repents having wandered too far from her source of supplies. The dear child sees the error of her ways because the third angle was altogether too pointed and, she, too, goes to mother's house. As an act of discreation, she permits her generous husband to love both in a very pretty final scene.

NEW EXCHANGE ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

Articles of incorporation were recently filed in the Pacific Coast states by the Globe Film Exchange, of which Marion H. Kohn is president and general manager; Isidor H. Lichtenstein, secretary, and P. N. Lillienthal, treasurer. Mr. Kohn was formerly connected with the Warner's Features, Inc., in San Francisco, and is known to all Coast exhibitors.

Headquarters have been established in San Francisco in the Pantages Theater Building. A branch will be opened in the H. W. Helliman Building, Los Angeles, Cal. Later they will operate in the Northwestern states.

Mr. Kohn has been in New York the last few weeks quietly surveying the field, and has engaged Mr. C. C. Cohn as local buyer, with offices at 145 West 45th Street. While here Mr. Kohn has purchased many features as well as single reels. The policy of the Globe is to give a high class feature service with fillers.

EDISON TO FILM "BUSTER BROWN."

The Edison Company has just completed arrangements by which "Buster Brown" and his inimitable companion, Tige, will appear upon the screen. Outcault's irrepressible small boy is one of the most widely known newspaper characters in the country. Although originally intended as a source of amusement for the kiddies, Buster has become equally popular with the grown-ups. From the abundance of material furnished by the cartoonist, the Edison Company will select that which is best adapted to the screen, and Buster will be given an opportunity to display his ability as a photoplay comedian.

Three hundred newspapers are running these cartoons at the present time. This tremendous medium of publicity and the fact that "Buster Brown" is already a national character assures the success of future series. There will be twelve films in all, released on alternating weeks, commencing as soon as Tige finishes his present vaudeville engagement.

"The Lily of the Valley"

A Three-Part Selig Picture Released Through General Film Company.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

SELIG'S three-part subject, "The Lily of the Valley," has been thought of so highly by the General Film Company that is has been placed on the "Masterpiece" release list—a distinction well merited, for it has a compelling, pathetic story, of fine photodramatic value and it is vividly produced.

The author, Gilson Willets, will be remembered long in film circles as the writer of the scenario of "The Adventures of Kathlyn." Twenty books, chiefly devoted to fiction and published by well known firms, are also down to his credit. Mr. Willets is devoting all of his time at present to the writing of scenarios for the Selig Polyscope Company. About 150 of his subjects have already been released, prominent among them being "The Dancer's Redemption" (one reel), "The Man in the Street" (eight reels, released in a two-reel series), "The Modernized Classics" (released in a one-reel series), etc. He is now putting forth his very best efforts in a list of subjects which are being written with higher motives.

Colin Campbell directed the production of "The Lily of the Valley," which evidences strongly his artistic vision of the subject's possibilities and close attention to details.

These films visualize realistically the strife between the workers in a large factory and the headstrong owner, whose chief interest is centered in profits, while little attention is paid to the condition of his employees. There are great mob scenes which show the demolishing of the factory windows by men on strike and then repulse by the militia. In strong contrast there is shown the conduct of a gentle girl whose heart bleeds for the wrongs of the workers. Single-handed she visits their homes, counseling moderation of the methods employed to better their condition, and speaking words of comfort and good cheer. Her favorite flower is the lily of the valley, and on her rounds of the strikers' families she always carries a bunch of them in her hands, distributing them here and there as she quotes apt passages from Holy Writ. She is respected by all, and her sweetness of character and disposition gain for her the name of the flower that she loves so well.

The author furnishes a striking opposite in the character of the daughter of the foreman of the factory, a girl who urges her father and brothers and other strikers to fight to the death for their rights. She is clearly the dominating figure in the story, which reveals the refining process of bereavement and great sorrows on her character and life. The lesson of the entire story teaches us that the gentle girl, known as the Lily of the Valley, accomplished more in her life and death than the combined forces of the strikers and their obdurate master—more in matters material as well as spiritual.

Miss Bessie Eyton appears in the films as Anna Hanks, the striking foreman's daughter, and she brings out fully the strong and weak points of the character. The scene where she appears viewing the dead bodies of her father and brothers—shot down in the strikers' riot—and vowing vengeance on the slayers, is a thrilling spectacle. Another, in which she discovers that her husband was the slayer, is fully as realistic. Both are fine examples of forceful acting.

Miss Olive Drake brings out appealingly the sweet gentleness and goodness of the titular role. Wheeler Oakman, who sustained the part of the "Broncho Kid" in "The Spoilers," gives a fine characterization of Philip Vale, Lily's brother, and has a dashing appearance in the uniform of a militia officer. Old Bill Hanks, the striking foreman, is ruggedly portrayed by R. H. Kelly. One of the best characterizations in the photodrama is that of Old Man Winter, the factory owner, by Frank Clark. Everyone that views "The Spoilers" will not soon forget Mr. Clark in the part of Dextry, Glenister's partner.

Lilly Vale, known as the Lily of the Valley, her mother and her brother, Philip, are numbered among the most substantial citizens in Commercial Valley, where the great factory of Old Man Winter is situated. A strike breaks out and the factory owner calls on the governor for the protection of the militia.

Philip is a lieutenant of the force and assumes duty, much to the dismay of Lily, who sympathizes with the strikers. She calls on Winter, and is on the point of influencing him to sign a new contract with the strikers, when the windows of the office in which they are talking are shattered by stones thrown by the mob. Then she tries to persuade the officers of the militia to be lenient with the lawbreakers.

The strikers are led by Bill Hanks, foreman of the factory, and his daughter, Anna, incites them to fight for their rights. In one of their onslaughts on the militia, Philip and Lily are forced to seek shelter in a small house near the factory buildings. A bullet strikes Lily dead and Philip is insane for the moment. He rushes out into the open and turns the crank of a machine gun, scattering death in the ranks of the strikers. Bill Hanks and his two sons are among the slain.

Going back to the cabin Philip discoveres a paper in Lily's dead hands. He reads it and discovers that it is the contract which she had vainly tried to get Winter to sign. Still suffering mental tortures on account of her deah, he rushes to Winter's office and forces him to sign the contract at pistol point. Then he carries it to the strikers, who receive it with cheers. Winter reports Philip's conduct to the colonel of the regiment, and he is relieved of his command. To explain his conduct Philip leads both men to the cabin where his sister lies dead. They are horrified and brimful of sympathy.

Anna Hanks, left alone in the world, becomes a worker in the big factory. There she meets Philip, who, desiring to atone for his share in the riots, has taken humble service so as to help the men. She is ignorant of the part he played during the strike. He is deeply repentant and soon shows a liking for Anna's companionship. A few months afterwards they marry, and Philip astonishes Anna by taking her to his beautiful home.

Several happy months pass and both are grieved when another strike breaks out. In the midst of it, Anna learns that her husband was the slayer of her father and brothers. Remembering her sworn oath to avenge them, she resolves to kill him. One day, when gun shots fill the air in the vicinity of their home, she enters his room to perform the act; but her love prevails and the pistol falls from her hands. At the same moment a bullet fired by one of the strikers passes through the window and Philip falls at her feet dead. The release date is May 27.

Kalem Housewarming.

New Studio at Jacksonville, Fla., Scene of Much Merry-Making—A Society Event.

THE elite of Jacksonville society, the most prominent municipal officials and the members of the Lubin and Edison companies located in that cty were the guests of the Kalem players at a housewarming party given in celebration of the completion of the new enclosed Kalem studio, on Saturday, March 28.

Of course, like the Hunkville Centre correspondent of the Hicksville Weekly Bugle, we might state that a "good time was had by one and all," but this would scarcely do justice to the Kalem event. The ball started a' rolling at nine o'clock and kept a' going at top speed until the sun peeped over the horizon, Sunday morning.

The affair was really one of the social events of the season. The Kalem players are very popular with Jacksonville society and this was demonstrated by the fact that every person who had received an invitation was on hand at some time or other during the evening.

The new edifice adjoins the open-air studios that have been used by Kalem during the last few years and is located on Talleyrand Avenue. It is spacious enough to accommodate twelve stages without the slightest crowding and is equipped with every modern device designed to make for comfort and convenience.

But, while the new studio was primarily erected for the purpose of enabling the Kalem directors to turn out pictures in every variety of weather, the merrymakers found it admirably adapted for the tango, hesitation and other efforts Terpsichorean which have swept over the country. The walls that were soon to be the scenes of innumerable mimic dramas and tragedies, smiled down upon a crowd whose mind was occupied with the single thought of having a royal time.

When we say that the "walls smiled," we mean this to be taken literally. So skilfully had the decorators performed their work that the interior of the studio was a joy to behold. The accompanying photographs give but a slight indication of its real beauty.

Those familiar with the artistic natures of Directors Kenean Buel and Bob Vignola, will recognize their deft touches in the decoration revealed in these photographs. Making use of the vines and other flora growing in the vicinity of the studio, their men transformed the interior of the new building into a veritable fairy bower.

As can be seen, a lattice framework formed the background for the vines and leaves. Hundreds of Chinese lanterns containing incandescent bulbs gently swung to the breezes which swept through the building. Comfortable wicker chairs were scattered along the sides, and these, with rugs, paintings and potted plants placed here and there made the building look as unlike a motion picture studio as can be imagined.

During the course of the evening an elaborate dinner was served in "Kalem House," the beautiful cottage in which the majority of the Kalem players reside. Like the new studio, Kalem House was decorated in honor of the occasion.

Among the people present who are well known to the motion picture industry, were: Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Long, Frank Montgomery, Director Hotaling, of the Lubin forces; Sidney Olcott, Directors Buel and Vignola, of the Kalem forces, and members of the Edison, Lubin and Kalem companies.

A REMARKABLE ACHIEVEMENT.

By F. H. Richardson.

THROUGH the courtesy of Mr. Ben Atwell, publicity man for the New York Hippodrome, the writer was permitted to look upon what he considers to be one of the most remarkable performances yet attempted in moving picture production.

A Part of the Lighting Arrangements.

The All-Star Feature Company was filming "America," the regular Hippodrome production for the 1913-14 season. The regular Hippodrome stage was used and this means that the whole thing was being done by artificial light.

Lawrence McGill directed the production, assisted by John Pratt, both well known in film-producing quarters. The cameras were in charge of Irwin Willat, assisted by Richard Fryer and Jacques Monteran. The electrical end was looked after by Max Mayer, of M. J. Wohl & Company, assisted by the Hippodrome house electrician, Joseph Ellsner and a staff of forty.

Showing Top Lights on Full Stage.

Some idea of the magnitude of the lighting proposition may be had when I tell you that the stage area covered in some of the scenes is 105 feet wide by 96 feet deep. The illumination consisted of 24 Cooper-Hewitt tubes in three banks, a great number of special arc lights suspended above, a bank of specially constructed arc-light foot-lights, two stands of special arcs comprising 32 lamps all told, some specially constructed banks of mazda incandescent globes of 500 candle power to use to kill shadows, and in addition to all this the regular Hippodrome lighting consisting of an enormous flood lamp bank in the center of the gallery, another on either side of the gallery, and two more in the flies back of the stage. Mr. Mayer estimated the total candle power at approximately 800,000. The running cost was $7 per minute.

I saw some samples of the film positive and it certainly looks good, though I have not yet seen it projected.

While I was there I was shown over and under the Hippodrome stage and that alone was a sight more than worth seeing. Everything was on a gigantic scale. So much so that even the writer, who is accustomed to seeing things, was astonished. He expected big things, but the reality was beyound his expectations.

But to revert to our subject. This production is, in the judgment of the writer, a very distinct advance in that it illustrates that there is almost no limit to the possibility of filming enormous spectacular productions by artificial light.

ROMAINE FIELDING STAGING FIVE-REEL COMEDY.

Romaine Fielding, the widely known Lubin director, has skimmed the cream from the comedy crock in his latest screen production, "The Battle of Gettysgoat," a five-reel comedy now in course of production. The picture is a travesty upon the present warfare in Mexico and deals with two small boys. The Ostrich Brothers, who weigh 360 and 324 pounds each, who tiring of the "Watchful Waiting" policy decide to invade Mexico and lift the yoke from the downtrodden yokels. There they trip upon Colonel Furioso, "The Interchangeable Spy," presented in all his seething, diabolical, blundering person by the inimitable Fielding and the subsequent misadventures of the boys at the hands of Furioso, who proceeds to be their Nemesis, furnishes a comedy theme so fresh, rapid and entertaining that it is said there is not a foot in the entire 5,000 without its laugh.

Romaine Fielding.

Nearly a thousand United States troops from Fort Crockett, Galveston's military base, have been used by Mr. Fielding in presenting the gigantic battle scenes which form the background and blend smoothly the dramatic and comedy into the fabric so cleverly woven by the versatile actor, author, director. Some brilliant cavalry charges and battles fought in the surf at Galveston, the maneouvers of infantry, cavalry and artillery and the picturesque battles are in themselves worthy of a five-reel play. Mr. Fielding is said to have found another forte for his remarkable histrionic talents in comedy, of which this is his first humor-film. With a fine sense of comedy broadened and ripened by many years of dramatic training and a keen insight into the foibles of human nature, Mr. Fielding's comedy will undoubtedly prove as popular as his intense psychological dramas.

ECLECTIC EXCHANGE FOR PORTLAND, ORE.

The Eclectic Film Company announces the opening of a branch office of the Eclectic Feature Film Exchange in Portland, Ore. The new office is located at 392 Burnside Street, and is under the management of Mr. Alton Tredick, who will be pleased to hear from all the exhibitors in that territory, regarding the Eclectic features.

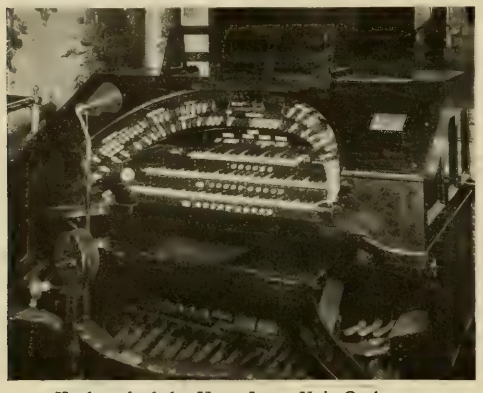
The Vitagraph Organ

Thirty-five Thousand Dollar Hope-Jones Instrument a Marvel of Perfection.

Reviewed by Hugh Hoffman.

IT BEGINS to look very much as though the theater of the future will be entirely mechanical and almost automatic. As the trusty steed has been supplanted on the streets by the trolley car and automobile, so has the gallant actor been crowded off the stage by the motion picture. But besides the actor, the stage mechanic has had to go, and it begins to appear that the orchestra may have to make way for a mechanical substitute. When one considers the location of the Vitagraph Theater and the quality of the entertainment there, it is remarkable how few individuals are needed to operate it in comparison with the number required in times gone by. Aside from the "silent sketch" and the staff in front, two men only are needed to give the show — the operator and the organist. The operator takes the place of a troupe of actors and the organist replaces the orchestra.

The gradual perfection of the Hope-Jones Unit Orchestra, made by the Rudolph Wurlitzer Company, has made it possible for an organist to supplant a large orchestra of men and obtain practically the same musical results. So far as playing for motion pictures is concerned, the results are better than can be had with an orchestra, for the reason that an orchestra is too unwieldy to render perfect picture music without considerable preliminary preparation.



Keyboard of the Hope-Jones Unit Orchestra.

A one-man orchestra seems to be the only solution of the problem of providing music of sufficient majesty which will, at the same time, be in strict keeping with the motion picture. The exigencies of the occasion require that the musician must think and act at the same time. With an orchestra this is impossible because every man would think of something different, and the result would be awful to contemplate. Hence the Hope-Jones Unit Orchestra is the logical outcome of a situation that has been perplexing theater managers for some time past. How to get the true orchestral effect without the labor and worry attendant upon selecting suitable music and rehearsing an orchestra, has been a question of great importance with the progressive exhibitor.

There may be other ways of accomplishing this result, but so far the only one that has appeared is the Unit Orchestra. By this time the Hope-Jones instrument is fairly well known in the trade, but to realize its possibilities as a comprehensive musical machine it is necessary to see and hear the largest of these organs in operation, either at the Pitt Theater, Pittsburgh, or at the Vitagraph Theater, New York.

The illustration herewith shows the movable console, or keyboard, of the Hope-Jones instrument recently installed in the Vitagraph Theater. This is the only portion of the entire installation that is visible to the audience. By far the larger part is concealed in various parts of the house. The console is located at the left side of the orchestra pit. The floor of the orchestra pit has been removed and the main compartment containing the high and middle registers, a case about 15′ x 6′, rests on the basement floor and stands about ten feet high.

This case contains all of the principal solo instruments and most of the various sound effects. The uppermost proscenium boxes are not used for seating, but are full of different kinds of pipes and solo instruments. The great diapason pipes are located in the dome loft of the auditorium behind the stucco work. They have their openings through screens or gratings in the dome. The size of these diapasons is immense — the largest one is 35 feet in length and 16 inches square and the others ranging downward in proportion. These big pipes, about twenty in number, fill the entire dome loft and range around like spokes in a giant wheel. In appearance they resemble the heavy timber work of some great bridge. The air supply leading to the diapasons comes through channels as big as stovepipes.

In an enclosed room in the basement is the power generating equipment. Here in separate sections are the portable switchboards which remind one of the rear end of a complicated telephone system. Each switchboard is a bewildering network of wires, relays, magnets and other electrical expedients for the control of the instrument from the keyboard. There are several switchboards connecting to the various sets of pipes. The entire electrical apparatus is operated by a ten-volt current which is stepped down from 110 volts by a small motor generator drawing about 25 amperes. On account of the low voltage, a very small wire, No. 24, is used on all ordinary circuits. A glance at the keyboard illustration hardly gives an adequate idea of the number of circuits in the installation. Each key on each bank of keys is wired to operate several kinds of instruments, according to the use of the various stops. An offhand estimate of the inventor places the number of individual circuits at 3,500.

The wind power is furnished by a large blower fan which fills a reservoir, and the reservoir in turn feeds the air tubes with an even pressure and distributes air to all necessary points. This fan is sufficiently adequate for the purpose without resorting to compressed air. It is operated by a separate current on the 110-volt supply.

At the keyboard at the Vitagraph Theater sits Frank R. White, the Wurlitzer star performer, and the class of music he gets out of the instrument makes it very difficult to leave the place while he is at work. As an accompaniment to motion pictures, the Unit Orchestra is ideal. The full orchestral body is there in all its daintiness or power, except when more power is wanted and then the orchestra is left far behind. It is possible to change at a moment's notice from a "skippy" little gavotte into something dramatic, and by degrees work up to a climax like the ocean's roar. With the full organ with its big diapason pipes going full fortissimo the entire theater trembles as though in an earthquake; ladies are actually frightened and strong men bravely wait for the roof to cave in.

The Wurlitzer Company, through the work and inventions of Robert Hope-Jones, has made some wonderful strides in the past year. The practical needs of the exhibitor have been carefully studied, with the result that an instrument expressly suited to motion picture uses has been produced which is capable of rendering an infinite variety of sounds besides the legitimate instrumentation. Of course, it is out of the question for the average exhibitor to install an instrument of such magnitude as the Vitagraph organ, but the Wurlitzer people have arrived at a happy medium in their Style K Unit Orchestra. As I saw it at the Wurlitzer salesrooms in New York it was confined in a decorative case, bolted together in three sections, although the case is not absolutely necessary.

The Style K instrument is the same as Style H. With the addition of the Xylophone and the Vox Humana, I understand that there is also to be added a diapason for use in extra heavy scenes. But the Vox Humana is a beautiful thing for picture work. The imitations of human voices and animal sounds that can be produced by this means are many. Walter Simon, the Wurlitzer demonstrator, did some astonishing things with this combination. He gave a fine rendition of a human choir, a lion's roar, a pig's grunt, an argument between a man and a woman, a mooing cow, a crowd cheering, and some others. Besides the Xylophone and the Vox Humana, the Style K consists of piano, violins, cornet, oboe, cellos, church organ, double flutes, double flute stopped bass, bass drum, snare drum, kettle drums, cymbal, glockenspiel, triangle, cow bell, tambourine, steamboat whistle, horse trot, auto horn, cathedral chimes and electric bell. It is a valuable instrument for theaters of moderate size and means.

MULTIPLE REEL COMEDIES.

The Great Northern Film Company has decided to introduce another film novelty in the form of a series of three-reel comedies, which will feature Mr. Carl Alstrup, who is reputed to be a master funmaker in the realm of motion pictures The prominent part which feature productions play in the current programmes of film theaters, suggested to the Great Northern Company the timeliness of multiple reel comedy subjects as an adjunct to up-to-date programme building. The series which is announced is made up of a number of sparkling comedies of the sort that are calculated to make a strong appeal to discriminating exchanges, exhibitors and audiences and the Great Northern gives its assurance that the subjects have been presented with careful attention to detail.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

THIS is the season of the year when the professionals are coming into town. Each and all of them have ideas of their own. Figures they have chanced to see appear to them as amateurs and they feel that every studio is awaiting their return. Little do they know that the sagacious managers are on the job. When they get to Forty-second Street they learn that there is a second war on hand. Burlesque has made a hit the past season that warrants the ordering of an attack on the motion pictures. "Long live the tights," they exclaim.

Yes, the burlesque managers have declared war against the movies. They feel that the people want bur-le-que. They imagine that it has been brought up to the good old days of extravaganza, when W. H. Crane and others none the less prominent did real, good work.

In those good old days the people who did the work got the credit. It was not as it is today: "Mr. Silvermouth presents so-and-so in ——." Or, "Mr. Goldtooth takes pleasure in announcing that Miss Realstone will appear."

In the good old days the same amount of avariciousness, or greed for prominence, was not as prominent as it is today. When Sheridan and Shook, Wallack, Abbey and Booth, ran their theaters they modestly held the top lines of the bill posters as managers and gave the display to the people who were really doing the work. The modernized methods of advertising did more than anything else to kill the straight theatrical business. People do not go to theaters because Isadore Lotsamoney is running the place. They go to see the play and the people playing. When James O'Neill played "Monte Cristo" the people went to see him do it. But when John Getsyermoney got himself in big type about forty years after James Wasborn the people went to the pictures —and so did James.

That is why so many of the real professional people are going to the photo plays. Even if the producers fail to feature them in the display work they have a big chance on the screen to show they are there with the goods.

Despite the remorse felt by the professional people over the inroads made upon the stage by the photoplay, they cherish that chance to let people see them as they are.

Now where do the burlesquers come in as challengers of the photoplay? Here and there you find a headliner taken from some legitimate source, and outside of the headliner you find a re-hash of last year. The burlesque is like the circus. See one and you wait until it comes back next Spring, to see if there is really something new.

It is true that the modification of burlesque has attracted a better class of people than it did in the past; but the fact remains that it is gradually drifting back to the old time variety, with nothing novel outside of the apparel. Every play put on is only an elongated old-time sketch split up to make room for the old-time olio. Many of the present day patrons do not realize this, but the majority of the best paying patrons know a thing or two, and burlesque has a swell chance to outdo the up-to-date photoplay.

Good Photoplays have been and are in the line of artistic reproduction of realism. Burlesque shows hit that mark as close as Dr. Cook struck the North Pole, and they have some distance to travel before they can convince the public that their box office receipts are due to more than the anatomical displays.

The burlesque challenge is not to be ignored, however, by people interested in the motion picture business. There are many houses operated by men who would never have dreamed of an opportunity to get into the theatrical business had it not been for motion pictures. These men do not care a snap for the photoplay. It is money they are after. They run what they call vaudeville houses. The vaudeville is fair, to be frank—to be honest it is rank—and the pictures are a side issue to them. Nevertheless they get the people because of the variety. Many people leave the houses disappointed. They do not see the kind of pictures they hope to see. Some day the stock of cabaret attractions will run out and the moguls will find themselves sitting where they started. This is what the burlesque people are figuring upon. All through the country you will find indifferent picture theater people who say, "Or what do I care? If I can show a box office sheet up to a certain time, I'll be on a burlesque circuit next season."

They are box office swellers, and of no possible benefit to the legitimate motion picture maker or renter, regardless of the unstability of his belief. The exhibitor who is in the business to give the people the best he can get should be favored, even at the sacrifice of terms; and the man who is holding his house for a market should be required to meet contingencies.

Under the present standard of burlesque the show cannot be brought up to the extravaganza sphere. The class of people who patronized straight extravaganza cannot be won over to the burlesque because they know the game from the foundation. The real actors and actresses are seeking and getting openings in the silent drama—the photoplay—and the better class of people are not looking for tinsel and scenery.

It may be true that certain actors and actresses can no longer draw the crowds by their stage representations, but there is a sentiment born of past performances that makes the reappearance of the same people in photography—moving photography—a refreshing remembrance of by-gone appearances.

A well-known manager said the other evening: "Say what you will, the moving pictures have it on us. I see the best of them going to it. Burlesque managers are booking high, but it is the people who pay the money you want. I stood outside of one of the motion picture houses the other night and the stream that went in there made my heart yearn. I know of people I paid salary to as vandeville performers, and they are running moving picture dumps today. I can't hire them, unless at a premium. You know Duncan, that ventriloquist fellow? He just smiled at me the other night. He's as independent as a hog on ice with his Flatbush place.

To hear the backers of burlesque boast of putting the pictures out of business and lay foundation for re-opening the straight vandeville houses is a joke. The best part of the joke is that most of the boasting ones never knew what "straight" was. It is the elimination of picture houses backed by them that is giving the pictures the standing.

VICTORIA FORDE.

Victoria Forde is now playing female comedy leads under Al Christie in Nestor comedies of the Universal. "Vicky," as she is known to her friends, is a girl still. She owes a large measure of her success to her mother, Eugenie Forde, who gave her a sound dramatic training. Miss Forde is also fortunate in that she played child's parts with John Drew and Margaret Illington, with whom she appeared in "His House in Order." Later she toured with Maxine Elliott in "Her Own Way," and also with Chauncey Olcott, in children's parts, for two years. Miss Forde appeared on the Keith and Proctor circuit, supporting Eugenie Ford in "Mrs. Danforth's Experience." Miss Victoria made her first "picture" appearance with the Biograph Company, and then joined the Nestor Company before they came West. "Would I return to the legitimate?" asked Miss Forde. "Hardly. In the pictures I get more open life, more personal freedom, and more money." Victoria's work calls for lively action, amounting to rough and tumble business at times.

Doings at Los Angeles.

IF the present building activities may be taken as a criterion, this summer will be the liveliest for film producers, for nearly every studio is being enlarged or improved. Thomas H. Ince, of Bronchoville, has just finished half of a 300 x 60-foot stage, and already directors are working on the finished section. The original stage of 24 x 24 feet has been ripped up to make way for this big improvement, and the old landmark of the studio has passed away. A new two-story office building was started this week. The offices will be upstairs. The ground floor will be used as a receiving room. A 100,000-gallon fire protection reservoir has been constructed on the hill behind the plant and the best system for fighting fire has been put into order. Telephone communication over the five miles of hills has also been given this 400-strong studio-camp. Much building has been finished this week. New dressing rooms, property rooms and paint shops have also been completed.

Down at Long Beach the Balboa Company has been doing wonders at the large studio. The new vault has just been filled with many cans of film. The big fireproof concrete box is 8 x 14 feet, and is 16 feet high, and will hold all the film that the company can possibly use. A dozen new dressing rooms have been finished and are now being painted. The company is installing a water air-cooling system which will deliver clean and cool air to each dressing room. In the winter it will be changed so hot air will be sent into the rooms. The large assembling room has been added to. A concrete floor was laid in the drying room, which has thirty-six drums with a capacity of 400 feet of film on each cylinder. Two big water-air coolers and cleaners have also been placed in this dust-proof room. The city has oiled the streets near the studio, and the railway company promises a like treatment of its right of way. A new garage was built which houses seven cars and the auto truck. More building is contemplated, so says the men who are at the head of this company.

Mack Sennet has started work on a 75 x 100-foot stage addition at the Keystone studio. When finished this will make the whole stage about 400 feet square.

Out in the Glendale hills George Melford is building a string of new dressing rooms. The need of more room has necessitated this improvement. Next week he goes to Catalina Island for a five-day rest after having finished "Shannon of the Sixth," one of the biggest plays ever put on. For two weeks 400 extras were used, including 250 militiamen. The railway company ran special cars. Douglas Gerrard played the title role. As a reminder of the storm of February 24 the scrapers are just finishing their work on the foothill boulevard, a block from this studio. The oiled highway was buried eight feet under a load of washed-in sand and gravel.

W. H. Clune, the local movie magnate, will erect a monster electric sign over one of his theaters here. The beacon will be put up at a cost of nearly $2,500. He is preparing to open the Auditorium Theater on May 1.

Dr. Kirby, a veterinary surgeon who stays at Universal branch to care for the menagerie, was nearly clawed to death this week when he was leaving the cage after administering medicine to one of the big lions. Some keeper banged the door, scared the animal, and it sprang for the doctor, who in turn leaped through another half open door. He was caught and painfully cut and bruised, and first reports received in the city were that he had been killed. Later, however, it was found that he was alive, but his injuries are serious. He is now in the hospital.

Marshal Neilan, manager and director of the Kalem studio in Hollywood, will go to Santa Barbara soon to use some exclusive settings for some of the comedies that he is making with Ruth Roland and John Brennan. The studio at Santa Monica will be retained as an emergency working place.

Orders from the park commission limit moving picture companies to only twenty-five horses, being used at one time in Griffith Park, the mecca for wild and forest scene hunters. The commission says more animals tear up the ground and damage the trees.

George Cooper, who has been working at the Universal plant with Alan Dwan, has gone back to his first love, the Vitagraph, and the man who specializes in crooks and heavies will leave next week for New York.

Frank Burke has joined the Broncho camp as has A. L. Jarrett, formerly of Pathe's. Another addition to this company is Ben Horning, who played the original Father Serra in the Mission Play. George Osborne is now directing here. Charles Ray has ordered a fine new racy roadster to replace his present small car. Little Mildred Harris has finished a big feature picture and is on a sort vacation at Redondo.

Fred Mace and his company incorporated this week for $200,000. His players are working all the time now and the old Majestic studio looks as busy as it ever did. The main offices of the firm will be in the Washington Building here.

To collect the necessary cash to buy a good piano for the Blue Bell Culture Club, Butler's Theater Thursday turned over the proceeds of the house to the girls of the organization. The members are all operators at the telephone office and are now happy with the new piano.

An elegant stop watch valued at $500 was presented to Director Otis Turner in recognition of his long and efficient service with the Universal, by the officials of the company. He has been a maker of moving pictures for many years, and in thirty years time he has directed some of the greatest stage productions. He planned the big film-play stage which will soon be erected at the new Universal ranch.

Another new company has been launched into the smooth sea of film makers here. Jesse J. Robbins, late general manager of Essanay, at Niles, Cal., is at the head of the new organization, which will produce features. He is now searching for a suitable location, and as soon as one is found a strong company of players will be formed and work will start immediately.

Mack Sennet is now directing Marie Dresser in a roaring comedy which has been prepared especially for the new star addition to the Keystoners.

Jack Dillon, brother of Eddie, has left the Mutual and has signed up with the Kalem in Glendale, where he will work with George Melford.

Dell Henderson, while doing a funny Biograph picture, entitled "Lucky Jim," played wrong and became unlucky. He was holding a dynamite cap and it went off too soon, injuring his leg and shooting across the chest of a nearby helper, who fell over when the sting of the metal hit him. The poor fellow is laid up, but Dell is able to limp around and tell of the "lucky" event.

Miss Jane Novak, the charming Vitagraph player, is never idle when not making a picture. She sews and milliners all the time and makes all her own straight costumes at her beach home, unassisted by any dressmaker or featherworker.

The Universal bought an island at Lagoona beach for $1,200 for the purpose of blowing it to smithereens. Phillips Smalley and Lois Weber, with the other members of the company went down there accompanied by stage men, who carefully carried 500 pounds of dynamite and 2,000 pounds of black powder. When they get through with the island it will be off the map.

The circus came to town and it was grabbed by Eddie Dillon, who made a Mutual comedy written hurriedly for the event. The picture is a big fun one and every part of the big show was taken in by the cameraman.

The Occidental Film Manufacturing Company has been incorporated for $500,000 by G. F. and A. F. Moore and others here. It is not known where they will work or what kind of pictures they will make.

Edwin August and his new company, which is being formed, has chosen the Loftus Features studio for its working place. The new concern is busy in this Hollywood studio and a four-reeler is the first to be made. Eugene Ormonde is heavy man, as well as business manager. Hal August is the juvenile. More members will be added in a short time.

Ruth Roland has ordered a new Hudson car over which she is daily watching and superintending the many changes. It will be bright crimson, trimmed in black and upholstered in red. The car replaces her famous Renault racer. Ruth was the first girl to have an electrically lighted "Kewpie" doll on the radiator of her motor.

Another big series is now being made by Al Christie, who wrote and is directing "Sophie of the Films," a roaring farce comedy of four single installments. Victoria Forde is the poor girl who seeks work and is taken in by the villain director of the company, a good part, being played by Lee Moran. The youthful hero of the movie-within-a-movie is portrayed by Eddie Lyons, who rescues the dainty miss from the cruel and scheeming director. Another funny series soon to be put on is "Babbling Bess," in which Bess Meredyth plays the title role. It was written by James Dayton and tells the story of a young girl who has many funny adventures. The series is to be very comical all the way through.

Robert Thornby is doing a Ford Sterling comedy in which there is a chase on the water. The escaping men are in a small rowboat when a speeding motor cuts the little one in two. Instead of sinking it stays up and the two halves are rowed away, a specially made breaking-connection makes the two parts watertight.

William C. Ehfe, who plays leads at the Broncho, is a regular baseball artist. He is on the team and will play against other members of the big movie league. The fans are interested and next Sunday the Keystone and Universal teams clash on the diamond. The schedule is being prepared and many games are soon to follow. The Balboans are to give a big dance to raise funds for suits. Most every film team has already gotten their uniforms, and is at practice during all spare moments.

William West has just been installed exalted ruler of the Glendale Lodge 1289 of Elks. Six members of the Kalem Company are among the antlered herd. George Melford is esteemed lecturing knight while James Horn is the organist. The little lodge has been in existence only eighteen months, but has 400 mmbers and one of the best club quarters in the West.

The gymnasium of the Los Angeles Athletic Club was packed when the first public running of the Bosworth feature "The Valley of the Moon" was made this week. Everyone present pronounced the film the best ever, and it was.

British Notes.

(Special Correspondence to The World.)

As a typical instance of the vigilance of the licensing authorities in England's second city—Manchester—the following abstract from their annual report is worthy of notice: "The 100 theaters licensed by the Watch Committee were visited 2,996 times. Proceedings were taken against five and convictions were obtained against four." It is not too much to say that the police regulations in Manchester are harsher than in any other city in the country. I recently had occasion to visit a large theater on the outskirts for six evenings in succession and each night the performance was graced with the presence of two police officers.

Until recently Frank E. Balladur was with the Gaumont Company in New York, but now, I hear, he has taken a position in the industry in London. Mr. Balladur will purchase negative films in Europe on behalf of his firm and will export them direct to America.

The Parliamentary Committee upon celluloid, after holding twenty-nine meetings, examining fifty experts and witnesses, and visiting France and Germany to study conditions there, has at last issued its report and advice. So far as this country is affected the Committee does not believe that the number of serious fires attributable to celluloid in establishments where it is used or stored is as large as would be expected. Since the introduction of the Cinematograph Act of 1909 though there has been a number of cases in which a film has caught fire, no serious accidents have resulted and this gain to public safety has been secured without detriment to the trade. No raw film is at present manufactured in this country (continues the report), and so far as we can ascertain all raw film is imported from America. The conditions under which renters carry on their business are not in all cases satisfactory. Generally the Committee recommends that all premises where films are handled as a business should be registered; they should not be situated under livingrooms, and if in a building in joint occupation preferably on the top floor. Waste should be collected once a day and stored in suitable receptacles, and smoking and open lights and fires should be prohibited.

A few exhibitors in London have had the seats of their theaters re-upholstered in leather instead of plush. The motive prompting this action seems a sensible one and is, of course, mainly hygienic. Plush harbors dust and dirt and if a light color soon becomes dirty. Imitation Morocco leather, it is found, costs no more, and in addition to being impervious to dust retains its gloss for quite a long time.

A new periodical, entitled The Photoplay Writer, has appeared in London this week, dealing solely with the interests of photo-playwrights.

The moving picture cannot really be so detrimental to the morals of the nation after all. The other day the Wiltshire Yeomanry were "ordered out" to attend a picture show at Chippenham.

A massive picture theater to eclipse anything of its kind in England, London included, is to be built shortly in St. Peter's Square, Manchester, at an estimated cost of nearly half a million dollars.

Thomas W. Ross.

THOMAS W. ROSS, the prominent Broadway dramatic star, best remembered for his work in the stage production of "Checkers" and later as having created the principle role in James Forbes' "The Traveling Salesman," is now at Hollywood, Cal., working before the camera for the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company in a filmization of Winchell Smith's most recent success "The Only Son," which he played for two years with quite a degree of success.

Thomas W. Ross.

Mr. Ross came into prominence about nine years ago when he made his first stellar appearance in the thrilling race-track play "Checkers," which he later did in pictures. Following his many years in this piece he assumed the leading role in "The Traveling Salesman," for the late Henry B. Harris. Following this, Mr. Ross accepted the star part in "The Only Son" and played in it for eight months at the Olympic Theater, Chicago, later touring to the Pacific Coast.

"The Only Son" will be the fourth release of the Lasky Company, and under the able direction of Cecil B. De Mille and Oscar Apfel promises to exceed even the first two production of this organization.

A specially select cast will support Mr. Ross in "The Only Son." Winnifred Kingston, whose work in "The Squaw Man" and "Brewster's Millions," won her many admirers, will probably play the leading feminine role, while Richard La Reno will have the opposite role to Mr. Ross.

"The Only Son" will be in five parts and will probably reach the public early in June. Mr. Ross, enroute to the Coast, toured from Chicago to Los Angeles in his motor car which, by the way, will be used in the production. The star colony at the Lasky Studios now embraces Ross, Dustin Farnum, Max Figman, Lolita Robertson, H. B. Warner, Edmund Breese, Winnifred Kingston and Cecil De Mille. Upon arrival at Hollywood, Ross was received by the corps of stellar lights and conducted in state to the Lasky studio where he was initiated into the "next to nature" life led by the stars located there.

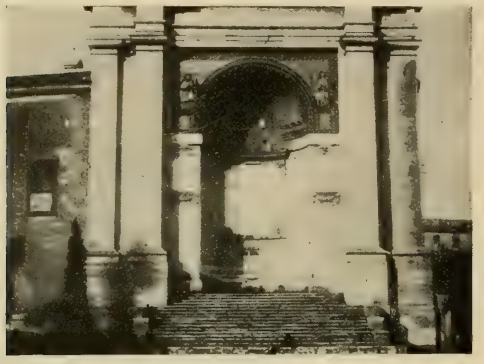
$10,000 PICTURE HOUSE FOR TACOMA, WASH.

The new Apollo Theater being erected in C Street, Tacoma, Wash., will be one of the most beautiful picture houses in Washington when it is completed. About $10,000 will be expended on the structure. It is expected to be opened about May 10.

Moving Picture Educator

THE GLORIES OF OLD ROME.

THE Vero Educational Film Company has now ready the second and third series of "The Glories or Old Rome," of which the Coliseum, recently reviewed formed the first series. The second series is devoted to a detailed description of the Lateran Palace, long the residence of former Popes, and which is revealed in faithful detail.



Part of the Ancient Glories of the Lateran.

These pictures are not taken alone for the sight-seer, but for the intelligent traveler or student, who wishes those instructive details which he would seek in person, were he to visit the originals. With a pleasing discrimination the taker of these pictures has placed himself in the position of a learned and competent guide, giving both the superficial grandeur, and the obscure beauties in an attractive, comprehensive and pleasantly instructing manner. Certainly the old Lateran Palace contains much architectural beauty, and is of such noble proportions as to fitly classify it as one of Rome's glories. In this series also is included pictures of Frascati, a summer resort of the Popes, and well known as the residence of Pope Clement VII. Enhanced by the natural beauties of the palace, the combinations of art and nature make this one of famous attractiveness, here are to be found wonderful pieces of the sculptor's art.

The Famous Fountain "Di Trevi."

Fountains of Rome.

The Fountains of Rome as the third series of pictures, are certainly wonderful; it is doubtful if any other city in the world can boast of either so many or such beautiful structures. In point of numbers they are certainly surprising, and of those pictured not one seems to be of any other than such as may be classed as specimens of the highest art.

Much of the history of Italian art is written in these beautiful specimens of sculpture, most of them being by the greatest artists of the day, including Michael Angelo and Raphael. It was indeed a happy thought which made a complete series of these fountains, indeed it would seem that if in Rome one would certainly make a tour of these attractions. In pictures they constitute a veritable gallery of art; with the suitable and sufficient descriptions, they form a complete, attractive and most intelligent film.

Scene in the Papal Summer Residence.

By introducing this series the Vero Educational Company is doing a great favor to educational kinematography. They are more than scenic, as with their intrinsic merit and value, they are, by going beneath the surface, making new studies of older or less noticed subjects, and revealing that for which the intelligent traveler is always looking.

VALUABLE CONSULAR REPORTS.

SECRETARY REDFIELD'S Department of Commerce, ever on the alert to furnish tips to American manufacturers on the extension of business abroad, announces the fact that the cowboy picture has run its course in foreign lands; Europe is generally demanding a substitute. It has by no means severed its moving picture relationship with American films, but declares that the cowpuncher as a film ambassador is persona non grata. The United States vice-consul at Sheffield, England, reports this to the home Government, adding that while for a time the extreme novelty of the pictures was very attractive, they now no longer fail to attract, and their appearance is sure to detract from the attendance of picture house patrons.

At the request of the government, Vice-Consul Evans and other consular officers abroad have been getting a line on the American film business, as a result he writes: "Time was when 70 or 80 per cent. of films shown in England were of American manufacture, but that day is past, partly due to the successful efforts of film producers in other countries, and the decline of the popularity of the American cowboy." While admitting that no characters lend themselves better to stir dramatic action with wide scope for scenic effect and rapid action than the cowboy and the Indian fighters of Western America, still the European picturelovers are naturally growing tired of them, as a result of this changing public sentiment the American business has suffered. The Consul further says, "The Italian pictures with their emotional drama of love and passion, staged with minute care, hold first place in the production of the purely sentimental drama. The French run rather to the emotional problem situation of the 'eternal triangle' put in a more or less restricted space. These two nationalities about cover the local market for wares of this sort. Exquisite productions of old classics, carefully worked out as regards detail, are the drawing cards for the present, and these are in the main English make."

Vice-Consul Evans predicts that the film of tomorrow will be on a higher mental plane, and will appeal to the reading, thinking and intelligent classes. Consul Ingram, of Bradford, sounds a more encouraging note concerning films. He says that 75 per cent. of pictures shown in that city are American make, and he regards this as partly due to the greater similarity between the English and American types of characters, than with those of Continental Europe.

Consul Byington, of Leeds, says that the film business in his district is booming, which indicates the popularity of the average American film with local audiences.

Consul Dennison, located at Dundee, Scotland, however, echoes the note of warning sounded by Vice-Consul Evans concerning "The same old cowboy films," these, he says, are being superseded by films setting forth the story of some well-known play or novel.

Consul Ifft, of Nuremberg, Germany, reports extensively concerning the picture business in Bavaria, but makes no allusion to the American film, his report tending to show that as a rule good picture houses are being built, that the attendances are always large and the charges for admission high.

American Films Popular in Norway.

Consul Rasmusen, stationed at Bergen, writes: "From the fact that as a rule they portray heroic and stirring scenes, American films are popular, and may be depended on to continue so if judiciously used. The kind of American films that would sell best in this market are those describing outdoor life, heroic actions, construction work and industrial progress."

Pictures for the Weak and the Wicked.

That the weak may be strong and the wicked reclaimed and reformed is now the twofold object of those who can use the moving pictures to such a great educational advancement. "Moving Pictures in Minnesota State Institution" is the title of an article appearing in the current issue of the Modern Hospital Magazine. The article is written by Miss Miriam E. Carey, supervisor of the institutional libraries of the state. For this noble purpose eight Minnesota institutions have been supplied with moving picture equipment. Miss Carey says, "The world of the commonplace, brought to the state institutions by means of the moving pictures, is a realm of wonder to those confined within them. Comedy films are well received, drama scarcely at all, but the ordinary street scenes, the portrayal of every-day life denied to them holds the inmates spellbound." In Wisconsin also the State Board of Control has made a trial of the value of the pictures in the asylum of Winnebago county, and in the home for feebleminded at Chippewa Falls, and found the results more than satisfactory. As a result an investigation has been ordered with a view to installing an equipment in all the other institutions of the state.

In the famous "Tombs prison" of New York City, in which there are at present a large number of prisoners who are subject either to the sale of use of the pernicious drug habit, a series of pictures was recently shown entitled "The Drug Terror," under the auspices of the Medical and Sociological Societies, recently formed in a crusade against opiates and their attendant evils. The positive value of the use of these pictures is recorded from the fact that while in the earlier parts of the scenes the "dope fiends" were cynical and jeering, and somewhat outskopen with their criticisms of the lack of underworld efficiency displayed, as the picture progressed and the evil effects of the opiates were portrayed, with their dreadful results the audience became quiter and more serious, one of the former scoffers saying as they passed to their cells, "that picture shows what awful stuff it is." A second audience of youths were then shown the pictures, several of whom are accused of murder through the evil effects of the drug, the effect this time was so deep that hardly a whisper was heard among them. There is little doubt that the moving pictures cannot possibly be doing a nobler work than this of helping the weak, and uplifting the fallen; may such work continue to increase very largely.

Ambitious California.

In California the State Board of Education is taking up the question of state controlled educational kinematography. A prominent member of the board announces himself as ready to propose a plan whereby "A motion picture outfit shall be placed in every schoolhouse, and particularly every country school house in the state." He would supply every district in turn with educational films selected by the state authorities to assure their accuracy, and would depart from the usual scholastic subjects only for the purpose of illustrating mechanical arts, the sciences, animal life, horticulture, agriculture, travel, and current events. There is no doubt that this is a most ambitious yet possible program, and one which the Moving Picture Educator will be glad to see carried out, as, without doubt, other and less ambitious states and boards will watch with interest, and prepare themselves to adopt a similar course.

HOWARD CRAMPTON

HOWARD CRAMPTON, a member of the Imp Stock Company, has had a wide experience on the stage. He will be best known to picturegoers as the confidential agent of the Man Higher Up in the big Universal subject, "Traffic in Souls." Mr. Crampton has been in pictures about two years. He is one of the half-dozen members of a film company to appear in a picture, a part of which was shown first on the stage, and immediately afterward shown on the screen. This was as a member of the Imp Company under King Baggot, which played "The Baited Trap" at the Republic Theater recently.

Howard Crampton.

Mr. Crampton's first appearance before the public was in what was then known as the "variety business." With Joseph Murphy he did a dancing turn in "Donough," and later he played Denny Doyle in "Kerry Gow." Then for ten years Mr. Crampton was in the "legitimate." He played in Tom Rickett's "Duvar" company, Charles Frohman's "Gloriana," Frank Daniels' "Dr. Cupid," William T. Hodge's in "Eighteen Miles from Home," Eddy Foy's "Hamlet by Freight," and in "The Spoilers."

Mr. Crampton played the leading comedy part, King of Nicobar, in B. C. Whitney's "Isle of Spice," and for two years with Sam S. Shubert's "The Belle of New York" company. His last engagement on the legitimate stage was with James O'Neill in "Abbe Bonaparta," the last production in which Mr. O'Neill starred. For two years before engaging in screen work Mr. Crampton was in vaudeville with Miss Lulu Jeon Espey in "The Politician and the Suffragette," a sketch written by himself. Mr. Crampton is a charter member of the Screen Club, where he has many "pals" among players old and new, as well as among the non-players. On the screen he has done good work in many parts.

Handling Features.

MANY of those exhibitors who are declaring that there is no money in features and that the field has been worked out have only themselves to blame.

It seems only yesterday that the thousand-foot reel was not only the standard length, but the limit. In the foreign trade papers lengths were given up to two and three thousand feet, but such of these products as came to this side of the water were cut down to the even thousand because it was all the exchange would handle.

And on the thousand-foot reel was based the popularity of the neighborhood house. Mother did not have to hustle through the dinner things to be in time for the first act. Father could finish off his cigar before they had to start. Any time they could drop around to the theater, at worst but a few blocks away and see three or four subjects and still have the kiddies in bed by ten. No matter what time they came in, they could see the start of a picture with but a few minutes' wait. It was the same idea of "drop in any time," that did so much to popularize vaudeville. And, to continue the vaudeville comparison, the show could not be all bad. One or even two reels might not make particular appeal, but the other one or two gave a return for the money.

Then came the double and the triple. Manufacturers decided that they need not always hold to the single reel subject and some of the foreign multiples had attracted attention. George Kleine gave the business the final boost when he put "Quo Vadis?" in the dramatic theaters. There had been many notable productions prior to this, but it was this that broke into the old line houses and made patent to the world that a motion picture was not something cheap that people went to see when they had no time to go downtown to a regular theater. Already the old store fit-up had begun to give place to the specially designed theaters, and now the managers took to the double-reel features and so to the three and four part subjects. In the minds of the patrons a two-reel subject must be twice as good as the single length and so they flocked into the house the nights that the multiples were shown, and the managers called for more multiples and still more, and the manufacturers, not fully ready to meet the demand, but always willing to do anything that would sell two reels where but one had sold before, padded out the one-reel scripts while they waited for the studio staffs and outside writers to become educated to the writing of the multiple.

Some of the resultant product was not good, and some of the special releases were no better. No longer was the extra length of itself a novelty, and no longer was the long subject supposed to be extra good just because it was a long subject.

And to help along, a lot of the larger houses, which had been starving to death with dramatic attractions, turned into the field and offered the six and eight reel subjects. Many locality house managers sought to follow the lead in order to keep the patronage and never realized that it was as much the "come any time" policy as anything else that had made the locality house a success. Now mother had to leave the dishes until she came home if she wanted to see the first reel ahead of the last. Bill could not visit with sister Sue and along about nine o'clock suggest strolling down to see some pictures. The locality house had become like the larger places and you had to be there at a certain time if you wanted to see the subject run in its proper order.

Now the locality manager declares that the public is tired of the big release and wants to get back to the single reels again, while the man who runs the feature show joins him in declaring that there is no longer any money in features.

The Remedy.

Probably that is not the way film is handled these days, but with proper handling there is no reason why there should not be the same profit as before if not more. It is very true that the crowd will follow the big release, but this is because the managers trust too much to the big release. Let the locality house cater to the neighborhood convenience and let the features play in feature houses. And playing the features, play them right.

We'll say that Monday night Bill Jones goes to see "Judith of Bethulia." Tuesday morning he tells Sam Smith that there is a great picture down at the Grand. Tuesday night Sam has an engagement, but on Wednesday he gets his best girl and takes her down to the Grand. In place of Judith there is a shocker that depends on one big scene instead of a gripping story to get over. Sam goes home sore and Thursday morning he tells Bill what a liar he is, so Bill has to explain that the Grand only runs a subject two days. Next time he tells Sam how good the picture at the Grand is, Sam will remember that first sting and stay away.

In place of getting a change of program every day or three times a week, get a subject that can last the week. It can be done in all cities and in many of the towns. If you cannot hold a picture more than a day or two drive that fact home until every man, woman and child in the town knows your change days and on all your advertising run the line, "Remember you can see this only on Monday and Tuesday. Don't delay."

Up to now a picture house has been a picture house and one has differed from another very little save in the minor details of location and elegance of equipment, but we are coming to a new order. We are coming to a parting of the ways, to a division of the business into classifications, the feature houses and the neighborhood theaters with one reel bills or at best only an occasional double. More, we shall presently have feature houses with well defined policies; this house showing the sensational and that the classical instead of all alternating between "From the Manger to the Cross" and "Saved by the Skin of His Teeth," with a boiler explosion, two fights with real lions and a real airship. Even in the business and amusement sections there will be some houses where a man can drop in for an hour and get a couple of complete stories, but the "downtown" houses will mostly show features and let it be understood that they will run a certain style of feature.

There never has been a real excuse for a lot of the multiples put out, and there is no more excuse now than there ever has been, but it is foolish to argue that there is no more money in features. There is, but they must be handled right.

And here's one point that must be remembered. You generally have a certain clientele. Play to that clientele. If you have a neighborhood house where you can say "good evening" to half of your patrons as they enter, you have the basis of a good business. Now if two or three times a week you put on some feature that does not appeal to these patrons, no matter how crowded your house may be with a stranger element, you are losing money if you do not draw and please your steady clientele. That is a point so many overlook.

Suppose that you have a nice house in a good locality, a locality mostly inhabited by small business men and the better class of employees; people who get from $1,500 to $3,000 a year. They know and like your house and you have a steady patronage. Now suppose that you put in some lurid sensation that draws in addition a couple of hundred men and women from just outside your own territory, decent people enough, but clearly not of the sort that constitutes your regular clientele, truck drivers, hod carriers, delivery boys and the like. You may draw an extra $20 or $30, but your regular clients are going to drop out, not caring to mix with the new element and you are too far from their homes to draw the new crowd except on the occasional showing of some extra-sensational film. You have crowded your house, you have increased your box office receipts, but have you made money? If you draw an extra $30 on Monday and lose $10 on the other five nights of the week, do you show a real gain?

There is a lot more to managing a house than merely showing film.

Has a Conscience.

We are glad that S. E. Wall has a conscience, for it has brought him back to the department after a long absence. We hope that S. A. Arnold, of Mena, also has a conscience. He has been out longer than Mr. Wall has. Anyhow, dropping the matter of conscience, Mr. Wall writes:

> It has been several months since I burdened this department with any of my offerings, principally from the fact that I haven't done anything that I considered worthy of notice, being content to sit back and copy other exhibitors' schemes and plans, until honest to goodness I am almost ashamed to look a Moving Picture World in the face. To atone for these things in a small way, I am sending you herewith inclosed a few copies of my door knob weeklies, which I started running in West Jefferson about the same time Mr. Chaney, of Hillsboro, started his, and have been using them in Plain City since I started there in January. Would like to have you comment on them freely.
> In Plain City I bought an old house that was on its last pins. It had been running six or seven years, with what looked to me like the same equipment. I closed it up and made a clean sweep by putting in a new front, chairs, screen, machine, Wurlitzer Style F instrument, changed the name of the theater to "Wall's Theater" and RAISED the admission to 10 cents, and I am more than satisfied with the results; I get out 500 door knob weeklies and see to it that one is hung on every door knob in town and one or two hung up in every store in town, and I am doing a nice business notwithstanding the fact that I use no posters, while other men starved to death hanging up posters at a 5 cent admission—the opposition house runs on Saturday only, using high class ?? vaudeville, much to my satisfaction.

Did you note that Mr. Wall raised the house out of the rut by cleaning up and charging ten cents? Evidently the people wanted a clean ten cent show and not a dirty five cent one, and Mr. Wall gave them what they wanted. That's management, not luck.

The Specials.

This Door Knob Weekly is the smallest yet, a colored card three by nine inches printed on both sides. One side gives the program and the other an argument and we think the latter side does the house the most good. This stuff runs all the way from Chester Beecroft's immortal "Bill" advertisement to some of the stuff we've written. One slogan is:

> I could get cheaper pictures—but I won't.
> I would get better pictures—but I can't.

This seems to be original:

> WALL'S THEATER
> is not the largest and most elegantly equipped theater ever built, but here are a few things we can say: It is safe, the machine and films are inclosed in an iron booth in compliance with the State fire code, the floor has the proper slope, making every seat a good one; the chairs are roomy and comfortable, not the wobbly armless kind, but good, easy substantial theater chairs; a new

Wurlitzer Model F Orchestrion furnishes the music and a new Edison machine projects a clear, steady picture. A carefully selected program of licensed pictures will be shown every evening except Sunday. To all of this we add courteous treatment. It is a family theater that parents need not hesitate to permit their children to attend, for nothing will ever be shown that could possibly offend anyone.

The modest boast beats brag every time. Start off the tale with the announcement that your house is the best and no one will believe it. Say your house is not the best and they'll think you don't believe it and will read along to see what you are driving at.

Here's another summing up of the situation that others can use:

When you were a kid you had a magnet—every youngster had—you marveled at the way objects of steel were attracted to it—you didn't worry much about the principle of the thing or attempt to analyze why they fairly jumped at the magnet—they did—and that was enough; probably the only thing you noticed was that Johnny Jones had a magnet that would attract pieces of steel that your's wouldn't budge, and you were envious of him because he had a magnet with a greater drawing power than your own.

The same rule applies to the moving picture business. The pictures and the way they are shown are the magnets—the better the picture the more they attract. The average patron of the picture shows doesn't worry much about why the man running the show doesn't make his entertainment attractive—if they don't like the pictures he projects on the screen, they simply don't go—THE MAGNET DOESN'T DRAW.

To be successful, the moving picture man must USE THE BRAINS GOD GAVE HIM and cater to the wants of the public by projecting good, clean, attractive pictures, properly seasoned with good music—HAVE A MAGNET THAT WILL DRAW. That is just what we are doing to the best of our ability and out of the 24 subjects named on this card to be shown this week we believe there are several that are MAGNETS THAT WILL DRAW.

Material such as this makes a more lasting impression than the announcement that next Thursday you will have a particular film. In all of Mr. Wall's advertising, and he has been good enough to send us quite a little of it from time to time, we note that he spends just as much time booming Wall's Theater as someone else's films, while week after week we get four, eight, twelve and even twenty-four page programs with never a line about the house nor a single paragraph that is not the work of some writer for the trade press or the house organs. This is all wrong. You know Mennen's face better than you do his talcum powder and the name of Munyon inevitably suggests a frock-coated figure with uplifted finger, but you go on week after week telling how great Biograph films are or Kay-Bees or Imps and you never say a word about your house. You don't have to print your picture every issue, but say something about your house on every page. Be just as important a figure in your own program as tomorrow's Vitagraph or next week's Warner's Feature. Your house is bigger than four thousand feet of film. Mr. Wall knows it. That's why he shoots into a town and resurrects a dead one with ease and permanency. Are you, with your twelve-page program, going to keep on letting a man from Plain City, Ohio, skin you to death with his little three by nine door-knob dangler. He's a manager. What are you?

Something Good.

Did you see in the recent Kinetogram the new Edison series of announcement subjects? These are short length films running from 28 to 57 feet carrying these captions: "Ladies will please remove their hats." "Someone's baby is crying in the lobby." "Loud talking offends some ears." "Intermission." "A great show to-morrow." "Good night, sweet love," and "Good night." If you do not get the Kinetogram, write the Edison Company. This is not an advertisement, but a tip to you.

Teaches Script Writing.

At the Majestic Theater, Madison, Wis., Manager Fursman is starting an Independent Inquest Club, teaching his patrons how to write scripts. This information we glean from a clipping that does not tell how well qualified Mr. Fursman is to teach the subject, but where there is real knowledge of the work, the idea seems to be a good one. It is good, though, only when conducted by one who can speak with authority.

Huh!

Someone has just discovered that the Ballous, who run the Olympian Theater, have a novel idea in telling the patrons the truth about poor films. The idea was novel some three or four years ago. If we remember rightly that far back, it was started by Mr. Blanchard, of Sunbury, Pa.

Here's Mr. Chaney In Line.

N. E. Chaney, Hillsboro, Ohio, is in line for the ten cent admission. The house has been enlarged to 90 feet in depth, with a present seating capacity of 298, and practically rebuilt, but it is not so much the new house as the better programs, with at least a two-reel every night that leads him to ask—and get—ten cents for four reels. Mr. Chaney was one of the first friends of this department and he has been a live wire for so long that he is getting used to it. We're glad to see him with the progressionists.

Can't Get Together.

Logan O. Cowgill, of the Logan Theater, Delphi, Ind., sends in a couple of his programs for comment and writes that he has built up the house, which had been run down by vaudeville, and is winning out. He wants to get some working understanding with his competitor, but the latter wants it all. As a sample of his wants he promptly copied the program idea when Mr. Cowgill put it out, so now Mr. Cowgill is using the door knob special, a square card, hung diamondwise, with little more than the titles. The titles are set in a heavy gothic that is clear and readable though small and the display is very well done. It is a more attractive offering than his former program.

There is no reason why two managers in one town should hate each other. A working agreement will not check enterprise and it will avoid friction. In many places opposing managements even plan advertising wars that create a lot of excitement locally and makes business good for both. Mr. Cowgill seems to be working in the right spirit.

We would suggest that on his special he change his line from "Three shows every evening, starting at 7 p.m.," to "Three shows every evening, at seven, eight and nine," or whatever the exact time may be. That is about all the comment the special seems to call for.

What Do You Think?

The Brand Advertising Company, Springfield, Ohio, sends in their program published for the Chakeres Amusement Company, running the Majestic and Princess theaters, and wants to know what we think of it.

The cover comes from the Exhibitors' Publishing Company, that makes a specialty of colored cover programs, but the inside sheets seem to be locally printed, at least the copy to hand does not seem to be the print of the company. Outside of the first page and the two weekly program pages, one for each house, the arrangement is poor, the films being written up in this fashion:

WHIFFLE'S NIGHT OUT.

In which he has a decided surprise.
At the Majestic, Wednesday, April 22

Whiffles has a very good excuse to go to a game his friends have arranged, but on the way he gets a tip that his wife is going to entertain a gentleman friend in the garden that evening. He "beats it" for home and there is where he gets his surprise.

To the chance reader the use of a dash between the title and date and the reading paragraph suggests two items. To anyone pages of this style of print is trying. It would be better to run it something like this:

"WHIFFLE'S NIGHT OUT"

Whiffles has a very good excuse to go to a game his friends have arranged, but on the way he gets a tip that his wife is going to entertain a gentleman friend in the garden that evening. He "beats it" for home, and there is where he gets his surprise.

At the Majestic, Wednesday, April 22.

Dashes should be used only between paragraphs and not between headline and the story. That is all right for longer matter, but these six to ten line readers are too brief to need the short dash.

But here is a more vital point they raise. They write:

We are still a little cramped for space, but we hope to enlarge the book in the near future. Which would you consider the most valuable: Say we show one two-reel picture and one one-reel on a certain day; would it be the best policy to publish a short synopsis on both the two-reeler and the one-reel picture, or would it be better to publish a complete story on the two-reel picture and not publish anything more than the name and cast of characters on the one-reeler.

Now the program runs a page to a house with from one to three lines for each title. We don't see that it is necessary to pick up in the reading pages this same information for a repeat. Instead of that we think that we would give running stories to the leading features, not ever giving the complete story of the film, but telling about the film rather than merely reproducing the story of the subject. These stories should run a column or even make the turn into the next column. It is not necessary to tell all the story of all releases. It is never well to tell how it comes out, because then the effort of the producer to give suspense is nullified, tell enough about the leading stories to get the people interested. Then they'll turn to the program division and see what else is on the bill for that day. Leave something to the imagination and the screen and make the text readable through snappy paragraphs.

The paper has made a good start, but we believe that these changes will help. We know that merely being a section of the possible audience of these houses, the cut up appearance of the pages would not tempt us to read. As the old vaudeville man said of the dictionary, the chapters are too short. Get people interested in pictures in general and they'll be more interested in your particular pictures and read about these, too.

Got Us Guessing

Here is a clipping from the Third Street Theater program, Easton, Pa.:

Baby Pictures.

We are going to celebrate our first birthday anniversary soon, and you know how a youngster likes a birthday. We'll be just one year old on May 15th. There are lots of babies in Easton and Phillipsburg just about our age and we hope to grow up with them. Now, we propose we celebrate together. If their parents will send us photographs of the "kids," we will reproduce them and it will help us in our plan to show what one year will do.

All photos will be returned after we have cuts made of them. Please send or bring them without delay. Kindly attach the full name of the child and the address of the parents.

We do not know what the Third Street is going to do with the cuts, but a souvenir program generously illustrated with good pictures of other one-year-old babies will be mighty popular even with those who have no entrant in the collection. And then, a year later, we would try to get new pictures of the same babies and contrast the greater growth of the house with the advancement of the kiddies, printing the one-year cuts again for the purposes of comparison. That's what this looks like to us, and if it is not what the Third Street has in mind it does not alter the fact that it is a good idea. We hope that a couple of complimentary tickets will be returned with the photographs.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

The Working Mood.

EVERY now and then something crops up in a letter about not being in the mood for work or lacking inspiration or something of that sort suggesting that inspiration is the first great requisite of the writer. That isn't a reason, it's an excuse. The real writer doesn't wait for inspiration to come to him. He goes after inspiration. He knows, if he knows anything, that the only thing to do to find success is to form the habit of work. This may come a little hard at first, but it is not easy to form any good habit, not one-tenth as easy as letting a bad habit develop itself, but the habit can be formed through persistent endeavor and, once formed, the habit sticks. The hod carrier does not wait for inspiration before he tackles the brick pile or the mortar bed. The only inspiration he needs is the fact that he gets paid only when he works. The creation of ideas is a matter of a finer organization than the personally conducted tour of a hod of bricks, but the idea is precisely the same.

If you write stories solely for your own amusement, and with no idea of making a business of it, you can talk about inspiration and write only when your lamp of genius burns brightly, but if you want eventually to make a business of story creating, you can't afford to loaf around until the laggard inspiration comes. After a time, if you persist, you'll get the habit and then you'll write a decent story when you'd much rather be going fishing.

There has been an awful lot of rot written about inspiration. And some things that have been written have been wrongly construed as advising the inspirational method, but getting right down to facts, the business of story writing is like the business of carrying the hod. It must be engaged in regularly and in spite of any drawbacks. Don't admit there are drawbacks. Lots of Monday mornings, and at other times as well, the hod carrier hates the idea of chasing a collection of mortar up a ladder and climbing down with the empty hod, but it's his work and if he is not a loafer he does that work. He doesn't wait to be inspired. Lots of times the practiced writer loathes the idea of doing a lot of work, but he does it because it is his business.

Form the habit of writing one script a week. Then form the habit of writing two, if you can, and then three. Don't write too much or you will go stale and be unable to write at all, but find your limitations as to output and set your standard just inside of those limitations. Sometimes you will be able to rush the story through and there will be other times when you have to fight for each scene, but if you fight and win the victory will be easier next time.

Roy McCardell lately stated that only the trained newspaper man or author had found real success in photoplay work. This is an error. We know a lot of people who make money in appreciable quantities and with cheering regularity who never have written for the papers or magazines, but in every case they have formed the habit of methodical work first. It is this habit that has made the way easy for the regular writer.

Beauty Wants.

Richard Willis writes that the American wants for its Beauty brand good legitimate comedies (without slapstick features) and dramas. These should be small cast plays featuring Miss Margarita Fischer and should be sent direct to Harry Pollard, Beauty Films, Santa Barbara, Cal.

One Copyright Attitude.

Here is a singularly sane letter from a writer who is doing well both with fiction and photoplay. It is a great factor toward success to have a contented mind, and this letter is worth reproducing:

> I am moved to write what we have had to say about the copyright idea that seems to loom so unnecessarily large to so many of the apparently inexperienced authors that are doing photoplay writing. Just as a question I submitted the situation to my lawyer stepfather and he remarked that the editors of the companies would be apt to say, "We are no more thieves than magazine editors are. Magazine stories are never copyrighted." Let the infants stumble along, and maybe sometime they will learn to walk. Daddy says proof of ownership of a script has been proved out by the decision in the del Ruth case—that is all that is necessary, so why all this bother? And the copyrighted scripts would be classed at once as the work of an author who would probably cause trouble in any dealings, and passed up at once. I would hate to see the expression of an editor's face if a magazine story came in ticketed and a Burns Detective Agency plate, so to speak, on the cover, then: "subimtted for consideration"! It's an insult to the trade.

Criticism.

A recent correspondent asked if we thought that it paid to have his scripts criticised by some writer who sold plays, and if you read the Inquiries each week you'll remember that we said that it did if the writer knew what he was talking about and could tell the other man understandably. Criticism is of value only when thoroughly intelligent. We know one master of technique who cannot tell why or how he gains his effects. Instinctively he knows that to do a thing in a certain way will be the best way to do that thing, but he cannot tell the reasons for his work, for he never studied them out. He is a successful writer, but he would not be a success as a critic and more than once we have had to spank him on the wrist for telling others how to do certain things and telling them wrong.

But the great trouble with criticism is that the beginner is too apt to lean on his critic instead of finding his own footing. Nothing can replace personal study and planning, and criticism, if too freely and frequently given, is apt to prove more of a hindrance than a help.

Self Defense.

Eustace Hale Ball confesses that he wrote his book on photoplay writing just to protect himself from the friends who wanted to know just how to write, and while he was making this confession in the lobby of his office building there was a woman waiting upstairs to tell him that she knew his wife's cousin's sister's aunt-in-law and would he please, etc. It certainly is funny (sometimes) the way people think that all they have to do is ask, be told and then go ahead and get rich.

No one ever wrote thirty scripts in thirty days and thirty more in the next thirty days without spending the third thirty days in the insane asylum. We think that our own record of eight scripts in five days and eight more in the next seven will stand for some time, but we knew that there was a sea trip and a week's rest at the other end or we would not have started. It is better to write and sell ten than write fifty and sell five.

In His Shoe.

A correspondent who says he is going to be one of us regulars one of these days, offers this suggestion: He finds he has plot germs come to him after he has gone to bed, so he puts a pad and a pencil in one of his shoes at the head of the bed and when the idea comes he writes it down. This is not as funny as it seems to be at first glance. Even if you cannot read your own writing in the morning, the mechanical action of writing helps to impress the matter on your brain. We lost an idea only the other night and it may be six months before we get it back.

Her Creed.

We wish that every prospective photoplay writer could read this succinct statement of a young woman who has tried and is still trying. Read it and pass it to someone when you hear that "it's easy to write photoplays." Honest, it is not. It does not take grace of literary expression, but it does require other qualities just as exacting.

> For the sake of the army of "beginners" in photoplay writing, I would like to briefly state the conclusions formed by "one of them" after one year's study and experience:—
> FIRST—Photoplay writing requires as much ability as any form of literature. The day of mediocrity is past, film companies are substituting quality for quantity and unless the amateur feels himself competent enough in plot construction and development to compete with the rapidly increasing number of noted writers who have joined the ranks of photoplaywrights, he had better stay at the vocation nature intended him for, and not allow himself to be deluded by school advertisements of "easy money," "quick returns," etc.
> SECOND—The beginner-"Free-lance" is restricted by a thousand rules regarding setting and theme. The film companies have each their staff writers to whom they assign the type of play desired, and unless the outsider produces a script better than—or at least as good as the best—of the regular scripts, he can stay an "outsider." Naturally, film companies get tired of wading through thousands of unavailable scripts. Can't blame them. This photoplay writing has been so grossly misrepresented as "easy," it is time the "beginner" knew the truth. The few possessing real ability will stick to it and eventually "land," the doubtful ones should submit their scripts to some competent critic and thank God if they are told the truth about their "ability."
> One encouraging statement to balance this "cold-water-slinging": With patient plodding and much hard thinking I have managed to dispose of four out of fourteen scripts. I shall "stick" to the finish.

Expert Testimony.

Here is a line from Homer Croy, the humorous writer of the Leslie-Judge Company who is taking a camera with him on his trip around the world and sending stuff back to the Universal. He went to Los Angeles to learn to do his own operating and this is what he writes:

> Before coming out to the Pacific Coast to work in a moving picture studio to learn the business before starting on my trip around the world for the Universal, I tried to learn something about script writing so that I would not appear such an ignoramus when I met up with the scenario men. I had seen scenarios written by amateurs that were coated with such words as register, flash, cut-back, bust, vision and fadeaway so that I mastered them all to use when I got to Los Angeles.
> When I arrived at the Universal plant I was astonished to find that these expressions were used by the scenario writers or directors very little if at all. About the only time I hear "register" is when the editor reads it in an amateur's script when he is going over the manuscript with one of the directors to consider buying it. When you get on the firing line you find that the real makers of pictures use the common every-day words to make their meaning plain. When they want to show that the hero hates the villain they simply say, "Wilson shows hate toward villain."
> James Dayton, the scenario editor of the Universal, tells me that he is in the market for all kinds of plays except costume and adaptions. By costume he means, of course, period plays—Colonial productions, for instance.

Will Resume.

Julian Louis Lamothe, Coroner for New Orleans, writes that he had to drop the Inquests during carnival time, but that he hopes to resume them shortly.

Funny But True.

We print this partly because it is funny and partly because it is not:

For the economical portion of your readers I have a scheme for obtaining free paper clips, that has to date proven infallible. Here it is: At the top of the first page of your manuscript place in capital letters, or use red ribbon if you have it, the sentence PLEASE USE NO CLIPS. Be sure to place this in a prominent place, leave your script unclipped and send it to any of the motion picture companies. Unless your manuscript is accepted it will return with one, and in many cases, two, clips attached. Now remove the clips, heat a flatiron, place a stout piece of paper over the script and you will find that the marks will iron out and leave the sheets as smooth as ever. You now have some perfectly good clips to use on your carbon copies and other matter, and also a perfectly unmarked script to send out to gather more clips for you. You will find results very satisfactory, as the percentage of companies who do not indulge in this practice is very small indeed.

In our own editorial practice we invariably threw the clip into the waste basket because it took too much time to put it back just where the author had placed it and to put in anywhere else would mar the script. We sent out a script the other day with one clip and got it back with three. Each of the three was marking the script in a new place and it was cheaper to pay to have the script recopied than to take it home and iron it (through wonders can be accomplished with a hot flatiron).

Will editors please read and reflect and then save their clips and the authors' tempers?

Each Week.

A correspondent wants us to print the synopses of stories we consider extra good. She can find all the synopses for the week in each issue of the paper and can determine for herself which are good and which are not. There is no better way of studying plotting than to read all of the synopses each week and study their possibilities, and a study of the bad will prove as useful as a dissection of the good. Make that a part of your regular study work and you'll be surprised to find how it will help you to form your own standard.

Plain Careless.

Don't be careless. You cannot afford to be if you are a novice and you'll know better if you are an old hand. Lately we saw a script, one scene of which was laid on a lawn. A character entered and wanted to mail a letter, so he pressed a button and a servant entered and took the letter. The writer did not think. He had a letter to dispose of. Call a servant. In the absorption in the fact that he needed a servant he forgot that he was on the lawn, so he pressed a button. He knew better than to do a thing like that, but he didn't take the trouble to stop to think. That's no worse than a lot of other mistakes made and all through the same lack of willingness to study every minute detail, and yet, until the grasp of detail comes naturally to you through this close study, you cannot be too careful.

Skeletons and Bones.

You've read over and over again that all authors should keep a note book for the skeletons of plots, but did you ever keep just stray bones? You may not be able to think up a whole skeleton and yet get a lot of bones for your digging. File them away, too, a pretty love scene, some new form of accident, a unique comedy situation. Some day you can dig up the bones again and build them into skeletons and get checks.

All Around You.

Plots are all around you, if you have clear mental vision. The other day an elevator man in our office building (not one that we own, but one in which we hire an office) stayed home for reasons not wholly unconnected with things that came in kegs and bottles the night before. There didn't seem to be much of a story there, but there was—a cute little story about a stenographer who stayed home sick and for the first time the boss missed her and realized what she meant to him.

Maybe Not.

Maybe an editor says a fool because he does not buy your scripts, and then, again, he may not be. We've just been explaining this to a star writer and thought perhaps the assurance might interest you. There are a lot of studios that buy from twenty or thirty writers regularly and who never buy from the outside, figuring that this "stable" can keep them going. Now and then an extra good script will be passed over to a director for work and another name will be added to the regulars, but if these regulars write stuff as good or almost as good as yours, they will have the inside track. You may be an accident with your single script and it is to the editorial interest to keep the others going. When you have proved yourself, then you may belong.

Like a Boil.

Did you ever have an idea that was like a boil? A script that had to come to a head before you could have any peace. Most writers have these ideas and the wise man gets it out of his system as soon as he can by writing it. Many of these ideas the writers knows perfectly well to be impossible as photoplays, but he doesn't argue that question. The story is in his system and must come out.

"Lacks Strength."

Many studios are fond of ascribing a lack of strength in a story as a reason for rejection because ninety-nine times out of a hundred this is the best reason. Then we get asked what is meant by the expression.

Suppose that you have a bottle of fine old brandy; a strong and potent drink. Suppose you put an ounce of this in a ten ounce glass and fill it up with water. The resulting mixture is only one tenth as strong as the brandy by itself, because there is one ounce of brandy and nine ounces of water. That's a very simple proposition, yet no more simple than the same "lacks strength" as applied to photoplay scripts. You have not enough plot to fill your footage and instead of a thousand feet of plot-action you have a hundred feet of action and nine hundred other feet of acting. Action is the acting that tells the story. Mere acting fills in.

If you wanted to get a stronger drink of brandy and water, you would add more brandy. If you want a stronger plot, you add more plot to your acting. It sounds simple, but it is not as simple as it sounds.

You may have written six pages of scenes that can be boiled down to the simple statement that "John comes to the city and makes a success." Very naturally the editor tells you that the story lacks strength. Now suppose that you add some stuff and the story sums up: "Henry comes to the city and makes a success. His mother comes, he is ashamed of her countrified appearance and tries to conceal her from his wife and their rich guests. She is broken hearted." That's better, because there is more to think about. Outside of the fact that it has been done fifty times or more, you might sell a story like that. Possibly you can even now, if you give it a new twist. But how shall you get the new twist?

It's very simple. Add the fact that Henry's wife also has a poor old mother whom she loves very dearly. Henry has shown such an aversion to anything that is not "good form," that she has maintained a fiction of her fashionable parents, thinking to please him, while Henry, on his side, has concealed the fact of his mother's rusticity from his wife thinking that it would displease her. He shunts his mother into an ante-room, and there the wife finds her, not knowing for the moment that it is Henry's mother. Because the woman is old and unsophisticated, the wife is attracted to her—she is so much like her own mother. Henry finds them together and thinks that he has lost his wife's love, but finds instead that he has at last brought her perfect happiness by making it possible for her to confess the deception. The wife's mother is sent for and the story closes with the two grandmothers fussing over their small grandson while the husband and wife look on with full hearts.

Now you can shoot the story to the editor and it is less likely that he will say it still lacks strength. Don't write this particular story, for many will in spite of this warning, but work up your own story by adding a germane plot to what you already have. It may come hard at first, but with practice it will become surprisingly easy to work up your plot to the requisite strength before you make even your first draft on paper.

Inquiries

NOTE—No inquiries can be replied to by mail. Look for your answer here. No question can be replied to that necessitates the handling of the manuscript. Always give your name and address. It will not be published. A list of addresses, to which photoplays should be sent, will be supplied on receipt of a STAMPED AND SELF ADDRESSED ENVELOPE. The request should be made to the paper direct and not to this department, nor to the Answers Man.

WIRELESS.—A courteous note to the editor would probably bring the information if a return envelope is inclosed. Many stories are purchased and never used. We do not know about the script end of the company you mention.

G. Z.—Try Keystone, Mutual and Frontier.

P. G. S.—You state the cast of characters and write the action in action by scenes. Better get a copy of "Technique of the Photoplay" and get started right.

M. K. F.—It looks as though you were headed in the wrong direction on your play. A three-act stage play runs about two hours and a half to three hours. Three reels would run less than an hour and the silent production of a spoken play would be exceedingly tiresome. A stage play alone, prepared for pictures will run a hundred scenes or more if told in action, and then it does not look in the least like a stage play. Better drop multiple reels until you have mastered the one reel first. In the drama of the stage the act is the grand division. Each act may consist of two or more scenes, though this is not usual in modern plays.

C. F. D.—Been holding your letter while the K. B. identifier got busy, but he has to confess he does not know the player yet. In "The Path of Genius" Charles Ray was Ruskin and Gordon Mullins the tavern keeper.

A. S. H.—Inquest Circles are formed for the study of photoplay writing. The qualification for membership is merely a desire to write plays. Send a self addressed stamped envelope repeating your request for the address of the Circle in your city.

B. C.—Better write for the second script you speak of. Let the other lie for another four weeks. It is an unreasonable position, but even after eight weeks editors grow peevish when queried. We have scripts out that date back to February and March of last year, but we know they are safe where they are.

AMERICAN.—The script has probably been sent to the editor. Better wait. The American treats the authors nicely.

RUBEENA.—Why this painful silence?

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scrits.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

By mail postpaid. Add ten cents if registration is desired.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

17 Madison Avenue - - New York City

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Operators' Union Directory, I. A. T. S. E.

NOTICE:—Each union is entitled to have its roster of officers, meeting nights, etc., listed here once per year, free of cost. Preserve this list as it will not be republished. The mail address of the secretary should be included, and the address of regular meeting place, if any.

Local No. 572, Vincennes, Indiana.

E. Sparrow, president; William Brown, vice-president; H. F. Hawley, secretary; Ben Corlein, secretary-treasurer; H. Corbett, sargeant-at-arms.

Manufacturers' Notice.

It is an established rule of the Moving Picture World and of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until such articles have been demonstrated to a member of our staff. In case of apparatus pertaining to projection this means the editor of this department.

Imortant Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending 4 cents, stamps, (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay.

The first seventy-four questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form. They may be obtained by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy. You may be surprised at the number of questions you can't answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 31.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Permission to use the contributor's name must accompany each answer, otherwise only the name of the city will be used. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

If your employer were to purchase a second-hand motor-generator set, or a motor or generator, how would you determine "which was which" in connecting up the generator and motor, there being no electrician to be had in your small town? How would you connect an a. c. motor to the line? What is meant by a "starting compensator?" Give sketch and explanatory directions for connecting a three-phase compensator and motor. Explain why a "starting box" is necessary with motors, and if it is necessary with all motors. If motor and generator were separate, how would you figure the size of the pulleys? How would you know if the motor was heavy enough to carry the generator without overloading the motor?

Roll of Honor.

The Roll of Honor on Question 25 is fairly ample, and yet the replies, as a whole, have been perhaps further away from correct than on any other one question. Out of over four hundred replies the following are those which were fairly correct, although none of them gave answers which I would consider as covering the proposition fully and correctly. W. S. James, Camden, New Jersey; Harry T. Dobson, Toronto, Canada; Seattle, Washington; Harry W. Seward, Reading, Pennsylvania; Boston, Massachusetts (2); Jos. H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; A. Glasnapp, Bowen, N. Dakota; Denver, Colorado; Chicago, Illinois (2); L. B. Minges, Lestershire, New York; L. S. Usher, Winnipeg, Canada; and S. S. Holt, Marshalltown, Iowa.

The answers of Usher, Minges, Dobson and Smith were very good, as was also one of the Chicago replies. The others were partly correct and partly in error. I have selected the reply of O. N. Williams, Lake City, Iowa, mainly for the reason he brings out a great number of points, all of them of more or less importance, though very likely some of his deductions may start arguments. But that, however, will be all the better.

Reply to Question No. 25.

By O. N. Williams, Lake City, Iowa.

The question:

Suppose your entire theater consumed a total of 5000 watts, and that the owner came into possession of a 70 volt, 200 ampere dynamo, and an 8 h.p. kerosene or gasoline engine, which he believes might be utilized to supply current for the theater. He asks your advice and opinion. You have already asked for a raise in salary, basing the increase on your ability. What would your answer be? Generator is in excellent condition, as is the engine, and former is compound-wound.

Note:—Now, don't swell up and say: "This is not the operator's business," for, you will be wrong. Chief operators in cities, and many operators in smaller towns will have to handle these plants in the future, and many of them are doing it right now. Chief operators in cities have men to run the projectors, as a rule, they only working relief and overseeing things. They get more salary than ordinary shift operators, too. And, anyhow, whether the operator actually handles the plant or not, he ought, by all means, to know these things.

The answer:

If my opinion were asked as per question 25 I would decide that the outfit was not practical, owing to the lack of power of the engine. Figuring on a basis of 100% efficiency for the dynamo it would require the energy of an engine of approximately 7 h.p. to develop 5000 watts. I believe, however, that in selecting an engine to deliver 5000 watts at 70 volts, I would "play safe" and advise the purchase of at least a 12 h.p. engine. In a case such as this we must take into consideration the fact that the efficiency of dynamos runs all the way from 65% to 85% and, while some show lower efficiency than 65, and some perhaps even higher than 85, still I believe I would figure on a 65% basis. I would also figure that under normal conditions the engine itself would fall considerably below its rating. A large majority of the small kerosene or gasoline engines now on the market are overrated as to power, also the efficiency of installation would have much to do with the result. Summing the whole matter up I think I would recommend that my employer dispose of the 8 h.p. engine and purchase one of 12 h.p., of the throttling governed type—never a hit or miss. I would also suggest the advisability of installing this plant on a good, solid, concrete foundation; that great care should be exercised in properly lining the engine with the generator, and that the distance between pulley centers (assuming it to be a belt driven rig) be at least six times the diameter of the driving pulley. I note the generator is compound-wound, and this is as it should be. My own personal preference would be a generator slightly over-compounded, so as to overcome the tendency most small plants have to drop below voltage as the load increases. This is due to the fact that practically all engines show a decided tendency to slacken speed as the load comes on. I would therefore advise that the dynamo be over-compounded as far as practical, to overcome this trouble. And right here let me add the statement, though somewhat irrelevant to the question, that I am with you on the 70 volt proposition. I have used 60, 65, 70 and 110 volt generators during the past five years, and am thoroughly satisfied that 70 is just right.

I must comment on one thing in this reply, and that is where brother Williams says that the outfit is not practical, owing to lack of power in the engine. I do not think he meant to put it quite that strong. The outfit can hardly be said to be impractical, though it might be inefficient. I would also like to say that I think brother Williams is figuring pretty low when he puts generator efficiency at 65%; I should say that 80% was plenty low enough. But if he takes the efficiency of the outfit—generator and engine combined, he probably would be pretty close to the truth. Brother James brought out one point which no one else touched on. He asked whether the question meant, when speaking of engine power, "brake horse-power" or "rated horse-power." This is quite an important point indeed, since brake horse-power means the true power developed at the rim of the engine pulley, whereas rated horse-power might mean something very different from that.

Halp! Halp! Halp!

T. O. Reid, Chaplain of the Ohio State Penitentiary, Columbus, Ohio, writes:

In recognition of the moral effect of moving pictures of the higher order, our institution has purchased a machine to be used in connection with the Sunday Chapel service. I would be glad to get into communication with some of the nearby exchanges, who might feel disposed to donate the use of a film occasionally when they could do so without any loss. We have a number of high class operators here, and can guarantee expert handling, and that the film will be returned in good condition.

Haw, haw, haw! And likewise Good Night! Comment would be superfluous. Ohio operators will kindly rise to the occasion and explain with voluble and satisfying explanation: "We have a number of high class operators here!" Again I say: Good night!

Motor Trouble.

L. P. Lewis, Kirbyville, Texas, writes:

My Power's Six-A motor has developed a peculiar trouble. It is 18 h.p., 230 volt d. c., and has been running fine for six months. Lately it has developed a tendency to speed up five times faster than it should. Can you tell me where the trouble can be located?

No, I do not think I can brother Lewis. In the first place your "five times faster" is, I think, a very great exaggeration. There are several things which might cause the trouble, but I would prefer to let our electrician correspondents figure the matter out, and see what they can get out of it. I have, meanwhile, arranged for brother Lewis to be fixed up.

New York Examination.

Through the courtesy of the engineers of the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity, and chief examiner George R. Brown, I recently visited the examination rooms and listened to several examinations of applicants for operator's licenses; John Domerhuizer and Richard D. Weeks doing the examining. The examiners have, on an average, about 300 on the waiting list. They examine something like sixty a week, passing an average of from 10 to 12 percent.

The apparatus in the examining rooms is all bona fide; by this I mean there are no tricks used. Also it is not the practice of the examiner to ask anything in the nature of catch questions. If you will stop and consider for a moment you will, I think, see that there is no earthly reason why the examiners should wish to turn a competent man down. As a matter of fact it is the other way, since an unsuccessful man will come back for re-examination and thus cause them more work. The apparatus is not at all complicated, and the questions asked are designed simply to bring out the man's real knowledge of the subject. Judging by the examples I witnessed the knowledge of a good many of the applicants leaves very much to be desired. The Edison three-wire system seems to be one of the main stickers, and but few have anything like a complete knowledge of its working.

I have always been of the opinion that the examination was fair; this opinion was based partly on the proposition that there was no reason for it to be anything else, and partly formed by questioning of operators who had passed. Since listening to the examination, (the examiners did not know I was to be present until I walked into the room, therefore there would not have been any "frameup", even if it was desired) and examining the apparatus I am prepared to say that my previous opinion is fully sustained.

The man who possesses real knowledge has no need to fear the New York examination, but the man who has simply learned something by heart might as well save himself the trouble of making application.

Enlarging Theater.

V. A. Warren, Massena, New York, writes:

> My theater is 34 x 105 feet, one story building, ceiling 17 feet, the operating room outside of the theater proper. We are projecting a 14-foot picture at 105 feet, using Power's Six A, 40 ampere mercury arc rectifier and mirroroide screen, its lower edge six feet from the floor. With 35 amperes d. c. at the arc we get a fine picture, and I do not wish to sacrifice this in any way through the proposed improvements. Am beginning an addition, 30 x 34 feet which will give a total length of 135 feet. This also will be the new throw. Would you say that an 18-foot picture will be large enough at this distance, especially for those standing some 20 or 30 feet back of this in the entrance? Moreover, I expect to tear down this entrance and extend the theater through to the street some day, so that the standing room would be about 170 feet from the screen. Can you tell me what size picture would be best at 135 and what at 170 feet? Will I have any difficulty in projecting 135 feet with my present equipment? The operating room being in the centre of the room, so that there is no distortion. Am using a 50 ampere tube and the General Electric Company advises me to overload the rectifier up to 50 amperes. Am using a special Gundlach Lens. By scaling out the size of the picture this same lens would give me, by extending the projection lines, an 18-foot picture. Would this same lens be suitable for the new 135-foot throw? Perfect projection being the first consideration, regardless of cost.

Well, brother Warren, to go fully and completely into your matter would require a considerable amount of space, since your proposition is somewhat out of the ordinary. To answer briefly you can use your present lens, if it only gives you an 18-foot picture, in the new throw, but your condensers should be pretty carefully matched to the lens in order to get the best effect. I think, taking everything into consideration, you will find the 18-foot picture to be more satisfactory than a larger one. However, when you extend your theater so as to have a total space of 170 feet it would be largely a matter for experiment to determine whether the 18-foot or a 20-foot one would be most satisfactory. For the present throw I would confine myself to the 18-foot picture, and for this I would use the full capacity of my rectifier.

Some Questions.

Sumas, Washington, writes:

> Would you please explain the following terms: (1) Spherical aberration, and chromatic aberration. (2) What is the difference between a step-down transformer and a step-up transformer, and how would you connect? (3) How would you change a compound-wound motor into a compound-wound generator? (4) How would you connect a single arc with two resistances so that the lamp could be used for stereopticon or motion picture? (5) How could you connect with one variable rheostat?

These matters are, for the most part, elementary, and have been gone over time, and again in the department. They are, except query 3, fully explained in the Handbook. Spherical aberration is that quality of the lens which prevents its bringing the rays to a point, as is illustrated in Fig. 140, page 352 of the Handbook. Chromatic aberration is that quality of the lens which tends to separate white light into its color values, as you will find in the Handbook under Lenses, page 351. The difference between the step-up and step-down transformer is fully explained in the Handbook; as is also your question No. 4 on page 376, Fig. 156. As to the connection with the variable rheostat, you would just connect the rheostat in the usual way, and switch the lever back to cut in all the resistance when on the stereo. As to the compound-wound motor being turned into a compound-wound generator, you would simply run the motor, by belt or otherwise, from an outside source of power, and it would then become a generator, but you would have to shift your brushes a considerable distance around the commutator, since the distortion of the magnetic lines would be in the opposite direction. However, I do not think a motor would make an effective generator, or vice versa.

And now you will probably say that I am trying to force you to buy a Handbook. Well, you can look at it that way if you want to, but I take the position that it is cheaper for you to buy that book and get those, and hundreds of other questions answered for you, for $2.50, than it is for me to use space worth several times more, if figured at advertising rates, answering them, particularly when they have been already answered in the department many, many times.

In Error.

Kansas City, Missouri, writes:

> The operator at the Victor Theater in this city projects his picture at a side angle, and gets the same results as if it was thrown at right angles to the screen. Please explain. His picture is very clear, but his speed leaves much to be desired. Am mailing you a copy of our Moving Picture Advertiser, which is mailed free to managers and operators every month. What do you think of it?

You are in error in saying that the result is "the same." That is an optical impossibility. It cannot be did without a make-up, and there is not any make-up for that particular proposition. What you probably really mean is that there is no side-keystone effect, and this is accomplished by filling in the upper and lower edges of the aperture with solder and filing the opening carefully until the top and bottom lines of the light are parallel on the screen. Or, if the keystone effect be very slight, it may be accomplished by filing the aperture slightly without the solder; but you cannot do this to any considerable extent without showing the dividing lines of the picture. Also it is possible to get a special aperture plate slightly smaller than the regular one and file that, but the distortion of the picture itself remains just the same, and you will also find that the width of the picture is slightly out of proportion to its height, and, while it may not be discernible, the figures on one side of the screen will be magnified more than those on the other. According to your sketch his machine sets to the right of the centre of the screen. Therefore, using the centre of the picture as a guide, the figures on the right of the screen would be magnified slightly less, and those on the left of the screen slightly more than objects in its center. The publication mentioned is put out by The U. S. Slide Company, of Kansas City. It is designed wholly and entirely for advertising their slides. It is no doubt an excellent medium, provided it be given a wide circulation. There are twelve pages of illustrations of slides.

From Brother La Grow.

L. C. La Grow, Albany, New York, writes:

> I realize that the department is crowded, but inasmuch as I am in for a spanking anyhow I might as well get licked soundly. Brother Criswell sends in an explanatory sketch which does not explain. The size of the aperture and the length of the lens tube would eliminate any halo caused by condenser lenses or too long focus, and Mr. Halo is the mischief maker. I am willing to back everything I said in February 14th issue, except that I used the term "focus" whereas I should have said "convergence point". However, my effort fell flat. I thought that letter would bring out a storm of argument, and that out of it we might all select a bit of knowledge. I wonder how many of the boys saw the eclipse of the moon Wednesday night, March 11th, and thought of it from an optical standpoint? How many of them know the cause of penumbra? Brother Armstrong's work and sketch were excellent, though he has only amplified rules with which we are all (? Ed.) familiar. What we want most of all are rules for our entire lens system, which will be as arbitrary as the rules he has so ably illustrated. I am not averse to being spanked by brother Criswell, Jimmy, or any one else, provided they apply it to my mentality and warm up my brain. Brother Hickey has the correct dope on that generator I mentioned in answer to question 10. With regard to my defense of the operator you and I for once, agree. Paradox? No! We agree that any operator who wilfully races his machine, and whose light is mostly composed of shadows and rainbows, and whose framing rod is used to hold up a window is no earthly good to himself or anyone else. We agree that criticism of projection is always beneficial. I like and solicit criticism. It sometimes hurts my pride, but it always helps my pocket book. But my argument is that the manager is always to blame for poor projection, and especially for racing, by reason of the fact that if he demands and really wishes good projection, and is willing to pay for it, he is able to get it. Why reserve all the spleen for the operator and all the honey for the manager? I have spoken! and will not encroach again, as I know the department is overcrowded.

I roast the operator when he needs it, and by that same token, brother La Grow, if you will look back through the department you will find that Mr. Manager has been handed a goodly number of red hot side swipes himself, so you just back up on that honey and spleen thing, tie yourself to a gate post and stand hitched.

I sincerely trust that brother La Grow will not crawl back into his shell and pull the shell in after him. It is true that the department is overcrowded, but, there is nevertheless, always room for good stuff, and that is the kind brother La Grow sends in, although we don't always agree. However, this department is not run on the lovey-dovey "you tickle me and I'll tickle you" plan. It would not be worth the ink it takes to print it if it was. As to the Criswell article, why I guess I will let you, Criswell and James fight that matter out for yourselves. As regards the "storm of argument," there were quite a number of letters, but for one reason or another they were not available for publication as against other matter, and I have cut down everything I could just as far as I possibly could until I got brother James' long article on lenses through.

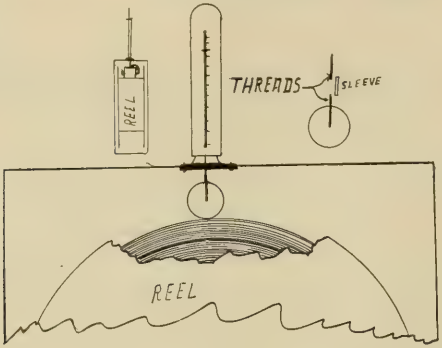
Wire Terminal.

The L. B. Adkins Company, Columbus, Ohio, is putting out a wire terminal known as the "Little Giant." An illustration will be found in its advertisement. I have not seen this terminal, but judging from the illustration it is simple and quite strong. Therefore it probably is effective.

An Upper Magazine Gauge.

R. W. Case, Narberth, Pennsylvania, writes:

Attached find sketch of an upper magazine gauge, which I think is very handy. I hope you will not decide it is too complicated, but that it is easily made and effective. The roller which rests on the film is made of wood and is covered with a soft material.



The upright rod is a motorcycle spoke, with the nipple of same used as a sleeve. The face plate is brass, with the little pointer coming through from the back which travels up and down as shown, so that by glancing at this gauge the operator can instantly determine just how much film he has on the upper reel. You say you are coming to Philadelphia next summer. Why put it off so long? Hope you will have a chance to come out to my little place, and, if so, I will be glad to see you. Am not at all afraid of your finding poor projection here. Am still at the Rittenhouse, 53rd and Haverford Avenue, West Philadelphia. We are installing a Wagner motor generator set (Don't you mean converter? Ed.) next week. What about it? Is it O. K.? It is one of their latest models. I have a manager who is there with the goods, so far as improvements are concerned. I certainly feel for that poor operator on the Pacific Coast who is working for a tight-wad.

That gauge is a mighty neat little trick brother Case, and I have no doubt that many operators will get busy making one. It is the simplest thing I have seen yet for the purpose. As for the Philadelphia visit: I am going to motor down there, but I don't want anybody to know when I am coming until I have been there for one day. Then I'll put the boys wise, and maybe read them what I have prepared, whereupon all will be peace or a riotous riot, according to what I find. I have some good reports on the Wagner converter, but they have not as yet, however, demonstrated the efficiency of their device to the department, and until they do I cannot consistently recommend it. I will try and visit you when I am down there, but cannot make any promises.

Carbon Trouble.

Fred J. Marklein, Brooklyn, New York, writes:

Of late I have noticed a number of complaints about carbons burning poorly, that is flaming, etc. In each case the writer claims to have tried various brands of carbons and to have clean connections—all of which may be true. Also they claim that some of the time the trouble is present and at other times it disappears. I have solved a similar problem as follows: being very particular about my carbon contact I filed my clamps quite often, and discovered that my top clamp had gradually been filed in such a manner as to slightly crack my carbon when tightly clamped, and this was the seat of the trouble. When using a 12-inch carbon on top you can readily see that after the carbon has dropped down it will burn poorly on account of being cracked, but after it has passed the cracked place it will burn all right. If the above is worthy of publication why all right. If not all right too.

Well, I don't know brother Merklein. I hardly think that is the secret of the complaints, and yet it might be in some cases. Anyhow I have published this because it might at least fit once in a while.

Isn't It Queer?

St. Louis, Missouri, writes:

The Theater Novelty Supply Company, of Chicago, Ill., sent me the enclosed booklet in which they advertise, among other things, their Excelo Oil for projectors and spectacles which they claim are peculiarly adapted for use by operators. Would you advise the purchase of this oil or spectacles?

These manufacturers have not submitted either one of these articles to the department, therefore I cannot make any recommendation, except to say, as I have stated many times before, look out for patent oils, and be mighty sure they are what their manufacturers claim before you invest.

I have been considerably amused in reading the booklet, which contains alternate pages of "advice" to operators and managers and advertisements of the products of the company. Among other things it gives a glossary of electrical definitions and in the preface says: "We know that you will find the electrical definitions correct as they were written by the highest electric authorities, and you will also find any of the articles we manufacture just as reliable as the electrical terms."

Here are some of the electrical definitions referred to: "Ampere: Amount of electric current used. Amperage: Number of amperes which pass through the circuit in a stated time. Carbon: A substance which comes from charcoal, etc. Cycles: Term used in numbering alternations in a. c. Freezing carbons: Running carbons together in feeding. Best light is obtained by keeping carbons separated and drawing arc as long as possible. Rheostat: Adjustable resistance. Transformer: An induction coil by which high voltage is cut down."

It is to laugh! And I imagine operators will have quite a hearty laugh when they peruse the highly valuable information, and consider what the company says that its products are of equal value. This certainly is advertising backwards with a vengeance.

Really it is a queer thing that men will deliberately put into print such trash as this, and yet the Theater Novelty Supply Company is not the only offender in this respect, though it is up-to-date, the only one that has had the nerve to compare its information on matters electrical with its goods.

Resistance and Negative Wire.

Harry T. Dobson, Toronto, Canada, writes:

Received the booklet of questions and it is well worth the money; also there are "some" questions in that pamphlet. Am sending a description of how to read motor curves, thinking it might be of value to department readers. The question of placing resistance on the negative wire of d. c. has captured my goat. Why is it that the rheostat can be placed on the negative wire without materially altering results? We have to suppose that the resistance cuts down the voltage and thus regulates the amperage supplied to the lamp, yet if we put the resistance behind the lamp there is hardly any difference in light results. I cannot understand it. Here are a couple of questions which may interest operators. (1) Can a projection arc be operated on one wire 110 a. c. 60 cycle current? Answer: Yes. Run wire to upper lamp contact from the lower contact through the rheostat to a ground. (2) Two machines side by side on 220 a. c. three wire circuit; one arc burns O. K. with the switch in and the carbons apart. A test lamp lights from top or positive carbon, but on the other machine arc, under the same conditions, the test lamp will only light from the negative wire, although the arc burns all right. I am told the answer is: The first machine has the positive and negative wires, while the second has the neutral and negative, and as the neutral is always grounded, you cannot light a test lamp from it.

Your information concerning question 2 is correct, but the outside wire is positive and the neutral negative to one arc, while the neutral is positive and the outside wire negative to the other, if they, the arcs, are on opposite sides. If your lamp is grounded to the iron of the operating room and the operating room iron is grounded you would get a ground from either outside wire but never from the neutral. As to question 1: That would work all right provided the ground be a perfect one, and the other side of the system be also thoroughly grounded. The resistance proposition is a rather hard thing to understand. It puzzled your humble servant for a long time, and I used to have some red hot arguments on it, a few years ago. If you will study the matter closely you will see that the voltage will be cut and the amperage regulated just the same with the rheostat on the negative as the positive for this reason; a certain number of ohms resistance will produce a certain given result at the arc, and, regardless of what side the hreostat is on, you have a certain given number of ohms of what side the rheostat and arc combined. However, the thing which puzzled me was that you do not get any heavier shock from the lamp with the rheostat on the negative than on the positive. I finally solved the matter to my satisfaction by considering that voltage is really nothing more or less than the affinity of the current on one wire for the current on the other wire, and, while we do not know it, and cannot prove it, very likely this affinity works in both or either direction. There are certain things in connection with electric current which the greatest electricians in the world do not understand. One of them is the exact nature of voltage, and precisely by what method it accomplishes its work. As to the motor curves I think I will use it shortly.

Same Trouble.

William Lorence, New York City, says:

I have had the same trouble New York had, as set forth in issue of March 28th. New York makes his top loop altogether too long, the result being that the loop strikes the top plate and wears the metal away so that two nice little holes appear as shown in enclosed picture. Now as the film goes through the machine, the first bad patch, or broken sprocket hole that strikes this worn part will be sheared off just as nicely as though a pair of shears had been used. I cut off these slight curvatures of the top plate, and found that everything was all right again. A large bottom loop striking against the cradle will do the same thing. Will also say that if New York will experiment a little with his sprocket idler he will find that if he sets it just right all lost motion of the film will be eliminated. Would you oblige me with an explanation of the old choke coil; also the water rheostat?

What brother Lorence seems to mean is that there will be two little holes worn in the metal where a long upper loop strikes it just above the top gate idler, and inside the head of the machine, or at least just at its outer edge. Also a hole will be worn in the metal back of where the lower loop forms. The machine in question is a Standard. As to the choke coil and the water rheostat, you will find the former illustrated and explained on page 143 of the Handbook, and the latter illustrated and explained on pages 139 to 141 of the Handbook. It would require too much space to give a full explanation here. Briefly, however, when one wire of an a. c. circuit is wound around an iron core it sets up a magnetic reactance which tends to choke back the current. In order to give any adequate explanation of the water rheostat I would have to consume considerable space and use illustrations, and this you will find in the Handbook, so there is no use in doing it.

Oil for Intermittent.

Chester P. Jenness, East Manchester, New Hampshire, writes:

Am operating a new Simplex in a small theater in this little city, getting fairly good results by comparison with the rest of the theaters here. Have a copy of the Handbook, and my manager takes the World, both of which I find to be great helps. In the Simplex instructions in the Handbook I find no mention as to oil for the intermittent movement. Have tried several kinds, pouring it into the casings through one of the openings on the flywheel side. It does not stay in very well, however, as when the framing lever is down it nearly all splashes out of the opening. Am using "One Drop" oil in it at present, the same as I used on the bearing, as anything heavier makes the machine run hard. I often have trouble with the machine running hard, though it is kept perfectly clean. I take out the intermittent casing sometimes and wash it out with gasoline, also wash off the gears and bearings. This causes it to run easier for a time, but in a little while it starts to run hard again, sometimes in two or three days.

As regards oil, I cannot advise the use of patent lubricants. They sell at a high price and are almost invariably of low grade. Probably the reason heavier oil makes trouble is that you get a gummy oil. You will find the oil matter dealt with in General Instruction No. 1, page 213, of the Handbook. I have referred your letter to the Precision Machine Company with request that they communicate with you direct.

Machine Trouble.

Edgar Leith, Appleton, Wisconsin, orders a Handbook, and says:

Am having trouble with my Simplex. When the framing lever is clear down there is a grinding in the gears, especially in the worm gear on the shutter shaft. When the lever is up the machine runs quietly. What is wrong?

The probable cause of the trouble is, if the machine be an old one, the gears or the broached hole in the small gear, 117, Fig. 125, page 208 of the Handbook, being worn. The obvious remedy is to re-place gears with new ones. If the machine be a new one then most likely the gears fit a little too tight, in which case they should be ground down slightly by using oil mixed with finely powdered glass, fine emery and rotten stone, or with either one of the three elements separately or either two combined, smearing the gears with the compound and running the machine, with framing lever in position which produces the grind. But don't overdo the matter, and be sure to wash the gears clean with kerosene when through.

Little Giant Film Cleaner.

The manufacturer of the Little Giant Film Cleaner has sent one of the cleaners to the department for examination and test. The cleaner is mechanically very well made. It is the usual type of cleaner in which the film passes between two cotton flannel pads in the process of rewinding, but it has the added and most excellent feature that these pads each rest on a cushion of four spiral springs, which makes the device exceedingly flexible.

I would suggest to the manufacturers, however, that the brushes are not firmly enough attached to their support, and there should be a small guide added at either side of the lower cushion to prevent the film from pulling sidewise. With these two minor and easily made improvements the cleaner would have the entire approval of this department. It is an excellent device as it is, but the two things named would add considerably to its value. The device is finished in oak, with nickel-plated trimmings. I placed the sample in the Manhattan Opera House for trial; the operators pronounce it A1, but suggested the slight changes named.

Film Cement.

C. Wallis, Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, writes:

On page 1679, March 28th issue, Chicago asks the correct method of using acetone in film cement. I have been using an acetone solution for five years, made as follows: Two parts (ounces or pounds) acetone to two-third parts (ounces or pounds) acetic ether, adding more ether gradually until the proper drying quality is attained. The good point about this cement is that no sediment forms in the container, and the older it is the better it becomes. It is very cheap because you can make three ounces for 25 cents, or if you want it in larger quantities it will cost 75 cents a pound, buying the ingredients by the pound.

All of which is perfectly plain, except where the brother says, "add more ether." Whether he means to use the quantity given and add it slowly, or whether he means to add more than the quantity, until proper drying quality is attained, is not quite clear. However, experiment will determine that point.

Thinks He Can Help.

Massachusetts writes as follows:

Think I can help Toronto, Canada, who is using a motor-generator, and complains that his arc will burn good for a time and then will start to hiss and climb on the upper carbon, producing unsteady light. If he will notice, I think he will find that the trouble occurs when he feeds the carbons, and that it is due to using too short an arc. When his carbons start to hiss he should separate them a trifle further and the trouble will stop. I would also suggest that he use ½ and 9/16 electra carbons with the ½ on top, of course, and keep his top carbon even with the bottom, meaning by this that he should not have the lower carbon advanced in front of the upper one. In fact, when the arc starts to climb, move the top carbon out a little in front and this will stop it.

I cannot agree with the last recommendation. The angle of the crater to the condenser is directly dependent upon the advancement of the lower carbon over the upper, and if the upper carbon and the lower carbon are set centrally with each other a condition approximating B, Fig. 97, page 296, of the Handbook will be the result. And this is by no means an ideal condition. It means a large waste of light. The brother is perfectly correct when he says that the carbons should not be carried close enough together so that the arc will hiss. When this condition prevails, laying aside the other matter of the arc climbing, the resistance of the arc is reduced to a point where it will consume fully one fourth more amperage, without any additional light-giving power. In other words, separating the carbons just beyond the point where the hissing starts reduces your amperage by one fourth, and will not decrease the light, in fact, if anything, will improve it.

Ventilation Proposition.

Carl Duncan, Vermont, Illinois, writes:

Have opened a storeroom theater in a nearby town. The room contains approximately 17,000 cubic feet of space, being 20 x 70 x 14 feet, with about 2500 cubic feet taken off by stairways. Seating capacity is about 200, and, counting 30 cubic feet of air per minute per person, the air must be changed every three minutes. There are no windows on the sides and air must be forced through from a window beside the screen. Have ordered six 10-inch oscillating fans, which, together with two stationary 10-inch fans, will make eight in all. I am about to order one 24-inch exhaust fan which will drive air into the room at the rate of 6000 cubic feet per minute. This fan will be placed beside the screen. Do you think my plan for ventilation will be sufficient for the hot summer months? Do you think the 24-inch exhaust fan is large enough, or should I use a 30-inch fan? I get the World every week and also have the Handbook; I could not do without either of them. In this progressive age it is the man who thoroughly understands all the details of his business who succeeds.

As to the ventilation stunt I would suggest that you carefully study the general instruction contained on pages 395 to 400 inclusive of the Handbook. I think you will find all your questions answered there, except that I would use the 30-inch fan, on the basis that it is cheaper, in the long run, as well as more satisfactory in several ways, to run a large fan at low speed, than to run a smaller one at high speed. I think the rules for fan size, Table 12, page 398 of the Handbook, are fairly reliable. According to the diagram a 24-inch fan would just about change the air every three minutes, but, as I said before, I would rather see a little more for a 30-inch fan and not run it up to capacity. Moreover, on the very hot days you could get a considerably better effect with a larger fan. Personally I think the best scheme, everything considered, would be to build an air-box, or room, with a water spray, so that the air would have to pass through the spray. This has the effect of purifying and cooling it, and, if the air box or room be large enough so that the air will remain in the spray for a few seconds, it could be very thoroughly purified and made very much cooler, but the room would have to have a deflecting plate so that the air could not blow straight through it. This scheme was illustrated in the department in issue of March 14, 1914, page 1102. Its practicability would depend somewhat upon the cost of water, of course.

A Take-Up Tension Device.

John A. Dumas, Eureka Springs, Arkansas, has invented a take-up friction device, and has not the money to go ahead with it. He desires to interest capital. Anyone wishing to make inquiries about friend Dumas' take-up can address him direct. He claims that the device is simple and works by friction, but that he has perfected the application of the friction idea. He says there is nothing about it which can break or get out of order; is readily attached to any machine and is always ready for business.

Has Been Tried.

P. W. McCord, Bremerton, Washington, asks:

Is it possible to use a reflector in connection with the arc with an m. p. projector? If not, kindly explain why. It seems to me that the concentration of all the lost light emanating from the arc, by means of a reflector, would be very desirable. Also would it be possible to use reflected light for moving pictures; that is to say, light which is reflected through a prism, or prisms, located between the source of light and the condensers, the arc to be placed at the rear and to one side of the center line of the lens?

It would not be possible to use a prism thus because a prism separates the light at its primary colors. The second prism might correct this, but I would have to know exactly what you are driving at in order to determine whether there would be any advantage in the scheme or not. The chances are about 1,000 to 1 that there would be none. Reflectors have been tried many times, but that particular stunt is not practical, for reasons which would take too much space in setting forth. Broadly, it is because the reflector would be an auxiliary light source, and as such would be of too large size to work successfully with the lens system

Operators Are you perfectly satisfied with the results you get on the screen?

Comments on the Films

THE SPIRIT OF THE MADONNA (Essanay), April 21.—This photoplay, the plot of which illustrates the perils workmen are subjected to when working machinery, and the little sympathy they receive when accidently injured in the performance of their duty. It also shows how an indifferent employer is brought to a realization of his obligation toward the injured workman's family, through a dream. This is a superior picture, especially in photography and lighting.

THE SECOND WIFE (Selig), April 21.—A finely photographed and otherwise well made picture. It depicts the delicate position a second wife finds herself in, especially when there is a young child to conciliate, who has lost a loving mother. Many touching scenes pertain, but the patient and unselfish efforts on the part of the stepmother win in the finish and she is rewarded with the love she strives to obtain. A well acted picture.

THE HUNTED ANIMAL (Edison), April 21.—This is the second release of "The Man Who Disappeared" series, with Marc MacDermott in the star part. There is a display of strenuous work in this picture on the part of Mr. MacDermott that is not only admirable, but extremely fetching; enough to bring out the "goose-pimples." If this series of pictures grow stronger in the same ratio as they proceed, goodness knows where Marc will land. "To be continued in our next."

OUTWITTING DAD (Lubin), April 21.—On the same reel with "The Rube's Duck." A comedy that is about on a par with the "also rans" of the pioneer days of animated pictures.

THE RUBE'S DUCK (Lubin), April 21.—This is on the same reel with "Outwitting Dad," but it contains much better comedy. It has lightning action galore. It is well photographed. It created laughter.

WHIFFLES HUNTS THE SWAG (Pathe), April 21.—The comedy of this hinges on a bet made by Whiffles that he can successfully accomplish a Raffles act on a club friend. How he does it is portrayed by a series of comic, tragic and impossible scenes. He wins and unintentionally assists his friend to win out in his love affair.

STRAW HAT INDUSTRY IN FIESOLE (Pathe), April 21.—An industrial picture showing the process of manufacturing straw hats from the straw in the fields to the finished product on the store shelves. A most interesting offering. It is on the same reel with "Whiffles Hunts the Swag."

WHEN EAST MET WEST IN BOSTON (Edison), April 22.—There is originality and interest in this photoplay if it is conventional. It is a sort of high-brow comedy and at least relieves the tension caused by viewing rough-house comedies and melodramas; not mentioning Indian slaughters. Marc McDermott handles the leading part, of the old professor skilfully, and is ably supported by Mary Fuller and others.

WRONG ALL AROUND (Essanay), April 22.—This comedy is a laugh producer, and goes with rapid action. The theme, of what plot exists, is jealousy, on the part of a husband. There is an old English farce, "Turn Him Out," which coincidently reminds an old timer that a family resemblance obtains. It has been cleverly manipulated into a good offering.

COL. HEEZA LIAR IN MEXICO (Pathe), April 22.—An animated cartoon picture of a series by Mr. J. W. Bray. This is one of the most natural offerings of this kind yet produced and causes continual laughter. It is simply wonderful in construction.

SIAMESE CUSTOMS, INDO-CHINA (Pathe), April 22.—On the same reel with "Col. Heeza Liar in Mexico" appears this highly interesting and educational travel offering. Many scenes are shown.

FANNY'S MELODRAMA (Vitagraph), April 22.—This is a wholesome and legitimate comedy that is so good that it is a pleasure to sit through it. The acting of all in the cast is of a high quality and the photography is above criticism. Lillian Walker, Wallie Van and James Morrison do themselves proud. This is a splendid number.

THE LAST MAN'S CLUB (Selig), April 22.—This is a touching photo-drama with a plot commencing during the Civil War and carried on until the denouement. A bottle of wine was sealed by the club and on the label was written each member's name. It was to be opened by the surviving member in the coming years. James Wheeler, an old G. A. R. member, is the last man. An interesting romance is allied, which makes the episode a charming offering.

THE LITTLE MADONNA (Vitagraph), April 23.—This story of a girl born in the slums has a very effective climax. The statue of the Madonna is her guardian saint and when the artist's model appears attired for this part she frightens away the girl's drunken father. The film is good photographically and original in theme. Margaret Gibson is pleasing as the girl.

SLIPPERY SLIM AND THE STORK (Essanay), April 23.—A ranch comedy number, with Margaret Joslin and Victor Potel in the leads. Slim's experiences with the baby are laughable in the extreme, but many observers will think the infant was too severely handled as it cries through all of the scenes. The story is well constructed.

A MAN IN THE HOUSE (Biograph), April 23.—A half-reel comedy number, in which a returning husband finds his home rented to some newlyweds. The situations are a little breezy, but handled acceptably and there is considerable amusement in the offering.

THE TANGO FLAT (Biograph), April 23.—Grouch finds their family flat too noisy and they move into another where numberous tango lessons are being taught. He finally falls a victim to the dance himself. This is laughable and pleasing. On the same reel with above.

IN SPITE OF THE EVIDENCE (Selig), April 23.—A political story written by Gilson Willets. The governor's daughter forces him to resign because he will not sign the child labor bill. There are interesting moments in this, but it suffers as a whole from overacting and similarity to previous offerings. The scenes are well pictured.

TANGLED TANGOISTS (Vitagraph), April 24.—Bunny and Flora Finch attend a reception where they are compelled to be wall flowers because they are unable to tango. Determining to learn they go to a teacher (unknown to each other), and become proficient. At the first opportunity they make a hit. Then they have a tango wedding. The witnesses, justice, desk, chairs, office railing and even the pictures on the wall get to doing it. One year later in the middle of the night they tango a pair of twins to soothe them to sleep. This picture is a cracker-jack.

MIKE THE AVENGER (Selig), April 24.—A very good little comedy this, that causes much laughter. Mike is a much abused individual whom everybody takes a whack at, until he accidently leans against a cable and receives 10,000,000 volts of electricity into his system. Discovering his wonderful power he proceeds to whack his former persecutors in a wild and wonderful way. This is a laughable picture.

WILL BLOOD TELL (Lubin), April 24.—The plot of this story is original and attractive. The sweetheart of the hero demonstrates to those most concerned that her faith and trust in him is not misdirected, and through her efforts he shows his worth. A nice little surprise comes at the ending.

A SALT MACKEREL MINE (Kalem), April 24.—This picture is a sort of relief from the cut and dried many. It is a burlesque on the Western mining melodrama that is refreshing. The plot is clear and the acting seriously and naturally done. The sub-titles are laughable. It is well received by the spectators generally.

BRONCHO BILLY—GUNMAN (Essanay), April 25.—Reversing the order of usualness, Mr. Anderson plays the bad man in this picture and he portrays a regular villain of the "chaw terbaccer" variety. He turns out to be a good villain in the finale, however, taking a "chaw" and hiking for other parts leaving the girl he loves, in the arms of the man she loves, through gratitude.

LITTLE BREECHES (Lubin), April 25.—This is a visualization of the poem, "Little Breeches," written by the late John G. Hay. It is a very touching picture and contains beautiful snow scenes. It is well done in every respect.

ON THE HEIGHTS (Edison), April 25.—No. 6 of the "Dolly of the Dailies" series. There is a change in the editorship of the "Comet," the newspaper on which Dolly has been working and she is displeased at the attitude of the new editor toward her. She goes out to get a story—she gets it, but refuses to hand it in on account of those concerned being old friends of hers. Not a consistent or strong story; scarcely interesting.

A DREAM OF THE CIRCUS (Lubin), April 25.—On the same reel with "Little Breeches," is this dream of a little child, where he sees a circus—toys are the performers. A good picture for the little folk.

THE NURSE AND THE COUNTERFEITER (Kalem), April 25.—The theme and plot of this offering is full of incidents that are not wholly convincing. It is really on the clap-trap order. It is impossible, it is said, to please everybody.

HEARST-SELIG PICTORIAL NEWS, NO. 17 (Selig), April 27.—Containing topical events embracing scenes of the march of Coxey's army from Massillon, Ohio, to Washington, D. C.; a replica of his former attempt. Also scenes of the attempted assassination of Mayor Mitchell, Easter services in different localities, etc., etc. This is all very interesting and instructive.

THE AWAKENING OF BARBARA DARE (Vitagraph), April 27.—This is a beautiful offering showing how the jealousy of a chill old New England mother can be warmed by the advent of a little child. Mrs. Mary Maurice portrays the mother in her usual graceful manner. Clara Kimball Young and William Humphrey as the young couple ably assist her.

HOPHEAD'S DREAM (Biograph), April 27.—Hophead is the man we have read much about with his poison needle. The Purity League wish to reform him, but he will not stand for it. He gets in bad with the king of the dope. He has a dream that he became king, after that Hophead sought the Purity League.

ALONG CAME A CITY CHAP (Biograph), April 27.—On the same reel with the above. Showing how a country girl thinks a city chap is better than her country lover, but this picture shows the difference. A fairly good offering.

BOBBY THE BANKER (Melies), April 27.—On the same reel with "Knockabout Kelly." Bobby and a fireman's hose pipe play the prominent parts. A laughable comedy.

KNOCKABOUT KELLY, MAGICIAN (Melies), April 27.—On the same reel with "Bobby the Banker." Knockabout Kelly steals a magician's wand which produces water, and everywhere that Kelly goes water is sure to follow.

THE HIGH LIFE (Edison), April 27.—The fifth of the Wood B. Wedd series, which in some respects contain laughing material and in others broad absurdity. Conscientiously this offering is hardly up to the Edison standard. The acting cannot be criticised, nor can the photography.

Licensed Specials

THE SPIRIT AND THE CLAY (Vitagraph), April 21.—A two-reel picture drama that commences on the farm and ends in the city in a most tragic manner. The story, while probable, is long-drawn out and really grows tiresome in the last part, otherwise it is a superior production, well acted, directed and photographed.

HER FALSE FRIEND (Kleine-Cines), April 21.—A special two-reel drama that contains some exquisite scenes, both interior and exterior, that are beautifully photographed, lighted and tinted. The acting is all that can be desired, but the plot is full of morbidity and disagreeable developments are visualized, that destroy all sympathy for the characters, when the end is reached.

GREY EAGLE'S LAST STAND (Kalem), April 22.—This two-part picture is full of thrills and dead Indians. Major Wells sends his son, a private, to Colonel Grey, in command of the troops stationed in his territory, asking leave of absence as his wife is ill and he wishes to go to her. Believing his request will be granted the Major starts for home with an escort. The complications which follow each other makes this a gripping picture. The photography is splendid and the acting is adequate in all respects.

THE KLONDIKE BUBBLE (Lubin), April 22.—A two-reel Western mining proposition exploited in the East, in good faith, though on slender hopes for the future. During the zenith of its prosperity it suddenly crashes on the market and toboggans so swiftly to the starting point that destruction is imminent. The exploiter, a man imbued with primitive force and honest intentions, who has involved his friends, redeems himself through brawn and determination, and "makes good." This is an exhilarating picture with many gripping scenes.

THE DEATH WARRANT (Lubin), April 23.—The fathers of the young lovers are business enemies and the girl's sire refuses to testify in the young man's favor when it looks as though he had killed his own father in a quarrel. He is sentenced to the electric chair and only saved when the girl's father becomes conscience stricken. There is good suspense in the situations toward the close, but the tone of the entire offering is rather unpleasant. The photography and construction are commendable.

THE TANGO CRAZE (Pathe), April 23.—There is quite a novel conception in this satire on the prevailing tango mania. It is somewhat vague in treatment and succeeds only in being moderately entertaining. Some of the scenes are taken in a Palais de Dance and are artistic and pleasing from the standpoint of settings and costumes. With more plot this would have held the interest to better advantage.

A MAN FOR A' THAT (Essanay), April 24.—A two-part photoplay featuring Francis X. Bushman, who essays the role of a young clubman who becomes disgusted with city and club life. He determines to try life among the working people. His adventures make an interesting story that is clean and enjoyable.

THE UNOPENED LETTER (Edison), April 24.—A very interesting and original two-reel picture with a strong plot, filled with heart interest and suspense. A marriage that is kept secret and an unopened letter is the theme of the plot. The acting by all is meritorious and every detail in the picture finely accomplished.

BRUTE FORCE (Biograph), April 25.—This primitive picture in two parts illustrates that the struggle between brute force and brains has always resulted in victory for brains. The young man dreams he is the primitive leader of the stone club men. His tribe eventually faces annihilation at the hands of the low cave men who have found the secret of his power—the stone club. Then the inventive brain is stimulated and gives birth to a new idea.

HER GREAT SCOOP (Vitagraph), April 25.—A two-reel drama with Maurice Costello and Mary Charleson in the leads. She resents a slight and loses her job as a reporter. Fortunately, she overhears a plot to rob a bank. Her great scoop lands a gang of thieves in jail and makes her a star reporter and the life partner of the owner of a struggling paper, which bounds into prosperity through the scoop. A splendid picture.

BREAKING EVEN (Pathe), April 25.—This two-reel photoplay is supposed to be a comedy and gains laughs in places, but the most amusing feature about it is its absurd inconsistencies and loose direction. There is little in it interesting to the casual observer. The acting is well done, as is the photography.

THE DANCE OF DEATH (Melies), April 27.—An extended review of this two-reel offering by Mr. G. Blaisdell will be found on page 366, issue of April 18, 1914.

SHOTGUN JONES (Selig), April 27.—This two-reel offering, as the caption indicates, is laid in the West. In some respects it is highly melodramatic and crowds absurdity near the brink, but a convincing quality permeates through it that redeems it at the ending. Jones gets his reward for his honesty.

Independent

HIS REWARD (Princess), April 24. This is a meritorious photoplay written by Fred Sullivan. It is produced in a first-class manner by the author as director and those in the cast embrace Morris Foster, Carey Hastings, Lydia Mead, Leyland Benham and Arthur Benham. The acting and photography is up to the standard.

APOLLO FRED BECOMES A HOMESEEKER (Apollo), April 26.—When Fred Mace puts one over it is nothing new, as he is the "lucky cuss." Think of winning the first prize in the homeseeker's contest, right off the reel, at that. This is one of those bing-bang pictures that causes the audience to make a big noise.

OUR MUTUAL GIRL, NO. 15 (Reliance), April 27.—She and her aunt start out early and take a look at the latest gowns as usual, they drive over on the East Side, where Margaret discovers a street musician, a girl violinist, whom she considers a find. She introduces her to Mr. Walter Damrosch, who is induced to become interested, to the extent that a certificate of scholarship is issued for her.

CIGAR BUTTS (Majestic), April 28.—A very interesting picture play, depicting one of the peculiar methods of smuggling precious stones into America. This is a strong detective story and is finely developed. There is a melodramatic punch where the gang is captured. A well done picture.

A FLURRY IN HATS (Beauty), April 28.—A full review of this reel is printed in the issue of May 2nd.

OUT OF THE NIGHT (Kay-Bee), April 30.—A story of the Northwest in the Canadian mining country. Thomas H. Ince and R. V. Spencer are the producers. Clara Williams, Walter Edwards and Harry K. Keenan are the principals in the cast. This offering is interesting and muchly melodramatic. The plot embraces the old story of "Enoch Arden," only it has been re-vamped, turned over, etc. The photography and lighting are commendable.

WHO'S WHO? (Victor), May 1.—A film story, written by Francis Street, with Irene Wallace and Dick and Harry Lee in the cast. The girl mistakes the twin brother for her lover and there is quite a little surprise at the close as most observers will assume, that one brother is playing both parts, when there are in reality two of them. This is not very effective in some respects, but the climax makes it unusual.

THE QUICKSANDS (Majestic), May 1.—This photoplay might be classed as one out of the ordinary and is not only interesting and fascinating, but it has a satisfying ending, in that the principal wrong-doer "gets his." Courtney Foote, Lillian Gish and Fay Tichner are in the leads and do their usual splendid work.

A MAN, A GIRL AND ANOTHER MAN (Rex), May 3.—This photoplay contains considerable that is interesting and serves as a lesson to girls. It is cleverly acted in all parts and photographically is up to the standard.

GETTING RID OF ALGY (Thanhouser), May 3.—This is a most strenuous comedy drama especially for Algy. It is a good plot and well handled. The trunk episode is amusing. Some inconsistences prevail throughout, but it pleases.

THE HUNGRY SOLDIERS (Powers), May 4.—The plot development is a little vague at the beginning of this burlesque comedy number, but it becomes quite amusing when the starved privates invade the reception one by one in the captain's uniform and fill themselves up with sandwiches.

EXPOSING THE HANDCUFF KINGS (Powers), May 4.—This, on same reel with above, shows how numerous tricks of legerdemain are worked, particularly the chain trick and unlocking handcuffs. It holds the attention closely.

THE DAWN OF ROMANCE (Imp), May 4.—Ethel Grandin appears in this as a boarding school miss. Ricardo, the singing teacher, plans an elopement with her, but it turns out that he is married already and the girl's real lover appears on the scene. Nothing particularly new in this story, but it is nicely presented.

THE STORY OF THE OLIVE (American), May 6.—The scenes of this photoplay are located on an olive ranch in Southern California. It embraces in the plot illustrations of the cultivation of olives and the process of manufacturing olive oil. A love theme also lends to the interest. Melodramatic scenes occur. Sidney Ayres, Harry Von Meter, Vivian Rich and Edith Borella play the prominent parts.

THE QUACK (Nestor), May 6.—There is a worthy motive back of this film, which exposes quack cure-alls advertised "For Men Only." Unfortunately it is not the sort of theme that makes good entertainment for a mixed audience. The photography is not of the best.

WHISTLING HIRAM (Frontier), May 7.—The story of a village flirt who captivates the heart of a young fisherman. This hasn't enough plot to hold the interest strongly.

SARGEANT HOFMEYER (Sterling), May 7.—Ford Sterling appears in this amusing trifle as a police sargeant. The number has a strong juvenile interest, Little Billy being one of the leading participants. The action is not so pronounced as usual, but brings numerous smiles.

SCHULTZ, THE BARBER (Joker), May 9.—A low comedy number with several laughable moments in it. The burlesque manicuring and barbering were funny. The dirty kitchen scenes in the beginning were unattractive.

CAREER OF WATERLOO PETERSON (Rex), May 10.—This is a story of a man who took a job as camera operator after getting his "experience" from a book. It is produced by Phillips Smalley. The picture shows many sides of the Universal studio at the coast that ordinarily do not appear on the screen—all interesting. One of the best is a view of the big stage. Julian Ralph plays Waterloo. The subject will entertain and amuse as well.

THE SLIPPERY SPY (Eclair), May 10.—This is a war story, representing a boy's dream. The parts are all played by children and the production is quite entertaining, though not as clever as some of its predecessors along the same line.

SUZANNE (Eclair), May 10.—This is an attractive comedy number, telling a pretty love story. Barbara Tennant and O. A. C. Lund play the lovers, and have good support from the old couple. The girl prays nine times to St. Catherine for a lover and on the tenth day he appears, the landlord's son. This is pleasing.

Independent Specials

CAUGHT IN A CABARET (Keystone), April 27.—This is another two-reel comedy manufactured in Mack Sennett's comical factory out in California state. It caused so much laughter you couldn't hear what the actors was talkin'. Charles Chaplin was the leading fun maker. Mabel Normand, with several of the actors finished the show artistically. Sennett must have been behind the camera. Continuous laughter greeted the offering.

BROKEN VOWS (Victor), April 27.—A two-reel number, written by Irene Wallace. The author and Frank Holland play the leading roles in a fairly successful way. The chief situation of interest in this is where the cast-off girl dresses in her wedding garments and goes to church to see her lover married to another. This was recently shown much more convincingly in a two-reel Pathe film, as we remember it. This scene has a strong pathos even though not powerfully handled.

THE TWO GUN MAN (Powers), May 1.—A two-reel number, with Edwin August as producer and principal actor. The father, a political grafter, raises the rent on certain tenements in the poor quarters. The son is an idol among the residents there and distributes his father's graft money with a lavish hand. Later, when the father's enemies are closing in upon him, the son saves him from the Black Hand. The plot is extravagant and melodramatic in the extreme, but it is quite interesting.

LOVE'S SACRIFICE (Kay-Bee), May 1.—Written and produced by William H. Clifford and Thomas H. Ince. The plot of this two-reel picture is laid in the Southwest, on the border lands. It is full of the usual Indian and Mexican scenes of carnage in the first part. In the second part it shifts to Washington, D. C., then back to the plains. It is an interesting and well-made picture. William Ehfe and Tsura Aoki were efficient in the leading parts.

THE BODY IN THE TRUNK (Majestic), May 3.—A two-reel peculiar sort of picture depicting the inner life of a vaudeville team, which is of no general interest to the public, but, nevertheless, it is tragically gripping and conceivable. The main fault is to be found in the director's work. The second reel is much superior to the first.

IN THE MOONLIGHT (Flying "A"), May 4.—A full review of this two-reel feature will be found in the issue of May 2nd.

AS FATE WILLED (Victor), May 4.—A two-reel picture play that contains many complications which hold attention. The ending of this number is a beautiful finale of a most worthy visualization.

A WOMAN'S LOYALTY (Thanhouser), May 5. Two reels of film are used up in this story to elucidate the conventional artist's confirmed habit of falling in love with his model and forgetting his wife and children. This is different in some ways. There is a paint brush duel, at a fancy Bohemian ball and the artist is blinded. His affinity cruelly deserts him and his faithful wife cheers his last moments.

CALAMITY ANNE'S LOVE AFFAIR (American), May 8.—A pretentious two-reel comedy wherein Calamity Anne (Louise Lester) and Tommy run things to suit themselves for a time and manage to keep their neighbors awake. However, they ultimately run up against calamity as usual. An aeroplane is used to good advantage and George Field is Billie Skyboy. A laughable and interesting picture.

SHORTY'S STRATEGY (Broncho), May 13.—It takes two reels of film to illustrate how Shorty and his pard started with the pay-roll, for the ranch owner, and how the pard gambled it away and how Shorty by strategy and nerve recovered it and saved his pard. Very thrilling in places.

PRINCESS THEATER, JONESBORO, ARK.

The accompanying photo-engraving is an illustration of the facade of the Princess Theater, Jonesboro, Ark. It is owned and managed by Messrs. Carson & Mack, who are also the owners of the Grand Theater, Jonesboro. The Princess is exclusively a feature house. Its operating room is equipped with two motor-driven machines. The structure is of fireproof construction, and has a seating capacity of 400, which is divided between the parquette floor and the balcony. Music is furnished by an orchestra of five pieces. From external appearances the impression given one is that the managers know how to maintain a pretty little picture house.

Princess Theater, Jonesboro, Ark.

WILL OPEN IN MAY.

The new fireproof structure to be opened on or about May 15 in Carteret, N. J., has been leased by Messrs. L. E. Stautenburgh and Charles T. Raynolds as a moving picture theater. The measurements of the building are 25 by 95 feet, and the auditorium will have a seating capacity of 400.

"ONCE OVER"

By Hugh Hoffman.

A "CITY WELFARE" OFFICER in Kansas City interrupted a film exhibition at a theater and called a wagon-load of police to "pinch" the place. The cops looked at the show and pronounced it O. K.

We expect any day to hear that the police department of Kansas City is to be reformed.

Well—they will die with their feet toward the camera.

It is remarkable how a United States consul in a medium sized English town can make a report that the whole of England is getting tired of this or that kind of American pictures, and have it accepted and commented upon by the whole American press.

Paul H. Cromelin

The American Representative of London Film and M. P. Sales a Man of Attainments and Wide Business Experience.

By George Blaisdell.

WITH the selection or rather construction of Cosmofotofilm as the brand under which he will release the pictures to be marketed under his direction, Paul H. Cromelin has opened spacious offices on the fifth floor of the World Tower Building. Mr. Cromelin is the American representative of the London Film Company and also of the M. P. Sales Agency of London. Among the brands controlled by the M. P. are Film d'Art, the Aquila, the Clarendon and the Regent. The latter imprint has been recently seen on this side of the water on "Detective Finn" and "The Great Python Robbery." The London Film Company will make its bow to the American market in the presentation of "The House of Temperley," by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, at the Strand Theater during the week of May 11th. This picture, which has been on exhibition in England since last fall, has had remarkable success. Americans will be interested in it for one reason in that it represents the initial English production of a well-known American player and director, Harold Shaw, formerly of the Edison and Imp companies. Mr. Cromelin says that following "The House of Temperley" will be a series of adaptations of the well-known stories of W. W. Jacobs, which have been directed by George Loane Tucker, also an American, whose last work on this side was with the Imp Company. Four of these Jacobs stories are already made —"The Bosun's Mate," featuring W. H. Berry, leading comedian of Daly's, and Mary Brough; "Beauty and the Barge," with Cyril Maude, who in "Grumpy" and other pieces has made a season-long hit at Wallack's Theater, in Broadway; "Lawyer Quince," in which Charles Rock, Lillian Logan and Mary Brough appear, and "The Third String," in which Jane Gail, also formerly of the Imp, will have one of the leads. Miss Gail is one of the bright stars of the screen, and her friends in America will be glad of the opportunity to see her again in pictures. Miss Gail also has played the lead in "She Stoops to Conquer," which will be shown here in due course.

Paul H. Cromelin.

Mr. Cromelin brings to his new undertaking a wide business experience. One of the important factors in this is his knowledge of conditions abroad, not only in the film industry but in other lines as well. For fifteen years he was associated with the Columbia Phonograph Company, resigning the vice-presidency of that corporation three years ago to go to England to take charge of Edison interests. In one way or another, however, Mr. Cromelin has been in touch with the motion picture business since the inception of the industry. For two years he was located in Washington and St. Louis, then for four years he was in Germany, during which time he covered the Continent generally, and then for the seven years prior to taking up his residence in England he was in the United States. Mr. Cromelin has had much to do with copyright matters, especially as pertains to music, and is considered an international authority on the general subject.

Talking the other day with Mr. Cromelin, he explained the origin of the London Film Company, what it has done and what it intends to do. "For a long time," he said, "it has been recognized that while leading the world, broadly speaking, in the excellence and completeness of detail of its theaters especially constructed for exhibiting motion pictures, England has not kept pace but has lagged behind in the field of production. I think this a good place to say that the thing that has impressed me most in the past season has been the wonderful improvement in the quality of the work of the leading British manufacturers. You can see it, for instance, in Barker's 'Sixty Years a Queen,' or in Clarendon's 'King Charles,' and in Hepworth's productions. Such pictures served to call attention to the fact that for a long period in England too much attention had been paid to the exhibiting end of the film industry to the neglect of the quality of the production. English manufacturers have at last awakened to the possibilities of their own country in backgrounds and settings for beautiful film work, and they are now simply coming into their own. I know of nothing that tended more to bring them to a realization of their opportunities than the action of American companies in sending their producers and players to England and showing them how right on their own ground. The English pictures of the American companies were very popular in the British Isles.

"I think there is general agreement that at the present time there is a distinct uplift movement in the film business. The time is past when a company can put things over, no matter what the subject is or how it may be photographed. I think we are on the verge here of selling absolutely on merit in the open market, as is done abroad. It is largely in anticipation of this that I have been prompted to come into the market at this time. You see, I am reversing the operation —instead of selling American goods in England I am bringing into this market under proper competitive conditions some of the best works of English manufacturers.

"Coming back to the London Film Company, it was with the object of making pictures that would compare with the best that this company was organized. It is owned and managed by practical film men, and its managing director, R. T. Jupp, is also the managing director of the Provincial Cinematograph Theaters, the finest chain of moving picture theaters in the world. Its productions will all be of the very highest type, and especially suitable for English and American audiences. The works of great authors will be filmed, and only the very best artists obtainable will be engaged. To provide the best of scripts for Mr. Shaw and Mr. Tucker the company has exclusively retained Bannister Merwin, one of the best-known writers, and he is now in charge of the scenario department. The studio at St. Margaret's on the Thames is provided with every modern equipment.

"It took a long time for the London Film Company to make its first release. Many companies were releasing films of a quality it was discarding. Until this masterpiece of 'The House of Temperley' was produced the company simply didn't release anything. The first showing of this picture was at the West End Theater, in Coventry Street, London, the finest picture theater in the British metropolis. Immediately all other makers recognized that there was a new factor in the field. The opinions of the London press were so commendatory we all realized we had a competitor to be reckoned with. Sir Arthur Conan Doyle was especially pleased. In a speech, he said:

"'The real merit of "The House of Temperley" lies with the producer, Harold Shaw. When I saw it it struck me as being infinitely better than my own play, and if it is ever produced I shall certainly steal some of Mr. Shaw's ideas and scenes for the play. My little brat has been so trimmed up by him on the film that I hardly knew him, but I am very glad indeed to acknowledge my offspring.'

"It is interesting to know that this fine, wholesome old English drama has more than fulfilled all predictions made for it when it was first shown, that it has met the unanimous approval of the press and people, and that it has been a wonderful attraction wherever exhibited."

Prior to Mr. Cromelin's departure from England a few weeks ago he was given an elaborate farewell dinner by his fellow-members of the Kinematograph Manufacturers' Association. The descriptions of the occasion printed in the English trade press bear testimony to the regard in which this American is held by his confreres in England.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

OLIVER MOROSCO, manager of "Help Wanted" and "Peg o' My Heart," the former now on a run in this city, has contributd an interesting article to the Chicago Record-Herald, in which he shows how he intends to make moving pictures subserve the interests of the drama. It is questonable if the use of moving pictures to show the advances made by an employer to his girlish secretary during lunch hour, will give results that will pass censorship; but is is decidedly unquestionable that such a use of pictures, in contrast with the spoken part of the drama, would be an insult to the great moving picture industry. However, we shall follow the development of Manager Morosco's experiment to combine moving pictures and the drama with deep interest. His article follows:

Are Moving Pictures Responsible for the Present Disastrous Theatrical Season?

From the despairing statements of some managers which I read almost every time I pick up a publication devoted to theatricals, the feelings of many producers toward the moving pictures are not such as would come under the head of "tender thoughts."

Judging from their views and my own observations I have found that the most common reason for the overwhelming number of failures during the present season is laid to the ever-growing popularity of moving pictures. I have watched with uncommon interest the steady growth of the moving picture industry, its amazing development and its increasing attractiveness for the public in general.

There is no denying the fact that the silent drama, melodrama, farce or whatever it may be, is now entertaining millions of persons every week. And there is no denying the fact that many managers who attribute the present bad season to the moving pictures have been wondering just what they could do to offset the ingrowth of the moving pictures and stop the taking of patronage away from the legitimate playhouse.

Many have reduced their prices. This method I think is ineffective. If a manager is fortunate enough to produce a genuine success—to offer an attraction really worth while—he should have no occasion to worry about prices, for I have always found that the public is willing to pay a good price for anything it really wants.

Other managers have merely sat back, thrown up their hands and emitted a long, loud, despairing yell that moving pictures were ruining the legitimate theaters.

If, as we will admit, the moving pictures have secured such a tremendous hold on the public that is, a portion of the public—then why not interest and attract the whole public by providing a combination of moving pictures with the legitimate drama, without taking from the dignity of the drama?

In every play a great many of the interesting incidents that have a bearing on the story of the play are only talked about by the characters. All of these unseen incidents are interesting. They must be interesting to be worth discussion.

It is my idea to combine moving pictures with the drama by depicting on the screen these incidents that have a bearing on the story.

To illustrate my idea more clearly I will take as an instance "Help Wanted."

In the first act we find little Gertrude Meyer, fresh from business college, making her entrance into the business world by taking a position in the office of Jerold Scott. We see Scott make advances to his secretary by inviting her out to lunch the first day she is in his office. With the fall of the curtain she has already left for the corner where he is to meet her, and he is seen going out the door to keep the appointment.

With the rise of the curtain on the second act they are seen returning—little Gertrude with a troubled, scared look on her face and Scott with the appearance of one who is sure of success.

Now between the first and second acts would it not be interesting to utilize a portion of the time of intermission by showing a film of old Scott and his little secretary at lunch; to depict the incidents of that noon hour which lead to the widely different expressions of the two as they returned to the office at the opening of the second act—incidents that certainly have a vital bearing on the events of the second act? Would it not knit the incidents of the story even more closely together and be much more interesting than some of the dialogue that explains in a way what did happen at that noon-hour luncheon?

It is my belief that it would afford an added interest to the audience and give them an even better understanding of what Mr. Lait wants to show in his play. I only take this as one instance in a play, constructed with no such purpose in view, where moving pictures could be utilized to considerable advantage. It merely serves to illustrate the idea that I shall test this summer by combining moving pictures with a legitimate play. Opportunities of this kind can be found in "Peg o' My Heart," which I manage. I could easily show the fascinating little Irish girl as she was in New York with her father before she went to her aristocratic relatives in England and I could make an audience even more interested and eager to watch her development when she reaches the manor with her dog Michael under her arm.

I have been studying such a combination for some time and have been in communication with a Chicago playwright, Frederic Hatton, with the idea of getting him to write the play with which I will this summer test my theory, and I have completed my arrangements with Thomas H. Ince of the New York Motion Picture Corporation for the film portion of the play.

Fine Moving Picture Display at Forest Products Exposition.

The various lumber dealers' associations have prepared costly exhibits illuminating the uses and points of utility in the individual tree types they foster at the forest products exposition that will open at the Coliseum, in this city, Thursday, April 30. The exposition will run through until May 9.

The existing stages of forestry, lumber and wood manufacturing will be demonstrated by means of exhibits of tree products and mill machinery. The displays and the cost of their placing will represent an investment of $100,000. The entire show will be framed in a woodland scene in keeping with the spirit of the exposition. Every section of the vast wood industry of the United States will be represented at the exposition. The wood industry of this country ranks next to the steel industry in the magnitude of investments and value of output, and above all in the great army of men employed and in the volume of railroad shipments. All the competitive timber organizations of the United States, representing the Atlantic and Pacific Coasts, the far North and the extreme South, will make elaborate exhibits of American tree products at this exposition, under the general direction of the National Lumber Manufacturers' Association.

This exposition will re-open in the Grand Central Palace, New York, on Thursday, May 21st.

Free moving pictures will be shown during the exposition, many of the films having been taken in the timber regions by operators acting for the United States government. These views will represent the lumber jack in his heroic role of defying death while felling big trees and riding logs over dangerous rapids.

Many of the pictures shown at both expositions have been taken by the Industrial Moving Picture Company, under the direction of the general manager, Waterson R. Rothacker.

American Films in Great Britain.

Among the reports recently sent in to Washington by American consuls in Great Britain is one from Consul Evans, at Sheffield, England, that will claim the close attention of American film manufacturers. The Wild Western picture especially, it appears, has palled upon the taste of picture theatergoers, and the demand is for subjects of higher caliber, both in scenario and topic. Consul Evans, in part, writes in his report:

"Certainly no characters lend themselves better to stirring dramatic situations put on in the open, with wide scope for scenic effect and rapid action, than do the cowpuncher and the Indian fighter of Western America. Despite it all, however, the public is getting overfed with them. Too often have they seen the same old cowboy ride madly down the same old trail. Too often has the selfsame settler defended to the last shell the same old cabin from the same old band of Indians, until the public is growing weary of him and would welcome with some relief a successful Indian massacre. As a result of this changing public preference the American film has suffered, in this city at least.

"The Italians, with their emotional drama of love and passion, staged with minute care, hold first place in the production of the purely sentimental drama; the French run rather to the emotional problem situation of the eternal triangle,' put on in a more or less restricted space. These two nationalities about cover the local market for wares of this sort. Exquisite productions of old classics, carefully worked out as regards detail, are the drawing cards for the present, and these are in the main of English make.

"The British taste demands a dash of fact with fiction.

"As to the main idea there can be no doubt. The film of tomorrow is sure to be on a higher mental plane than the film of yesterday."

Funkhouser's Censorship Upheld by Court.

Judge Tuthill, of the Circuit Court, unheld Major Funkhouser's censorship right, Saturday, April 25, when he declared insufficient the petition for mandamus brought by the Clingman Curtain Company, producers of the censored film, "The Modern Madam X."

Judge Tuthill ordered that the attorneys for the plaintiff might amend the petition and he would consider the question again on Tuesday, April 28.

"There won't be much difficulty in throwing the petition out," said Assistant Corporation Counsel Reker.

Major Funkhouser Ultra in Judgment and Methods.

Rigid censorship of moving pictures was declared imperative, on Friday, April 25, by judges of the Municipal Court. This was done to safeguard picture theaters in the interests of children, after the judges had viewed 2,000 feet of cutouts made by the censor board.

This was a grandstand play by Major Funkhouser to impress those present. If they had been shown the entire films from which these cutouts had been made the impression would have been greatly modified. And this is stated not against censorship for children, but against the misleading methods employed by the practical head of the censor board.

Why did the major select a conglomeration of the cut-outs made during several months for the judgment of his critical audience, and not the many worthy films he has refused to pass, because of an irrational moral finicalism that seems to possess him.

What about "The Master in the Garden," "The Salvation of Nance O'Neil," and "The Lily of the Valley," all of which I have reviewed with much pleasure?

Major Funkhouser is ultra in his methods to gain a point, and ultra in his exalted judgment to bar many excellent subjects.

Chicago Film Brevities.

The A. L. Runyan Advertising and Sales Company will move into its new quarters for the studio and plant at 2624 Milwaukee Avenue, on May 1. The office of the company is in Suite 1804, New Mallers Building, this city.

Fred S. Meyer, assistant manager of the Laemmle film service, in Minneapolis, passed through the city Monday, on his way to West Baden, where he will take a much needed rest. Mr. Meyer reports excellent business in Minneapolis and adjoining territory.

Nat. I. Brown, traveling manager of Atsco Inc., New York City, was in the city last week, and paid a visit to the World office. The name, "Atsco," is formed from the initial letters of the American Theater Supply Company. Mr. Brown stated that his company is making quite a feature of industrial films, which are taken by a large force of expert employees throughout the country.

George Berg, formerly manager of the Continental Feature Film Company, with offices in the Mallers Building, severed his connections with that company on Saturday, April 25. He has been appointed city representative for the General Film Company, by Manager I. Van Ronkel.

S. M. Bowden, owner of the Glen Ellyn Theater, Glen Ellyn, Ill., made a pleasant call at the World office last week. The Glen Ellyn seats 450 people, and is a modernly equipped house. It is the only moving picture theater in Glen Ellyn, and is doing excellent business with four reels of licensed programmes, at admissions of five and ten cents. Beginning May 1, Manager Bowden will run the Kathlyn series, which he believes will make a banner showing.

E. F. Bitner, general manager for Leo Feist, music publisher, was in the city last week, and reported flattering sales throughout the United States for the Kathlyn waltz. This waltz is now being played, Mr. Bitner says, in hotels, cafes and theaters throughout the country. It is also included in piano player roles and on the band records of the Columbia and Victor makes.

William A. Hopp, president of the Union Film Company, this city, has just recovered from an eight weeks' relapse of a former attack of serious stomach trouble. Mr. Hopp's many friends will be glad to hear that he is again in harness.

James Oliver Curwood, of Owosso, Mich., was seen in the city last week. Mr. Curwood is one of the most prolific writers of fiction in America, being the author of "Kazan," a Northland tale of a dog-wolf and his mate. "The Danger Trail," etc. He is also author of numerous Selig feature scenarios, among them being, "Thor, Lord of the Jungle," and many others.

"The Spoilers" has been turning them away at the Studebaker all last week. From all reports this famous Northland photodrama has caught on with greater firmness than has been shown by any other feature film since "Quo Vadis."

REEL FELLOWS SEEK A HOME.

A meeting of the Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago was held at the new Fort Dearborn Hotel, on April 15th, for the purpose of considering plans for a club home. The growth of the club, which is composed of men engaged in all branches of the motion picture business, has been very rapid and it has been found necessary to have a permanent meeting place. A number of projects were discussed and a committee was finally appointed to consider the question and report at the meeting held April 29th. Members of this committee are Harold Vosburg, Allen Haase, Wallace Peery, Walter Early and Tom Quill. Twenty four members were received at the last meeting.

Life and Works of Verdi.

Six Reels. The Arias Film Co.
Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THE idea to film the life of famous composers and accompany them with music from their works while the biography is progressing on the screen is nothing less than a happy inspiration, which is especially susceptible of screen interpretation. The life of Verdi is a noble subject and this being the first offering of a new company criticism ought to deal gently with the effort. Indeed there are many points of merit and many scenes of superb beauty in these films and it is quite true that the man who plays the leading part is evidently in love with his work and gives a most accetable rendition of the character of Verdi. The photography while not uniformly excellent is at times quite above the average. There are few if any really dramatic values in the life of Verdi. It is a biography rather than a drama which this new company offers us. The early scenes showing Verdi a black-haired happy boy with the muse stirring in his little heart are happily conceived and executed; the outdoor settings are splendid all the way through, the scenes of the aged composer walking through his picturesque estate near Genoa are particularly fine. The Nine Muses mourning in unison with Italy the death of the great composer constitute a happy inspiration of the director.

This exhausts the credits. The action in the films moves at a snail's pace and there is an unhappy tendency to overemphasize all that is sad, mournful and lugubrious. We see a few scenes from the great and popular works of Verdi, but the only one that was really satisfactory was that of "Aida." The scene showing well known figures from Verdi's operas artistically arranged after a famous painting was admirable, but the glimpses even from such master pieces as "Il Trovatore," "Rigoletto" and "La Traviata" were not up to expectations. Outside of the principal character the acting was just about fair and there was too much obvious doubling. The scene showing an act from "Nabucco" is a trifle too long, though the staging of it is good.

KENTUCKY EXHIBITORS MEET.

Members of the State League Get Together at Lexington and Elect Officers—Delegates to Dayton Named.

THERE was a big meeting of Kentucky exhibitors at Lexington on Tuesday, May 21 and 22, when the Kentucky Branch No. 7 of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America held its annual convention. The meetings were held in the Phoenix Hotel and the first session was called to order at ten o'clock Tuesday morning. The roll-call and the reports of officers indicated that the Kentucky State League was in a healthy condition. The members present were happily surprised when they heard of the progress made during the past year and of the good work that had been done in their behalf. It was apparent that the organization had made rapid strides under the guidance of President Dittmar.

Among those present were M. A. Neff, National president, and Orene Parker, National treasurer, who arrived just after the opening and were given a royal welcome.

During the eevning of Tuesday the members were entertained at a banquet in the dining-room of the Phoenix Hotel at which more than forty were present. While thus engaged news of the taking of Vera Cruz by the United States naval forces was received. The band struck up "America" and all joined in singing the National anthem. It was evident to all present that they were south of the Mason and Dixon line, for, as the last notes of the orchestra died away, the famous old "rebel yell" was given with a vim that shook the chandeliers and might have been heard blocks away.

On the second day the convention convened at 11 o'clock with President Dittmar in the chair. Reports of committees and considerable business was transacted after which the convention took up the election of officers for the ensuing year with the following result:

President, L. J. Dittmar, Louisville; National vice-president, J. H. Stamper, Lexington; 1st vice-president, George Bleach, Owensboro; 2d vice-president, John Burkhart, Newport; secretary, Fred J. Dolle, Louisville; treasurer, H. B. Struebe, Louisville. Executive committee, L. H. Ramsey, Lexington; A. B. Arnett, Midway, and the foregoing officers.

Delegates to the National Convention at Dayton: Clarence Bloomfield, F. J. Dolle and H. P Bartram, Louisville; A. B. Arnett, Midway; L. H. Ramsey, Lexington, and Sherman Arn, Maysville. Alternates, J. L. Shroder, H. B. Struebe and H. P. Bartram, Louisville; H. H. Phillips, Winchester; R. M. Brown, Shelbyville, and Spahr Swift, Winchester

After an exciting contest it was decided to hold the next state convention at Lexington.

President Neff, of the National League, addressed the convention and was roundly applauded upon the sentiments expressed in his remarks. The thanks of the members were given to the Business Men's Association of Lexington for their co-operation in the way of entertainment. There was quite an exhibit made by the Nicholas Power Co., L. H. Neal & Sons, General Electric Company, Warner's Feature Corporation, World Film Corporation, Empress Feature Film Company, Universal Film Corporation and Kentucky Photo Feature Film Club.

NEW YORK LOCAL NO. 1 PLANS MEETING.

Newly Organized City League Wants to Meet Motion Picture Exhibitors of Greater New York at Hotel McAlpin on May 7th.

Announcement is made that a meeting of the New York Local No. 1, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, recently reorganized, will be held at the Hotel McAlpin on Thursday, May 7th, at 10 o'clock A. M. The purpose of this meeting is to discuss ways and means of extending the influence of the League to the various Boroughs of Greater New York. To that end President M. A. Neff, of the National League, has been invited to meet with the members of Local No. 1 on this occasion, and has signified his intention to be present.

The Borough of the Bronx has a splendid organization in the Cinema Club, known as Branch A of the New York Local. Efforts will be made at this meeting to form branches in the Boroughs of Manhattan, Brooklyn, Queens and Richmond. To this end exhibitors in those boroughs are cordially invited to be present at the McAlpin Hotel meeting to confer with the members of the New York Local.

There will be a repersentative delegation of Local No. 1 at the New York State Convention in Rochester on May 5th. Those who have arranged to attend are: John J. Wittman, president; R. L. MacNabb, first vice-president; M. L. Fleischman, secretary; T. A. Keppler, William Meehan and Louis S. Harris, second vice-president. The party will leave Monday night, May 4th, and will be accompanied by Crane Wilbur and other prominent photoplayers.

TO DISCUSS TRADE TOPICS.

List of Subjects Suggested for Consideration at the Meeting of Picturemen in Connection with New York Exposition.

The committee in charge of the New York Exposition, to be held at Grand Central Palace, New York City, June 8th to 13th, are arranging to hold an open meeting of motion picture exhibitors and have prepared the following list of topics to be discussed at that meeting by exhibitors, manufacturers and exchange men who may be present:

1. The effect of the Multiple reel on the five and ten-cent show.
2. The desirability and possibility of controlling the length of programs at various prices of admission.
3. Censorship in all its phases.
4. Uniform charges for regular film service and features.
5. The exploitation of fake features by irresponsible exchanges and individuals.
6. The Manufacturer and the Exhibitor.
7. The Exchange and the Exhibitor.
8. The Poster question in all its phases.
9. Motion Picture Supplies.
10. The entrance of manufacturers and exchange men into the Exhibiting Business.
11. Advertising the motion picture theater.
12. The hygienics of the picture theater.
13. Adverse legislation, and the best means of combatting it.
14. Souvenirs, country stores, etc.
15. The church and the picture theater.
16. The school and the picture theater.
17. The establishment of a central National Information Bureau, for exhibitors in all parts of the country.
18. Technical questions pertaining to the operation of a picture theater.
19. The Press and Motion Pictures.

WASHINGTON ORGANIZES SERVICE CLUB.

E. A. Rupert, of the Dream Theater, Aberdeen; J. D. Mansfield, of the Ideal, Centralia; E. A. Zabell, of the Acme, Olympia, and J. W. Alexander, of the Bell, Chehallis, all in Washington, met at Olympia, Wash., recently and formed the Pacific Circuit of Motion Picture Exhibitors. The purpose of the organization is to establish a combination with one theater in each city and to secure a film service adapted to the needs of such theaters. General supervision of all pictures will be exercised. It is intended to extend the organization to cities in British Columbia and adjoining states.

LIVELY SPRINGFIELD CONVENTION.

Illinois M. P. E. L. of A. Men Transact Important Business at Two-Day Session—Housecleaning Among Officers.

THE Illinois State Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was opened at the St. Nicholas Hotel, Springfield, Ill., at 2 o'clock, Tuesday afternoon, April 28th. Thomas Leonard, president of Local Branch No. 1, of Southern Illinois, introduced National President M. A. Neff, who spoke generally on the business outlook. He emphasized the importance of advancement in the presentation of pictures for the reason that the public are daily growing more critical. From personal observations, he said, he was forced to say that picture projection was defective at present.

President Neff closed his remarks upon the arrival of the Hon. W. M. Northcott, ex-Lieutenant-Governor of Illinois, who had consented to deliver an address of welcome. Mr. Northcott declared himself a firm believer in good, wholesome pictures. At the conclusion of the speech, a short recess was taken.

In executive session, upon motion of Mr. Leonard, unanimously carried, the seats of all state officers, with the exception of National Vice-President Dee Robinson, of Peoria, were declared vacant, and the following committee of five was appointed to hear recommendations for the various offices and report at Wednesday's opening session: Thomas Leonard, Johnson City; F. S. Russell, Shelbyville; Mrs. Conrad Striewing, Decatur; L. W. Goodell, Beardstown; G. M. Luttrell, Jacksonville, and A. W. Ackerman, Mason City.

An auditing committee, composed of Charles J. Law, Pana, and Ben Rovin, Springfield, was appointed to audit the books of the secretary. Another, composed of Arthur Simon, Petersburg; Ed. Kunz, Springfield, and Sam Hallowell, Assumption, was appointed to report on the books of the treasurer.

Considerable discussion was given the number of reels being used at present on programs for five and ten cents, the consensus of opinion being that too many were being offered by a number of exhibitors, the chief offenders being men who have recently entered the business.

On Wednesday, the first business was the election of new officers. The committee on recommendations submitted the following list: President, G. M. Luttrell, Jacksonville; first vice-president, Thomas Leonard, Johnston City; second vice-president, W. M. Sauvage, Alton; treasurer, W. W. Watts, Springfield; secretary, W. Bradley, Ottawa; sergeant-at-arms, C. J. Law, Pana. A motion was carried unanimously appointing the members named to the various offices. These officers will serve for the remainder of the year, or until the next state convention is called.

The reports of the committees on the secretary and treasurer were read and accepted.

The following delegates and alternates to the national convention at Dayton were elected: Delegates—Thomas Leonard, Johnston City; F. S. Russell, Shelbyville; W. W. Watts, Springfield; W. Bradley, Ottawa; C. J. Law, Pana; E. C. Bostwick, Pekin; Mrs. Conrad Striewing, Decatur, and H. J. Faust, Auburn. Alternates—Ed. Kunz, Springfield; E. L. Harris, Peoria; Mrs. L. J. Vandraska, Ottawa; L. W. Goodell, Beardstown; A. W. Ackerman, Mason City; J. C. Davidson, Danville; Ed. Carrier, Peoria, and Thomas O'Dowd, Witt.

W. S. Bradley, of Ottawa, made a motion that the delegates to the national convention be instructed to vote for M. A. Neff as the next national president of the league. The motion was seconded and carried by acclamation.

G. M. Wesley, state organizer, who had made the convention possible, was highly commended for his work. Mr. Wesley secured seventy-nine new members during the past six weeks, making a total of 180 in the Illinois state branch at the present time.

Thomas Leonard moved that Local Branch No. 1 surrender its charter and seal and that the fifteen members belong to the regular state organization. Mr. Sauvage, of Alton, amended the motion to the effect that such action would be satisfactory, providing dues were paid within the next thirty days.

Censorship was then discussed. There is much dissatisfaction among exhibitors outside of Chicago who receive their service from that city on account of the cut-outs made by the Chicago Censor Board, some films being cut so as to mar the story. A motion by A. Demblon, of Auburn, seconded by Thomas Leonard, to the effect that the convention go on record as being against all local censorship, but favoring state or national censorship, was carried unanimously. Another resolution, made by C. J. Law, that the organization go on record as being of the opinion that exhibitors should have the privilege to rent their films from any exchange best located for their needs, and that the national president should take this matter up with the manufacturers, was withdrawn after long discussion. President Neff, however, will bring the question before manufacturers in New York at an early date. The mutilating cut-outs in films made by the Chicago Censor Board prompted Mr. Law's resolution.

After an auto trip to Lincoln's Monument and other places of interest the members convened in final session at 4 o'clock. The new officers were sworn in and the date and place of the next meeting were left to the executive committee.

A banquet was given by the local committee in the St. Nicholas Hotel, Wednesday evening.

W. W. Watts and other members of the committee were complimented on the entertainment provided and for the work done in arranging for the convention.

JAMES S. McQUADE.

BUFFALO EXHIBITORS HOLD RECEPTION SMOKER.

The Buffalo Exhibitors' Local of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association of New York State held a smoker and luncheon at the Hotel Statler, Buffalo, on Tuesday evening, April 21st, given in honor of W. A. Douque, the state secretary, who has been in the western part of the state for the past week in the interests of the State Association, and the convention to be held at Grand Central Palace, New York City, June 8th to 13th. Nearly every theater in Buffalo was represented and the managers of the various exchanges were their guests.

Secretary Douque spoke at length on the benefits of the State Association and what is being done by that body, also gave an outline of the exposition. A number of applications for membership was received, which practically affiliates every theater in Buffalo with the exhibitors' association. A majority of those present requested Mr. Douque to make reservations for them for the week of the exposition and convention in New York, meaning that Buffalo will send nearly double the delegates that were in attendance last year. The smoker lasted until the wee small hours and every one had a corking good time. The committee on arrangements consisted of J. A. Pferd, P. Hoffmeister and Mr. Gettle.

UTAH EXHIBITORS ELECT OFFICERS.

A meeting of the Exhibitors' League of Utah was held in the Semloh Hotel, Salt Lake City, on April 6, with a large and representative attendance. President A. J. Davis resigned on account of having become the manager of the Swanson Film Exchange of Salt Lake and First Vice-President J. S. Barlow was elected to succeed him. A vote of thanks was accorded the retiring president for his services to the organization and he was voted an honorary membership. Second Vice-President Clifton Pierce was advanced to the office of first vice-president and J. E. Rhoade was elected to the office of second vice-president. Considerable business of importance was transacted before the convention adjourned.

COPPER COUNTRY EXHIBITORS ORGANIZE.

As a direct result of agitation for higher class motion picture films a number of the copper country exhibitors met at the Crown Theater, Houghton, Mich., April 12th, and formed an organization which will be known as the "Copper Country Motion Picture Exhibitors' League." Representatives of the following named theaters were present and took an active part in the organization: Crown, Calumet, Lyric, Laurium, Pastime, Ontonagon, Savoy, Hancock and Star, Houghton. Officers were chosen as follows:

President, W. L. Foley; secretary and agent, D. E. Rice; treasurer, Robert Nelson; directors, D. E. Rice, Robert Nelson, Ben Gettelman, Arthur Woodward, John C. Vogel and W. L. Foley.

The principal object of the association is to book special feature pictures for the picture houses of the copper country.

BALTIMORE EXHIBITORS WILL DANCE.

Invitations have been issued for the first annual entertainment and ball, to be given at Baltimore under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Maryland. This festive event will take place on Saturday evening, May 9th, at the Lyric Theater, Mount Royal Avenue, near Maryland, Baltimore. Players from several of the leading companies will be present.

CHICAGO EXHIBITORS TO DANCE.

Invitations have been issued for the first grand reception and ball, to be given by the Chicago Exhibitors' Association at the Colisseum, Chicago, Ill., on the evening of Thursday, May 14th. A big time is expected by the moving picture men. Many photoplayers will be present and add to the attraction.

ANOTHER CLEVELAND ORGANIZATION.

A number of exhibitors of Cleveland, Ohio, among whom were E. N. Downs, W. J. Slimm, S. Aubley, W. H. Horsey, S. E. Morris, Frank Kenney and S. A. Lustig, recently met and formed an organization to be known as the Cleveland Photoplay Exhibitors' Board of Trade. A constitution and by-laws for the government of the organization will be adopted at the next meeting.

FOX GETS BALBOA PICTURES.

Through Box Office Attractions Company Makes Big Deal With H. M. Horkheimer, President of the Producing Co.

THE most important film deal that has been negotiated in some time was consummated in New York last week by H. M. Horkheimer, president and general manager of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company, of Long Beach, Cal., and William Fox, of the Box Office Attraction Company, of 130 West 46th Street. The Balboa Company was organized about a year ago and is practically unknown in the East because of the fact that its product was marketed under the brands of other companies to which it sold its productions. It first became known through an arrangement with Jack London to produce pictures based upon that writer's stories, but a disagreement between parties arose and that agreement was abrogated after an amicable settlement had been made. Thereafter the Balboa Company continued to make pictures for several of the leading producing companies awaiting the time when a market for its product under the firm name should appear.

It was for this purpose that Mr. Horkheimer came to New York about four weeks ago with one hundred thousand feet of negative to show to the buyers at this point. After showing some of his product it became evident to all who saw it that the Balboa pictures were considerably above the average and a lively competition to secure that company's output was the result. It was only after considerable negotiation that William Fox secured it for the Box Office Attractions Company. Last week the papers were drawn and signed by all parties, which gives the latter company exclusive control of all Balboa productions and puts that company squarely on the map. Mr. Fox's contract covers North and South America and the West Indies and is estimated to amount in the aggregate to $625,000 annually.

In addition to his contract with the Fox interests, Mr. Horkheimer secured a contract from Sidney Bishop for the European rights to the Balboa product, which should yield another quarter of a million annually, so he is returning home fairly well satisfied with the result of his visit to New York.

The Balboa Amusement Productions Company is capitalized for $500,000. H. M. Horkheimer is its president and general manager and his brother, E. D. Horkheimer, is secretary and treasurer. The company's plant is at Long Beach, Cal., and covers about three acres at Sixth and Alamedas Streets. The studio stage is 100 by 150 feet and is well equipped with properties and scenery. Three producing companies are employed, with Bert Bracken and Henry Otto as principal directors.

Robert Brotherton, a former Selig technical man, has charge of the photographic laboratories and William Beckway is chief cameraman. The scenario department is in charge of Clifford Howard, a writer of stories of merit and a very competent man in his position. By Mr. Horkheimer's contract with Mr. Fox his pictures will be featured as Balboa Feature Films, the Pictures Beautiful. The first release will be ready for distribution in about a week and will be a six-part subject entitled "St. Elmo."

Mr. Horkheimer tells a very interesting story of his struggle to establish his business and pays a high compliment to the loyalty of his department heads and employees generally, without whose personal sacrifices he freely admits he would not have been able to keep up the fight. Balboa features will be awaited with interest.

PROMOTION OF BERT ADLER.

Bert Adler, in charge of publicity for the Thanhouser Company since its inception, and for the past year of Majestic, Princess and Apollo publicity and business detail, has a new post. Last week he was created special representative of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, and C. J. Hite, with a roving commission that will take him to any section of the country where his concern or his chief need him most.

The traveling thing will come as a diversion to Adler, who since the start of the Thanhouser business, has practically never left the office where he prepared every Thanhouser advertisement, news story, poster, and wrote almost all the general business correspondence, from the first. In film circles it will be felt that Mr. Hite's promotion of Mr. Adler was a fitting reward for the latter's long office service. In the rearrangement Jay Carns comes in as publicity manager and Ray Johnston as secretary to Mr. Hite.

"THE ESCAPE" MAKES HIT AT LOS ANGELES.

Word from Los Angeles, Cal., comes to the effect that "The Escape," a multiple-reel feature made by D. W. Griffith from an adaptation of Paul Armstrong's play of the same title, broke all records at Clune's Theater in Pasadena on April 9 and 10.

MacARTHUR—TOONE.

Popular Advertising Manager of the Moving Picture World Marries Charming Young Woman of Jersey City.

ON Thursday evening, April 30, at St. John's Episcopal Church, Jersey City, N. J., and in the presence of a host of the relatives and friends of the contracting parties, Mr. Archibald MacArthur, Jr., and Miss Natalie Toone were united in holy matrimony, the Rev. Dr. Hadley officiating.

The bride is one of the popular members of the younger social set of Jersey City and the daughter of Mrs. George Ege. Mr. MacArthur is an active member of the Newark Bay Yacht Club and has a host of friends in business and social life. He has been connected with the Moving Picture World for the past five years and is its advertising manager.

The ceremony at the church was celebrated with the full Episcopal service. The bride was given away by Mr. James Edson Souder, a brother-in-law, and was supported by her sister, Mrs. Edson, as matron of honor, with the Misses Hazel Graham and Eva Kaiser as bridesmaids and Miss Hazel Souder, the bride's niece, as flower girl.

The bridegroom was attended by Mr. William Hall Campbell as best man and had for ushers Messrs. Harold Febrey, Wendell P. Milligan, Jack Edward Moore and Benjamin Franklin Jones.

After the ceremony the bridal party and a few friends of the bride and groom attended a reception given by Mr. and Mrs. James Edson Souder at their residence, 123 Gifford Avenue, Jersey City.

Mr. and Mrs. MacArthur will spend their honeymoon in the Bermudas.

QUICK WORK AT THE EDISON STUDIO.

Manager Horace G. Plimpton and his corps of assistants have received many congratulatory messages upon the remarkable speed with which work was resumed at the studio after the recent fire, which caused heavy damage to the Edison Studio in the Bronx, New York. Anyone who saw the mass of ruins and water-soaked debris on the day of the fire would not have believed it possible that work could be resumed within seventy-two hours after the fire, including Sunday. Everybody struggled manfully against the overwhelming odds, with the result that the Edison release schedule was preserved, intact.

The great battle scene from "The Southerners," which was totally destroyed, was improved upon by Stage Manager Collins in the arrangements which he perfected at once.

"Dolly of the Dailies," the serial film in which Mary Fuller is starring, presented great difficulties because of scenes which had been used in previous films that were totally destroyed, together with the furnishings, and had to be duplicated exactly. One of Miss Fuller's dresses, ruined by smoke and water, had to be worn in several scenes still to be made, and Miss Fuller spent a hectic evening with her dressmaker, surrounded by still pictures of previous scenes as patterns for the new dress.

Marc McDermott, another heavy loser, was forced to wait outside of one of the uptown churches Sunday morning for a haberdasher, capture his man and lead him off to his store so that he could get a duplicate of a cap purchased especially for one of the "Man Who Disappeared" films. On Sunday afternoon Mac was hard at work in the old Biograph Studio on 14th Street.

FUNERAL OF W. W. KIRBY.

The funeral services for William Warner Kirby, traveler and lion tamer, were held on April 26, at Woodlawn Cemetery, New York. Representing the picture industry were E. J. McGovern and Chester Beecroft.

Mr. Kirby, who was a member of the Paul Rainey African expedition and circus man for years, was injured by a lioness during the making of a scene in "Lucille" at Universal ranch, on April 14. He succumbed to blood poisoning three days later. The animal was shot. It had been at the plant about six months, and while it had never injured any one before it had shown signs of restlessness.

ROSS BUILDING AT PORT ARTHUR.

Benjamin Ross, of Port Arthur, Ont., was in New York last week purchasing an equipment for his new Colonial Theater now in process of erection at Port Arthur. The new house is to be one of the finest in point of design and will cost $75,000. Its seating capacity will be 1100. Mr. Ross also operates the Corona and the Rex theaters at Fort William, Ont. He has been in that territory for the past three years and likes it, notwithstanding that he is a New York boy. Look on the map and you will see that Port Arthur is some walk from Broadway; you will find it about midway on the northern coast line of Lake Superior, but it is some growing burg.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"A SOUL ASTRAY" (American).

Again the "Flying A" company scores a tremendous hit in this stirring society drama. The story is one that is fascinating in the extreme and that holds the interest throughout. The settings were evidently selected with great care and reproduce with minute detail incidents in the topography of Honolulu. Ed Coxen plays the lead supported by Winifred Greenwood and George Field, an invincible trio, supported by other prominent stars.

Scene from "A Soul Astray" (American).

The story is that of two childhood lovers. The boy grows to manhood, dissipates a fortune and then disappears. The girl faithful to her promise patiently awaits her lover's return. After years of absence she learns of his whereabouts through a snapshot picture of a world-touring relative who unknowing espies him as a picturesque character in the Hawaiian Islands. She writes him and on first thought he is about to return to her, but finally writes anonymously that her lover died. After a long period of sincere mourning she accepts the attentions that have been offered by a sincere admirer since the departure of her childhood lover.

Photographic quality and dramatic action are exemplary.

"ON THE MINUTE" (Selig).

"On the Minute" is a thrilling new picture drama of the Selig Polyscope Company that deals with the very pertinent subject of graft in great municipalities. Every city in its making and during its progression has been afflicted with men and their minions who are merely interested in its affairs trying to gain enough for themselves and then "make a getaway," laying it upon the powers higher up.

In this play the mayor's veto is the proposition that bars a criminal alderman from rushing through a bill that will rob the city of millions. The leader of the gang has grown so bold and is so swollen with arrogance that he writes a letter to the mayor ordering him to pass the bill and then significantly adds: "We will shake the plum tree." The mayor, unshaken by this bold declaration, insists he will "veto." Thereupon, the creatures of graft kidnap the mayor the night before the bill has consideration, with a view to detaining him out of the city, so that the measure cannot possibly become a law. In the interim, his secretary feels that something is wrong and that she must do something to rectify matters. The chief grafter sends a well-known safe-breaker in the mayor's office to secure under any circumstances the incriminating letter he sent the mayor, and the girl catches him at his work. At the point of a gun, she forces the man to open the safe, secures the mayor's veto and "on the minute" rushes into the council, and prevents the passage of the iniquitous measure by default, just as the mayor himself, who has escaped from his captors, appears upon the scene. All in all, the play is as impressive in its action as it is in its construction, and certainly has an air of up-to-dateness that should commend it to picture playgoers. Adele Lane plays the part of the secretary, Edwin Wallock is the righteous mayor, and Wm. Stowell is impressive in the part of the chief grafter. This will be released May 11.

"THE HILLS OF SILENCE" (101 Bison).

A hot-blooded, galloping melodrama of the early West, portraying horrid battles between immigrants and Indians in which is depicted the rude and at the same time romantic lives of the far Western pioneers; their dangers, pleasures and sorrows together with everything else that belonged to those adventurous days, when the redskin was monarch of the unchartered wonderland that the white man was destined to buy in coins of red blood and hazardous toil.

Scene from "Hills of Silence" (101 Bison).

These were the days when only the fittest survived; when physical energy, quick wit and determination spelled success or failure, and when the road to the imaginary El Dorado was spotted with the graves of those who were not cut after the proper pattern.

"THE LURE" TO BLACHÉ STUDIO.

Several members of the cast of "The Lure," which closed in Philadelphia Saturday night, shipped their theater trunks and make-up boxes to the Blaché studios in Fort Lee, and started work immediately in the motion picture version of "The Lure," under the direction of Madame Alice Blaché.

This is the first instance in which a successful stage production has been planned for presentation in the motion picture theaters during its regular season, and fulfills the prophecy that great dramas of the future will be prepared both for stage and motion picture presentation during their original production and that the great artists of the future must be equally well trained in reading lines and in pantomime.

In the preparation of "The Lure" for the screen more than one hundred scenes were employed of which the stage version only supplied twenty-three. Thirty-five of these additional scenes are exteriors, while fourteen elaborate studio sets are required for the interior scenes. In the cast will be Kirah Markham, Lucia More, Lola May, Claire Whitney, Fraunie Fraunholz, James O'Neil and Wallace Scott. Bernard Daly, noted for his clever interpretation of Irish roles, has been especially engaged as leading man.

"THE OLD FIRE HORSE AND THE NEW FIRE CHIEF" (Vitagraph).

There is an embodiment of humor and pathos in this comedy feature that borders upon the dramatic. It is marked by a keen satire and a touch of sentiment that keeps us musing and laughing alternately. One moment our emotions are stirred and the next our risibles are aroused by the continuous play from lights to shadows which make it one of the most enjoyable pictures possible. The displacement of the old fire chief by a progressive suffragette and his chagrin at the loss of the position is very touching. The same deep feeling is evoked by the old fire horse when the auto fire-truck robs him of his usefulness, after years of faithful service. The climax is reached in a joyful period when they both have an opportunity of showing their undisputable right of recognition, during the burning of a home and the rescue of its occupants, by their efforts. The people see their mistake of dismissing them from the fire department and at once demand their return to their old positions. This feature will appeal to all classes as an attractive and delightful feature.

"ASHES OF HOPE" (Essanay).

Francis X. Bushman plays a new part in the role of Fred Willard, a theatrical manager. Never before has Mr. Bushman been called upon to play the modern impressario and theatrical manager. His interpretation of this character is splendid and the finishing touches he gives makes it realistic. The story concerns a young dancer, who by force is introduced to an attorney. The lawyer insults her and she slaps his face in a crowded cafe. The theatrical manager is in love with her and he becomes heart sore when he witnesses the embarrassment of his sweetheart. She is taken to a convent where she remains for three days, but when she returns Willard refuses to believe where she has been. Some time later Zalata is tried for murder and the emotional scenes that take place in the courtroom are indeed heart interest and tearful ones. Zalata is finally acquitted, but refuses to have anything to do with Willard. She enters a convent and leaves the theatrical manager to pine his heart away. A just penalty for one so shallow and without confidence. The scenic effects are magnificent and the photography is of crystal clear quality. This production is booked for release Friday, May 15.

Scene from "Ashes of Hope" (Essanay).

"IN THE HOUR OF TEMPTATION" (Great Northern Preferred).

Miss Betty Nansen, the distinguished emotional actress, appears to excellent advantage in this three-part photodrama, which is constructed with a view to providing her with another role particularly suited to her artistic temperament. "In the Hour of Temptation" may be classed as a social drama, in which Miss Nansen appears in the role of Jane Bernard, whose husband has divorced her through no fault of her own. While seeking solace at a fashionable seaside resort, she meets Robert White, a man who can adjudge the innate goodness of a woman whatever the rest of the world man say. Later she attracts the attention of David Lennox, a man of means and unsavory reputation. Having learned through the medium of an illustrated paper of Jane's divorce, Lennox figures upon an easy conquest, but in this he is doomed to disappointment. He is repulsed and then notifies the hotel management that Jane is an adventuress. From this point until the close the story becomes one of absorbing interest. She is obliged to sell her jewels in order to meet her obligations and later sells a brooch, which she had picked up on the floor of the dining room. How Dame Fortune favors her at roulette, and the manner in which Robert White thwarts the designs of David Lennox are presented in gripping sequence.

Scene from "In the Hour of Temptation" (101 Bison).

In all the series of the Great Northern "Preferred Feature Attraction," Miss Nansen has not been provided with a role so completely to her liking and affording her greater opportunity for the display of her emotional talents. As a feature presentation of dignity and strong appeal to human interest "In the Hour of Temptation" is sure to prove an exceptional offering. The usual standard of Great Northern excellence in photography and close attention to detail is observed and in the concrete the production is one certain to command praise and hold interest.

ALLEN FEATURE FILM CORPORATION.

The Allen Feature Film Corporation through the aggressiveness of Edgar O. Brooks, the general manager, has developed within a very short period a large business among New England exhibitors which already bids fair to outstrip many of its older competitors. Mr. Brooks is well known as the former publicity manager and later salesmanager of the Gaumont Company, of New York, and his wide experience and aggressiveness is proving of great value to the Allen Corporation.

The home and executive offices of the company are at the Union Theater, Providence, R. I., one of the Allen properties, and it has been necessary to establish branch offices at 88 Boylston Street, Boston, and 408 Gaiety Theater Building, New York. Present plans contemplate other offices in Portland, Maine; in New Haven, Conn., and in Springfield, Mass. Charles Allen, Jr., treasurer of the corporation, has but recently returned from an extensive trip to England and the Continent, made for the purpose of acquiring exclusive United States rights for as many of the great European sensations as could be obtained. At the present writing the Allen Feature Film Corporation now controls on state right lease over sixty high class three-, four- and five-reel features, produced by such noted companies as Gaumont, Hepworth, True, Aquila, Turner, Helgar and many other famous producing companies.

"WHEN CONSCIENCE CALLS" (Lubin).

This is one of George Terwilliger's best stories, wonderfully true and wonderfully pathetic. A worthy couple have saved and saved to buy a little ranch on which they have cast a longing eye. Then a promoter comes along and induces them to invest in his scheme that will double their money in quick time. The couple fall for the investment and a few days later find that the promoter is a swindler and hiding behind the bankrupt law. The two men meet and fight, the promoter appears to be dead and the worthy man takes the money that he has been robbed of and giving it to his wife, flees to the Everglades and is hunted like a beast. Time, however, brings reparation. The promoter makes amends to all his victims and secures the friendship of honest people. Mr. Terwilliger, who is now directing a Lubin company at St. Augustine, Fla., has given the photoplay an excellent cast and beautiful atmosphere.

"A MILLION IN PEARLS" (Victor).

It is not the "confidence man" that the average person needs to fear. Its the cheap crook who forces his way into your house during the small hours of the night and makes off with the family silver or what not. The "confidence man" doesn't do business in that way. His is a game plus brains—and the average person is not a big enough fish for his net. Its the wealthy fellow—the banker and the jeweler who have to fear the aristocracy of the underworld. These brainy crooks devote themselves to developing clever means of making big "hauls" and defeating the law. The jeweler or the banker is forced to depend upon the agent of the law to devise ways of defeating the crook to the count.

And while you and I—the average—perhaps have little personal concern in the affair we watch with interest as the battle goes on between master crook and master detective. And while we, perhaps, admire the cleverness of the "master of crime" we are always glad when the law proves itself just a bit the cleverer and brings the crook to time. And the law usually does. In this play we have the "Master crook"—and she happens to be a woman—and the law contending for the upper hand. It's a thrilling bit of criminal history and you are going to enjoy it. Anne Harris is the name of this most brilliant crook who schemes to get possession of a rich jeweler's wealth beyond imagination.

"THE AWAKENING OF DONNA ISOLLA" (Warner's).

All the true artistry for which Marion Leonard is famed shines forth in this picturesque three-part Warner's Feature.

It is a splendid vehicle for Miss Leonard and she makes the most of her opportunities by imbueing the part of Donna Isolla with life and sympathy.

Scene from "The Awakening or Donna Isolla" (Warner's).

There are several big scenes that the director, S. E. V. Taylor, has handled with great skill, particularly the scene where Donna Isolla leads her countrymen in the attack upon the palace. The production as a whole will surely find favor in the eyes of the viewers, who continually demand novelty films.

RAMO FILMS EXPANDING.

Changes for the betterment and enlargement of its interests has occurred in Ramo Films, Incorporated. Homer H. Snow has taken a firm hold on the direct management of the company. C. Lang Cobb, Jr., manager sales and publicity, becomes chief adviser and member of the board of directors. The company has been recapitalized at $200,000. Mr. Cobb left for Montreal on April 27 to open a Montreal office. The Denver offices will be in charge of J. C. Butts, late manager for Golgate Feature Service, with offices in the Nassau Building. Mr. Butts will commence his bookings on Monday, May 4. On the same day Messrs. Bacon & Nolan, of the World's Leader Features Company, of 921 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo., will hang out their busy day flag and start booking Ramo Features. Other offices will be opened in turn as fast as Mr. Cobb can get from one to the other. Each will be supplied with the twelve best Ramo Features to commence with and one a week will be added until other plans are consummated. All offices will be under the direction and control of Mr. Cobb, personally. Ramo Films, Inc., has its own studio at 102 West 101st Street, New York City.

"THE GREAT DIAMOND ROBBERY."

"The Great Diamond Robbery," the thrilling melodrama which is the first product of the Playgoers Film Company, with Wallace Eddinger as the star, will have its first Broadway presentation at the New York Theater, commencing on Sunday next. This six-reeler not only abounds in gripping situations but is enacted by a cast of unusual excellence, which includes, besides the star, such well-known Broadway favorites as Gail Kane, Charles J. Ross, R. E. Graham, Elita Proctor Otis, Martin J. Alsop, Dorothy Arthur, Edward Gillespie, Purnell B. Pratt, Herbert Barrington and Percy Standing.

KLEINE WILL OPEN CANDLER THEATER.

According to the plans of the lessees of the new Candler Theater, at 220 West 42d Street, New York, that house will be opened early this month with George Kleine's feature production "Antony and Cleopatra." The Candler is a very beautiful house, constructed to be used for the largest dramatic productions. The lessees of the theater are Sam Harris, George Kleine and Sol Bloom. It will seat 1,200 and cost about $750,000.

LYNCH GETS RIGHTS TO "THE CHRISTIAN."

E. W. Lynch, a well-known theater man of Worcester, Mass., has secured the rights to "The Christian" for New York, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut, and has opened offices in Room 1207 World Tower Building, 110 West 40th Street, New York, with J. H. Lynch in charge.

"The Christian" is probably one of the most powerful dramatic photoplays ever made by the Vitagraph Company. It is in eight parts and each part is replete with beautiful effects, interesting scenes and strong situations. Adapted from the book of the same title written by Hall Caine, it tells the story in a connected and lucid manner, bringing out the dramatic points with far greater force than the author could possibly do with mere words. The leading characters of John Storm and Glory Quale are portrayed by Earl Williams and Edith Storey in a manner that leaves nothing to be desired and impresses all who witness the production with a sense of reality which these children of the author's brain do not otherwise obtain.

Mr. Lynch is to be congratulated upon having secured the rights for this picture to such good territory, also for having secured so good a picture to signalize his entrance in the renting business. Mr. Lynch has a reputation, however, of doing things well, for his picture theater at Worcester, the Pleasant, is one of the finest in New England.

KLEINE-CINES COMPANIES ON FOREIGN TRIPS.

The big Cines studios at Rome were the scenes of lively preparations some three weeks ago when three big companies of Cines players left for remote parts of the globe, according to a letter from the Baron Fassini to George Kleine.

One company sailed for Bombay, India, from which point the players will penetrate into the heart of the country seeking suitable camps, while a second company containing some of the Cines principals headed for Central Africa, where they hope to obtain some interesting views of jungle life in addition to appropriate settings for some big multiple reelers. The third company, containing Anthony Novelli and other of the better known Cines players, in charge of Prof. Fausto Salvatori, went by rail to Venice, Italy, first, where some big costume dramas will be staged. From Venice, Prof. Salvatori sails for Cairo, Egypt, with his party, where they will probably remain for some months.

MILLER BROS. 101 RANCH ENTERTAINS WARNER'S FEATURES.

Thursday evening, April 30th, was a red-letter night for the officers and employees of Warner's Features, Inc., who filled nine boxes at Madison Square Garden as guests of the Miller Bros. 101 Ranch wild west show. As a special tribute to his guests, Joe Miller, who has appeared in several Warner's Features, rode his white horse across the arena and gave the party a military salute that was followed by a war whoop from the throats of the Indians who have appeared in half a dozen pictures released by Warner's Features, Inc. The invitation from Joe Miller to attend the Garden performance came as a return courtesy for the hospitality accorded his party on Monday afternoon when a new Miller picture was shown to Chief Iron Tail, and a delegation of Indian braves and cowboys in the model projection room of Warner's Features, Inc., at 130 West 46th Street, New York.

HAZEL DAWN IN FAMOUS PLAYERS PRODUCTION.

The Famous Players Film Company began the production last week of that great international success, "One of Our Girls," the celebrated drama which so closely interweaves the interests of two mighty nations, England and America, written by the late Bronson Howard. Miss Hazel Dawn, the beautiful and artistic little star, who achieved fame in the title role of the popular light opera, "The Pink Lady," will play the role of Kate Shipley, "one of our girls."

The subject is an especially timely one, as it teems with patriotic interest, and the thrilling situations of the unusually strong plot, combined with the inspiring sacrifice of the plucky and quick-witted American girl in behalf of her little French cousin, furnish all the elements necessary to the successful screen drama.

NEW ECLAIR PICTURES.

The Western aggregation of Eclair players is rapidly earning a name for itself because of the wonderful films being hurned out at Tucson, Arizona, where the Eclair Company is courted. "Whom God Hath Joined," a two-reeler, released Wednesday, May 6, lives up in every way to the reputation earned by the last Eclair western, "The Caballero's Way," and is cram full of Western atmosphere, daredevil riding and exciting gun play. It incidently tells a story of love's sacrifice and the bravery of a simple but true-hearted cowpuncher.

Notes of the Trade.

THE practical proposition of "preparedness" is admirably illustrated by the Selig Co. in a series of three or possibly four-reel pictures that will be released at an early date. These scenes show our soldier boys in every arm of the service, infantry, cavalry, artillery, and the signal corps; in setting up exercises, in making and breaking camp, in drills and skirmishes, and in cavalry tactics in which the troopers quite outdo the feats of ordinary circus riders.

W. J. Ferguson, famous along Broadway and one of America's best known character actors, has been secured to play a part in an Imp feature now in the course of production. "His Last Chance" is the title of the two-reel feature.

Dave Warner is resting in New York after absenting himself from Broadway for a period of seven months. He will get away shortly in the interests of Warner's Features, Inc., the objective points of his trip being the Eastern offices.

A helpful factor in the production of Reliance and Majestic Mutual Movies is Walter Stanhope, assistant to David W. Griffith, the head producer of those two brands of motion pictures. Though called an assistant, Mr. Stanhope is Mr. Griffith's alter ego during working hours. Mr. Stanhope is in every way an able lieutenant.

Robert Leonard is portraying the part of "Swede Larson," in a one-reel drama of the same name, now being purchased by Lloyd Ingraham and his company of Rex players. The story has its setting in the lumber camps of the North.

Max Asher, principal comedian for Allan Curtis' Joker comedy company, officiated as toastmaster at a "Dutch banquet" given at the Photoplayers' Club recently. All who attended the function were garbed and made up as Germans. Francis Ford, Al. E. Christie, Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and several others from the Universal studios in Hollywood assisted in the fun-making.

"The Wheels of Destiny," a coming two-reel Majestic drama written by Philip Lonergan and produced by John Adolfi, has for its principal character a young man, who through misfortune is reduced to direst poverty and in consequence is embittered toward mankind.

Miss Bess Meredyth is playing lead in "The Count's Infatuation," a one-reel comedy being produced by Director David Kirkland's Nestor company. William Wolburt and Eddie Boland also appear in the picture.

Arthur Mackley, the old sheriff of Essanay pictures, is at work on another Reliance Mutual Movie drama. It is of the "Child of the Golden West" variety, showing the reformation of a wide open Western mining town through the influence of a youngster. "The Angel of the Gulch" is the title of the picture.

Miss Florence Hackett, of the Lubin players, offers a prize of ten dollars in gold for the best article of five hundred words contending that the demands upon a successful film actress are greater in their variety, and are more taxing, than the stage exacts from its players. The only conditions attached to this offer are that the matter be typed and be received by Miss Hackett at the Lubin Studio, 20th Street and Indiana Avenue, Philadelphia, not later than June 15.

"After Dark" is the title of a one-reel drama in which J. Warren Kerrigan appears in the title role and which is now being produced by Joseph De Grasse and his company of Victor brand players.

The use of radium in a motion picture is a novelty which will be seen in the one-reel detective drama from the pen of Russell E. Smith, "The Stolen Radium," which Director Jack Adolfi has just completed as a Majestic Mutual Movie. It is the second of a series of detective dramas, the first of which will be "A Pair of Cuffs."

A genuine Western welcome was given the members of the new Eclair Motion Picture Company arriving April 20 on the Golden State Limited, by members of the Western Eclair company. Among those in the party that detrained at Tucson were Robert Frazier, Mildred Bright, William Sheerer, Gene Horbostle, Burt Hands and George Nagle.

Adele Lane, of the Selig Polyscope Company, at Edendale, Cal., is acting in two films at once, one being a pretentious four-reeler under Director Morton, entitled, "Mirror of Life" and the other a comedy entitled, "The Millionaire Baby." The one character intensely dramatic and the other frivolous! It will be interesting to note the contrasts if they are released anywhere near together.

"Mike and Jake Are Rivals," will be the title of a new Joker brand comedy, in which Max Asher will furnish the fun, and which will be started this week by Allan Curtis, director of the Joker Company.

Henry Walthall has attracted attention all over the country among local motion picture fans by his work as the "Gopher" in "The Mysterious Shot," a Reliance Mutual Movie feature which was put before the public April 4.

Rowland and Clifford, who claim to have made nearly half a million dollars with "The Rosary," have made an arrangement with Wm. N. Selig to make a pretentious film production of their greatest dramatic success. "The Rosary" will be staged on a very elaborate scale and the big scenes in Italy will be reproduced in astonishingly attractive style.

Rare portrayal of animal life and methods utilized by trappers of jungle beasts will be a feature of "Prowlers of the Wild," a two-reel feature just completed by Otis Turner's company of "Special Feature" brand players, of which Miss Anna Little and Herbert Rawlinson are leading woman and leading man, respectively.

Flattering reports are being received at the general offices of the American Film Manufacturing Company as to the general merit of the two-reel "Flying A" subject, "The Last Supper." The official report of the National Board of Censorship is also highly complimentary. That inestimable good will come of the exhibition of this and kindred subjects is a foregone conclusion.

Our Lawyers' Communication to The General Film Co.

In view of protests received daily from Motion Picture Theatres against the elimination of PATHE'S WEEKLY and, in view of the many demands from Moving Picture Theatres that the PATHE'S WEEKLY be continued on their program, we have found it necessary to refer the matter to our attorneys, who have written the following letter to the General Film Company, which letter explains to the various exhibitors in question the reason for their not being supplied with the PATHE'S WEEKLY at present.

GENERAL FILM COMPANY, 200 Fifth Avenue,
NEW YORK CITY.

April 28, 1914.

Dear Sirs:—In the contract which regulates the relations between yourselves and our client, Pathe Freres, and under which you have the right to demand as many copies of Pathe Films as are released by them, and as you require, it is provided in part as follows:

> "The party of the second part (General Film Company) covenants and agrees that it will, during the continuance of this agreement, use its best efforts to introduce the same (Pathe's Films) and extend the use thereof by Motion Picture Exhibitors, using the licensed projection machine."

For years Pathe Freres have been supplying you with the film known as the Pathe Weekly and have averaged a large number each week. Within the last fortnight, you have been cutting your orders materially. Pathe Freres would have been puzzled to find an explanation for such an unprecedented reduction, as has taken place, in what they inform us is one of the most popular films known to the moving picture world, had it not been for the receipt of letters from licensed exhibitors containing such expressions as these:

> "We are informed by exchange that they have cut the Pathe Weekly. We have been getting the Pathe Weekly regular at about seven days and do not care to cut it from our list—what figure would you book us direct?"
> "Ever since you started the Pathe Weekly, this house has been running it, or had until recently. If there is anything that you can do to help me get this back, please do so."

This and many other similar requests—some by wire, furnished our client with the answer looked for. In addition to this, Pathe finds in the City of New York that there are large posters advertising the withdrawal of the Pathe Weekly and the substitution of another weekly in its place.

We have advised our client that your action in this connection not only does not amount to using your best efforts to introduce their films and extend their use by Motion Picture exhibitors, but it shows an organized effort on your part to suppress the use of their films by exhibitors. This, in our opinion, constitutes a clear breach of your contract with Pathe. Our client demands that, without delay, you make the necessary amends for this willful breach of your obligation, and that you notify us in writimg of your future actions with regard to their films. In case we receive no satisfactory reply, we shall be obliged to take such steps for our client's protection as the law provides.

We remain, dear Sirs,
Yours very truly,

Coudert Brothers

WE INTEND TO HELP YOU JUST AS WE ADVERTISED THAT WE WOULD. WRITE US

SAFETY FIRST

Protection of Human Life comes first in the construction of

Simplex

Speaking of SIMPLEX safety, the Strand Theatre program says:

"As it (SIMPLEX) is the only entirely enclosed machine on the market, we believe its claims for absolute fireproofness are absolutely justified."

The absolutely enclosed mechanism of SIMPLEX completely protects the film from dangerous contact with the light rays. It reduces fire risk to the lowest possible minimum.

SIMPLEX IS THE BEST RISK BECAUSE IT OFFERS THE LEAST RISK

This is only one of SIMPLEX many exclusive features. It safeguards the lives of millions.

Mr. Exhibitor, first gain the confidence of your audience. This can best be accomplished by installing a

IN THE NORTHWEST.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., is interested in the operation of the Lake Harriet motion picture theater, on Upton Avenue, South, near Forty-third, now owned by W. F. Nierling. The house has been described as "The first mother-supervised, father-co-operated, neighborhood encouraged, picture show in Minneapolis." It is situated half way between the Lake Harriet and Robert Fulton schools. Naturally the parents in the neighborhood have been interested in the class of films presented. Mrs. Frank S. Bissell, a graduate of the University of Minnesota and clubwoman, had a son in each school. She says the children of the neighborhood emulated he western heroes too much. The posters, as well as the films, were blamed. Incidentally, Mrs. Bissell was a member of the committee on censorship of the Woman's Welfare League. Overtures to the manager to have the mothers and teachers pass on the films failed to get anywhere she says. Then Mr. Nierling took charge of the theater. There are young Nierlings in both schools and Mrs. Nierling is a member of the parent-teachers' organizations. The experiment of a model neighborhood theater was agreed upon. A committee of four—Two from each of the parent-teachers' organizations will pass upon the films. The aim will be to select good clean farce, stories of literary merit and historical, industrial, travel or nature study films. The public library is interested in the experiment and will furnish once a week programs from its stock of educational slides. These slides are intended for use in schools but the library board believes they can also be put to good use in neighborhood theaters. The Woman's Welfare League and other parent-teacher organizations will watch the work and, if it is a success, seek to have the idea adopted in other community theaters.

Emil Nelson, proprietor of the Star Theater in the West End of Duluth, Minn., has had plans drawn for a new 50 x 140 foot theater to seat 1,000 persons. It will cost about $55,000.

Manager C. J. Woodmansee has given up his lease on the Majestic moving picture theater at Bemidji, Minn., and in the future will operate only the Grand. The lease will be taken over by Fred Brinkman who will operate the theater.

J. H. Eves who recently sold his interest in the Rex Theater at Fergus Falls, Minn., is said to be contemplating opening a house at Staples, Minn.

The Columbia Theater at Brainerd, Minn., shows confidence in its music by using in its art signature "The Best Pictures and Music."

L. M. Moon is contemplating opening a moving picture theater at Black Duck, Minn.

F. L. Perrizo has sold his moving picture show at Easton, Minn., to John Migelis.

Zenor & Knudtson will open a new photoplay theater at Elmore, Minn.

The Colonial Theater at Lake City, Minn., is issuing the "Colonial Newsette" twice a week to give particulars of its feature programs.

L. N. Scott, manager of the Metropolitan Opera House at Minneapolis, Minn., was host to the field, staff and line officers of the First Regiment and First Field Artillery, Minnesota National Guard when his house showed the six-part feature "With the Greeks in the Firing Line."

The new Star Theater is now open for business at St. James, Minn.

The Motion Pictures and Vaudeville Managers' Association of Minneapolis gave a ball at the armory in Minneapolis, Minn., April 13.

B. B. Jackson, assistant superintendent of schools in Minneapolis, has opposed the issuance of a new license for a moving picture theater to Nathan Kahn, who seeks to replace the house at 802 Sixth Avenue, North, which was recently destroyed by fire. The location is across the street from a school and a branch public library.

F. Nicolin, Sr. sold the opera house at Jordan, Minn. to Tony Maerz.

George Johnson of Vienna, S. D., has purchased the Jewell Theater at Oldham, S. D.

Rucker Brothers will erect a new opera house at Wibaux, Mont.

Dr. A. J. Dix is said to be contemplating engaging in the moving picture business at Mitchell, S. D.

A new building will be constructed for the Ruby Theater at Madison, S. D., it is reported.

Children under twelve years of age were barred from moving picture theaters in St. Paul, Minn., during the time schools were closed, because of a scarlet fever epidemic, unless they were accompanied by their parents or guardians. The order was issued by the city health officer.

"Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp" was a well-chosen subject for the Saturday matinee at the Dreamland Theater in Wilmar, Minn., which invites the patronage of women and children for that show.

E. A. Adams formerly connected with the John Cort and B. C. Whitney enterprises will be the manager of the Park Theater at Braierd, Minn., which has been taken over by F. E. Nemec of St. Cloud, Minn., effective about May 15. Some of the earlier bookings include George Kleine's "Last Days of Pompeii" and "Quo Vadis?" and "Antony and Cleopatra."

A Minnesota house recently featured a film as a "story of a gang of swell yeggmen," apparently having more disdain for public criticism of such reels than most Northwestern managers.

The New Empress at Brainerd, Minn., has inaugurated special feature shows for Tuesday and Wednesday nights with special matinees for school children at 4 p. m. on those days. "The Battle of Shiloh" recently was shown under the auspices of the local Woman's Relief Corps, the auxiliary organization of the Grand Army of the Republic. Admission of twenty and ten cents is charged for feature nights.

Elmer L. Lippert of the Pastime Theater at Le Sueur, Minn., has been making dates for the "Checkers" films in Southern Minnesota, booking them out of Mankato, Minn.

The Princess Theater at Minneapolis, Minn., gave a special school children's matinee for the production of "Washington at Valley Forge."

Moving pictures of the parade of the United Commercial Travelers of Minnesota which were taken at a former convention at Crookston, Minn., were a feature at the last convention held in Duluth, Minn.

The Empress Theater of Denver, Col., which headlines famous first run features above Sullivan-Considine vaudeville is publishing a time table of the attractions for the benefit of patrons.

The Miles Playhouse at Minneapolis, Minn., is inviting its patrons to come early, either afternoon or evening, and enjoy an hour of first run Universal features before the vaudeville show starts. No charge is made.

The Princess Theater at Denver, Col., took advantage of all the local color in "The Range War," featuring Joe Ryan and Josephine West—"a Colorado boy and a Colorado girl in a Colorado product."

F. A. Hazlebaker of Dillon, Mont., secretary of the executive committee of the Montana-Panama Exposition Committee, believes the organization can raise enough money by conducting picture shows to erect a state building at the big show in San Francisco. He proposes to film the mines of Butte, the Glacier Park lakes, the logging, beef raising, cement, oil and water power industries and send them on tour. Even if the plan does not create a building fund, it is believed good advertising.

D. K. McCauley has sold the Wonderland Theater at Madelia, Minn. to J. E. Rhoades and Verne Haycraft.

Dan F. Eselin and H. A. Sherman of Minneapolis, Minn., are said to have taken a lease on the new opera house which is proposed for Cloquet, Minn.

Jule Frankel and George Allgauer have secured control of the Ray Theater at East Seventh and Fauquier Streets in St. Paul, Minn.

D. F. McPeek who is having the building at 216 South Main Street in Aberdeen, S. D. remodeled for use as the Lyric moving picture theater, expects to have the house open about the middle of May.

John Globe, Solomon Sax and G. A. Whitman have been named as a committee by the Commercial Club of Eveleth, Minn., to consider forming a stock company to erect an opera house.

The Bijou Theater, at Missoula, Mont., "The show that makes your 15 cents look like a dollar," is handling its program in a commendable manner. Ernest Richard Moeller, a baritone, who has been singing in the northwest coast houses for some time, was a recent attraction at the Bijou.

Director Medcalfe, of the Empress orchestra at the Empress Theater, in Missoula, Mont., had a special and appropriate program when "Robin Hood" was featured on Easter Sunday.

The Arcade Amusement Company, of Minneapolis, Minn., will erect a one-story brick, tile and concrete theater at 1000 Sixth avenue, North, in that city, at a cost of $22,000.

Edward Anderson, formerly in the moving picture business in Chicago, has been made manager for the Swanson Film Company's Grand Theater, in Pueblo, Col., to succeed Frank Hall, who went to Salt Lake City, Utah, to operate the Rex. Anderson has announced that he expects to have many stunts this summer for his patrons. One change that comes with the new management is longer programs.

The Columbia Theater, at Brainerd, Minn., advertised "Between Savage and Tiger" as "a film that cost us $100 a day. We give it to you for adults 20 cents, children 10 cents."

L. C. Meier, of Chicago, has accepted a position with the Globe Theater, at Salem, Ore., where his pipe organ solo work will be featured. The Globe has installed a new Simplex machine.

A summons has been published from the circuit court of Multnomah County, Oregon, in the suit of the Laemmle Film Service Alliance, a domestic corporation, against the North American Films Corporation, a foreign corporation, ordering the latter company to appear May 28. If the company does not appear the Laemmle Corporation will apply for judgment for $1,350 and interest and for the further sum of $9,000 damages and for order for the sale of the personal property of the defendants attached by the action.

Place-cards, designed by Ray Bagley, from strips of films were a clever feature of the banquet given by Manager Fred Quimby, of the Empress Theater, at Missoula, Mont., in celebration of the first anniversary of his photoplay house. The supper to the employees was given at the Palace Hotel at midnight. Music was furnished by the Empress orchestra, the Elks' Quartette and William Amundson. Those present were C. S. Alderman, D. D. Richards, William Amundson, Tine Johnson, Gust Lotje, William Dickinson, George Stone, Lester Cochran, A. Farmer, Ray Bagley, Carrie Schottlekorb, Mr. and Mrs. George Johnson, Williard Perry, R. L. Medcalfe, P. G. Seaton, R. G. Bailey, Ed Le Vasseur and Jack G. Harrah.

The Hewitt Moving Picture Company, giving six reels of pictures and vaudeville, recently played a week's engagement at the Pinney Theater, in Boise, Idaho.

The lease on the Victor Theater, at Little Falls, Minn., has been taken over by E. I. Eves, of Fergus Falls, Minn.

W. A. Taylor has sold his interest in Dreamland Theater, at Rapid City, S. D., to A. L. Brown.

E. Pallansche, of Browns Valley, has purchased the Lotus Theater, at Red Lake Falls, Minn.

The Commercial Club, of Hartford, S. D., has appointed a committee to make plans for the erection of an opera house.

The Dassel Photoplay Company, of Dassel, Minn., will call its new house in that place the Premier. Present plans call for shows but four nights a week, but the bookings include the highest class of multiple-reel subjects. However, it is not improbable that the schedule will be increased to nightly shows. Construction of the new theater building, which will be modern in every sense of the word, was expected to begin May 1 and by rushing work, allow the house to be opened by June 1.

Many industrial moving pictures were on the program for the second annual American Woman's Exposition at the Armory-Coliseum in Minneapolis, the week of May 18.

Contagious diseases have interfered to a certain extent with the operation of the Lake Harriet moving picture theater in Minneapolis, which has been organized for the co-operation of parents', teachers' and other betterment societies. However, the first week under this plan was the most successful of the four weeks since the theater changed hands Among pictures which were approved were "The Blue Rose," "Pickwick Papers," "Napoleon's Life," "The Little Minister," "Lincoln's Love Story," "Patsy Weekly," and "Cinderella and the Bears." A similar movement has begun in St. Paul. The Fourth District of women's organizations indorsed a children's matinee at the Dale Theater, Dale street and Selby avenue, for Saturday, May 9. Behind the movement are the Women's Civic League and the League of Protestant Women, who are anxious to have certain days on which they can safely send their children to the picture shows. The films selected for the initial performance at the Dale were "Cinderella," "The Three Bears," and "Jack and the Beanstalk." In conjunction with the pictures the fairy tales will be read by Mrs. Robert Liggett, of Duluth, Minn., who has been active in similar work in her home city. The women's clubs of Duluth have been busy the past winter in an attempt to raise the standard of pictures shown.

The Elite Theater, at Arlington, S. D., owned by Wheeler Brothers, is being enlarged and remodeled.

The Lyric Theater, at Austin, Minn., Manager Gates, has adopted the plan of having the house adorned each month with a new floral dress.

New seats and an inclined floor are among the improvements at the Elite Theater, in Winona, Minn.

Rev. G. L. Morrill, a prominent minister of Minneapolis, talked upon the pictures when the Pathe Freres' "The Life of Our Savior" was shown at the Metropolitan Theater, in Minneapolis. The films were accompanied by a concert of sacred music.

The Auditorium, at Minneapolis, announced that on May 10 it would begin a May Festival of Photo-Drama Pageants. George Kleine's "Antony and Cleopatra" was the initial number.

Construction work on the Grand and Abrahamson Theaters, in Duluth, Minn., is being rushed, and it is hoped to have the houses open for business by June 1.

A campaign for the beautification of all school grounds in Ramsey County, Minn., has begun. Moving pictures were used to arouse interest among the two hundred teachers and pupils who attended the organization movement at the City Hall in St. Paul.

The Great Northern Land & Improvement Company and the Interstate Realty Company, of St. Paul, have equipped their offices with the "Victor Animatograph" machines, which are being promoted in the Northwest by Raths & Seavolts, motion picture manufacturers, Third street, St. Paul. These portable projectors will be used to show films recently made at Carnegia Townsite, the location of a new steel plant in Northern Minnesota. The pictures include views of the harbors of Duluth, Minn., and Superior, Wis.

Peter Rober and his son, John, of Luverne, Minn., will engage in the moving picture business, opening a show in the brick building owned by the former.

The Empress Theater, in Salt Lake City, Utah, has commenced a season of moving pictures.

Moving picture theaters in North Dakota will aid in a plan to raise a fund for the construction of a boys' dormitory at the state farm school. Slides will ask each farmer to donate the price of one bushel of wheat.

Sentiment on the subject of creating a board of censorship for films and the operation of the shows on Sunday appeared about equally divided in Walla Walla, Wash. Petitions on the two sides of the question were filed with the city commission by the church workers and the photoplay managers. Each had about 1,700 signers.

Construction of the new theater, which is to be erected in Anaconda, Mont., by Andy Mandoli, owner of the Reel Theater, in Anaconda, will begin about July 1 and will be finished about September 1. It will be devoted to high-class pictures and vaudeville.

E. V. Bartle has sold the Harrison Theater, at Hopkins, Minn., to G. E. Newell, of Minneapolis.

Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Hanson will open a new moving picture theater at Cokato, Minn.

The Unique Theater, at Waseca, Minn., has been sold to L. M. Valentine, of Mason City, Ia.

Dr. E. E. Fratna has sold his interest in the moving picture theater at Silver Lake, Minn., to Benjamin Pawlak.

IN THE MIDDLE WEST

IT is a matter of some importance to exhibitors in the middle west that the discussion of the effect of moving pictures on the eyesight is a common topic among editors in the central states. The editorials which are detrimental to the photoplay business are based upon statements by the Journal of the American Medical Association, which suggests that licenses be issued only to proprietors who agree to abide by the following rules:

"To operate the machine by a motor instead of by hand; to have an adjustable takeup or speed regulator and an automatic fire shutter which renders more accurate the sequence of the individual images; (2) to use the arc light with the direct current which is brighter and steadier than that with the indirect current; (3) to have a proper screen, free from disagreeable and harmful glare. The so-called 'mirror-screen,' consisting of a mirror glass with a frosted surface, seems to be one of the most desirable; (4) to use no reels which have been in use for over a month (reels of an inferior quality or which have become scratched from much use give poor definition); (5) to allow at least three minutes intermission between the reels."

The intermission referred to is along the line of the request made by Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, superintendent of schools in Chicago, for a city ordinance compelling a five-minute intermission. The idea of injury to the eyes, suggested in her request, has been counteracted by an article written by Dr. Leonard Keene Hirshberg, M.A., M.D., of Johns Hopkins University and syndicated throughout the United States. In his article he answers emphatically NO to questions asking if there is harm in the moving picture theaters. He plainly says the pictures do not injure eyes, health nor morals, and gives his reasons. It was featured in the Hearst papers for Sunday, March 15, and several astute managers saw that it was reprinted in their local papers or comment upon it made.

The Elite Theater, at Stromberg, Neb., is to have a new home.

While certain factions of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the middlewest are unalterably opposed to the moving picture, the trend of sentiment among the clergy and laymen is in favor of adopting its use. The Northwestern Christian Advocate, which really is the official paper in the middlewest says: "It is encouraging to note that the demand of the moving picture patronage for scenes of a moral and educational character seems increasing. It is said the most profitable moving picture ever produced was the religious subject "From the Manger to the Cross." A correspondent, after discussing the subject of censorship and seeing only a slight abatement of the evils, suggests: "Suppose the churches in any given unit of territory were to organize on the basis of giving in each of them one entertainment a week of high-class films and other features. * * * Everything that will serve to make the church a center of community life and minister to community recreation is religious and can be carried out in the name of Christ." This is in direct contrast to the attitude of a leading trustee in a prominent Methodist Episcopal Church in the middlewest. A correspondent of the Moving Picture World was talking to him about the relation of moving pictures to the "amusement" section of the "Church Discipline." "I firmly believe," said the churchman, "that the moving picture is sending more people to hell than the saloon." The World correspondent started to remonstrate, but the churchman made argument or explanation absolutely useless by adding, "I have never seen a moving picture, but I have read so much about their effect."

This man was well posted on many subjects, in fact, he was a capable attorney.

Travel pictures, educational films and a number of original slides were shown at a miniature theater fitted up in the basement of the Auditorium, at Omaha, Neb., when the Low-Cost-of-Living Show was held.

Railroad companies in the central states have issued circulars stating under what conditions they will accept for shipment stereopticon outfits, motion picture films and gas tanks. The shipments will be accepted as passenger train baggage only when duly protected and labeled to indicate the contents when the shipments are of an inflammable character. Cylinders containing non-inflammable material must be tagged with a green label and motion picture films must bear a yellow label.

A new hippodrome theater is being erected at Crystal Lake Park at Sioux City, Ia.

Solomon P. Bowsher, operator for the G. R. & I. Railroad at Berne, Ind., is fitting up the D. S. Wittwer Building at that place for use as a moving picture theater. This is said to be the fourth attempt to establish the photoplay in Berne, the first three having failed.

Sullivan & Stanton have sold the Princess Theater at Mason City, Ia. to Raymond Dutro.

The Paragon Feature Film Company of Omaha, Neb. is negotiating with the Chamber of Commerce at South Bend for making some pictures about the city to be used for advertising purposes.

G. C. Dilsaver is said to be contemplating the erection of an opera house at Garden Grove, Ia.

A floral display in the lobby was recently used as an advertising feature by the Royal Theater at Chillicothe, Ohio.

Mayer Brothers of Chicago are showing a film "The Clothing Industry" in many middle-west theaters through co-operation of their local dealers and the theater men.

Construction of the New Empress Theater on Jackson Street in Sioux City, Ia. has begun.

An observation room for the accommodation of small theater parties is a feature of the new Mystic Theater, which has re-opened at Findlay, O., after having been closed since January 1. This is a balcony with six large comfortably upholstered chairs. The entire house is an achievement in attractiveness and comfort, the decorations being tasty and seats and aisles being well arranged. Mary Pickford in "Hearts Adrift" was the re-opening attraction. Stanley L. Lawrence is the manager.

The Shullburg Amusement Company of Shullburg, Wis., expected to occupy its new moving picture theater in the Leamy Building about May 1.

Business men of Coggon, Ia., have raised a fund of $18,000 for the erection of a new opera house.

Weber & Sanders, representing the Maquoketa Amusement Company of Maquoketa, Ia., are planning to increase the holdings of that amusement monopoly in Maquoketa. A site has been leased for the construction of an airdome in West Platt Street. The place will be 34 x 120 feet and will seat 800 persons. Moving pictures, vaudeville and stock will be played. The company already controls the opera house, a vaudeville house, a moving picture theater.

An addition of twenty feet will be made to the Bullard Building on Main Street in Ossian, Ia., which has been used by David Jacobson owner of the Majestic Theater, who will use it for his moving picture show.

L. H. Hooker has re-purchased the Casino Theater at Charles City, Ia., from Mrs. McKenzie who has been operating it for several months. He will give a five cent show except on Wednesdays and Saturdays when ten cents will be charged for a six-reel show.

L. J. Nelson has sold his interest in the Palace moving picture theater at Adel, Ia., to his partner Walter Bonnewell who now is sole owner.

Damage suits for $10,000 each have been filed against the village of North Milwaukee by John Hardy, proprietor of a moving picture show at 173 Villard Avenue, North Milwaukee and John B. DeLorenzo. The men allege that on January 29, 1914 they were falsely arrested and imprisoned and were humiliated and degraded by being taken to the village jail through the streets by the village marshal and mayor.

City Solicitor L. L. Duke of Ottumwa, Ia. has ruled against the petition of the theater owners of that city asking that the city council repeal the ordinance which forbids Sunday shows. He wants the question carried to the state supreme court for ruling that will be a precedent in Iowa. Repeal of the present ordinance, which was asked by twenty-five per cent. of the voters of Ottumwa, would subject the mayor to removal from office under Cosson law, he holds. The church people, headed by the ministerial association, are fighting the plan to operate the shows on Sunday.

Mrs. W. A. Nelson of the Electric Theater at Hawarden, Ia., has installed a new machine, preliminary to other improvements to the house. A new front and thirty-five feet in length will be added.

Mrs. Jessie L. Davis has purchased a site in Hartland, Wis. upon which she probably will erect a moving picture theater.

A new combination opera house and moving picture theater seating about 700 persons is rumored for Fairfield, Ia. If the house is erected it will be financed by outside capital.

Henry Peters of Hartley, Ia., has purchased the Grand Theater at Le Mars, Iowa.

Manager Harry J. Lerner of the Surprise Theater at South Bend, Ind., has installed a new automatic orchestra.

Jack Robbins, founder of the Last Chance Boys Club is in Jackson, Mich., to help a boy who is under sentence to prison for life, proposes to start a one-cent motion picture show in the city. The work is co-operative with that of the Big Brothers Club. Mr. Robbins believes that a properly conducted moving picture show would keep many boys from going wrong. As an example he points to Youngstown, Ohio, where good clean pictures are shown for a penny under the auspices of the Big Brothers and that organization makes up the nominal loss.

Robert O. Ford is now manager of the Starland Theater at Kellerton, Ia., having purchased the interest of his partner, Edward Jackson.

Manager L. P. Todd of the Star Theater at Mt. Ayr, Ia., has inaugurated Saturday matinees.

"Absinthe" at the Armory Theater in Bloomdale, O., drew the largest crowd ever at a moving picture show in that city is reported.

The Nebraska State Food Commission has planned to follow the example of the Illinois State Food Commission and educate the citizens of the state, through moving pictures, to the perils that lie in the carelessly conducted corner groceries, meat and bakeshops. The board has secured 2,500 feet of pertinent films which were shown to state officials at the state house in Lincoln before the tour of the state was started.

Pictures of Mooseheart, at Aurora, Ill., the lodge home of the Order of Moose in America, were featured at the Grand Theater in Galion, O.

Emil Johnson of Fremont, Neb., is contemplating opening a moving picture house in Fremont.

Manager Berkholtz of the Gem Theater at Rio, Wis., recently conducted a gold-watch voting contest for the most popular lady in Rio.

The Lyric Theater at Rice Lake, Wis., was closed the night before the municipal election, pictures giving way to an anti-saloon lecturer.

O. E. Swanstrom has purchased the half interest of Orville Bass in the moving picture business at Dayton, Ia.

C. W. Bateman has sold the Royal Theater at West Union, Ia. to C. S. Dewey, owner of the building in which the house is situated.

Harry Smith, until recently connected with the Unique Theater at Waukon, Wis., has embarked in the moving picture business. He will play a circuit composed of Wilton, Norwalk, Cashton and Westby.

The University of Nebraska at Lincoln, Neb., has used moving pictures in class work for the first time in its history. Films of the beet-sugar industry, taken under the direction of the conservation bureau, were shown to the students in agricultural industry.

Rudolph Klatt, who is to manage the Idle Hour Theater at New Hampton, Ia., for Perry Smith, its new owner, is enthusiastic over the motion picture industry. When he graduated from high school he took for the subject of his oration "The Kinetoscope."

The Idle Hour Theater at Leon, Ia., is remodeling its front in order to secure greater seating capacity.

Manager John D. Cuddihy, of the Calumet Theater at Calumet, Mich., has changed the policy of his house to one of vaudeville and moving pictures. He will give two shows each night.

Citizens of Chester, Ia., have appointed a committee of three to proceed with plans for constructing a new opera house 40 x 60.

Frank Schaeffer, of Ottumwa, Ia., expects to have his new moving picture theater in Fairfield, Ia., completed and opened about June 15. The second floor of the building will be fitted for use as a public hall.

Plans of M. W. Jopling, of Marquette, Mich., for his new moving picture and vaudeville house at Munising, Mich., call for a single-story 50x100 foot fireproof structure, high enough to admit a balcony and with total seating capacity of 700. The house will be booked in connection with the Marquette and Escanaba theaters, owned by Mr. Jopling.

G. H. Stout and J. C. Tapps, who have opened a moving picture theater in Finn's Opera House at Garden City, Ia., will give shows on Wednesday and Saturday nights.

Masterpieces of literature in moving pictures form a big part of the Sunday afternoon services of the Independent Congregational Church at Battle Creek, Mich. Some recent subjects shown the churchgoers were "Silas Marner" and "A Winter's Tale." The films were preceded by an outline of the story by the pastor, Rev. Thornton A. Mills.

Although voters of Alliance, Neb., at an election decided that they wanted the moving picture theaters open on Sunday, Manager Dubuque, of the two houses there, has announced that insofar as is possible he will give religious pictures on the Sabbath. He has no desire to antagonize the residents who are opposed to Sunday shows.

Dayton & Hyde have closed their moving picture show at Batavia, Ia.

W. E. McAlpine has given up the management of the opera house at Bellmond, Ia.

Milan Brewer, who has opened a moving picture show in the Glidden Building at Oakville, Ia., will give shows Wednesday and Saturday nights.

The Superior Film Company, of Des Moines, Ia., recently made some pictures at Trenton, Mo., which were shown at Rader & Brown's Gem Theater. The films will be used in the Missouri building at the exposition at San Francisco.

Wis., is making plans to enlarge and re-decorate his house. A new front will be one of the improvements.

Following the re-election of Mayor Burnett, of Albion, Mich., that dignitary announced his plans for a clean-up crusade. Among the reforms which he desires is the licensing of moving picture theaters and another providing for the censorship of all films.

The Palace Theater at Cedar Rapids, Ia., used an entire page in one of the Sunday papers in advertising "Les Miserables."

The management of the Majestic Theater at Columbus, Ohio, announces that every person connected with the house, from ushers to musicians, is an unofficial censor. If any one of them sees anything offensive in a film, a conference is called and the offending scenes are cut out.

Mrs. Annette McCrea, of Chicago, recently gave a civic improvement talk illustrated with slides at the Jay Mac Theater in Appleton, Wis.

Similar work is being done in Ohio by representatives of the Ohio State Civic Improvement League, who give picture shows and lectures on "Neighborhood Improvement," but school auditoriums are used whenever possible.

The Park Moving Picture Theater on Mitchell street in Milwaukee, Wis., will be remodeled and made fireproof. It also will have a new indirect lighting system.

A theater seating 2,000 persons will be included in the new $100,000 building to be erected at the corner of Fifth street and Grand avenue in Milwaukee, Wis., by the Fred Miller Brewing Company. Construction will begin about May 1.

The Orpheum Theater Company, of Fairfield, Ia., is said to be negotiating with Harry E. Smith for the erection of a new moving picture theater building, seating about 700 persons. The site on West Broadway now occupied by the Airdome is under consideration. MIDWEST SPECIAL SERVICE.

SAN FRANCISCO

THE Parnassus Theater, in the Sunset district, San Francisco, recently taken over by J. W. Withan, is temporarily closed, but will be opened at an early date.

J. S. Lipson was in San Francisco recently in the interest of the 1913 Pendleton "Round-up" pictures. He is associated with Will A. Ragan, and the two are covering the California territory.

The Independent Film Exchange has given up its quarters on the second floor of the Grant Building, Seventh and Market Street, and is now occupying the large store at 116 Golden Gate Avenue, formerly occupied by the Kinemacolor. Much more space is now available than formerly, and stocks will be enlarged.

The Capitol Theater on Sacramento street has changed hands and is now being conducted by Haverkoss Bros., who are featuring a Mutual service.

W. W. Wood, manager of the San Francisco branch of the World Feature Film Corporation, is preparing to make a business trip over the territory, which extends from the Oregon line to Santa Barbara, covered by this branch. This will be the first trip through this field since the establishment of the local office. C. B. Price, district manager, is making his headquarters here and will remain for some time.

The Portola Theater will shortly feature the photoplay "In Mizzoura," for a week. Burr McIntosh, who plays the role of Vernon, the blacksmith, in the play, recently delighted San Francisco playgoers at the Alcazar Theater where he filled an engagement. The Portola Theater management will display the photoplay for the first time on the Coast.

The Savoy Theater, which has opened with moving pictures, after having closed for some time, has concluded a successful run on Captain Kleinschmidt's "Arctic Hunt" pictures. So many persons in San Francisco have interests in Alaska that these pictures have proved to be of more than ordinary interest.

The Rudolph Wurlitzer Company of California has been incorporated at San Francisco with a capital stock of $10,000, the interested parties being G. H. Leatherby, W. E. Creed and C. G. Dall. The concern makes a specialty of musical instruments for photoplay houses, and occupies the entire second floor in the Musical Building in Market street.

The Pageant Film Company has been incorporated here with a capital stock of $30,000 by C. L. Wold, C. Linn, F. G. Redding and A. Loissel.

The Valencia Theater, erected shortly after the San Francisco fire of 1906, is to be sold at public auction on May 21. This house was opened originally as the home of a stock company, but its location is such that it cannot be made a success. Later, it was given over to moving pictures, but even then it could not be operated at a profit, and is now being devoted to religious services at which moving pictures are featured.

Another San Francisco playhouse, erected shortly after the great fire, that is to be sold shortly at auction, is the Princess Theater on Ellis street, near Fillmore. For several years this theater has been given over to moving pictures and is now being conducted by Bert Levey.

If present plans do not miscarry it will be but a short time until a moving picture house will be established near the beach, in a district known as Carville. Plans are being drawn by Paul F. De Martini, 2123 Powell street, for a one-story brick structure to cost in the neighborhood of $10,000.

A. Saba is awarding contracts for a moving picture theater to be erected at Seventh and Adeline streets, Oakland, Cal. The house will have a capacity of about 400 and a ventilating system will form a part of the equipment. The structural work is in charge of Harvey P. Smith, Blake Building.

Sol Lesser, president of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., is back from a hurried business trip to New York. While away he purchased the rights for this territory in the "Old Curiosity Shop," "The Cloister and the Hearth," and the California rights to "East Lynne."

J. L. Warner, manager of the San Francisco branch of Warner's Features, Inc., made a business trip to Los Angeles recently. M. E. Kreiger has been placed in charge of the Los Angeles branch, succeeding Fred Dawes. An addition to the traveling force out of the San Francisco office has been made in the person of C. L. Margolis. Business with this concern has picked up greatly of late and a great success is being met with in placing "Zingo," which is having such a successful run locally, at Grauman's Imperial.

The General Film Company, 138 Eddy street, has its offices badly torn up during the remodeling that is being done, but Manager L. Boreis anticipates that within a couple of weeks the new offices will be ready for occupancy. With the additions that are being made the floor space will be about doubled.

Willis Thompson, who conducts a leading photoplay house at Visalia, Cal., made a visit to San Francisco recently. He announced that general conditions in Tulare County were very promising.

Thomas Gibson, of Ukiah, Cal., was also a recent visitor here, and while in the city made arrangements for adding vaudeville to his moving picture program. He conducts the Rex Theater.

N. Berlin, of Livermore, Cal., who conducts the Photoplax House, is enlarging this theater and will add vaudeville when the work is completed.

The Sequoia Theater, Fort Bragg, Cal., has changed hands. The lumbering season has opened near that place and there is now considerable business activity.

The Playhouse, St. Helena, Cal., has changed hands, having been purchased recently by D. Hubbard. Mr. Kisner, the former owner, has left on a trip to Colorado, and upon his return plans to enter the business field again.

The Occidental Film Manufacturing Company has been incorporated at Los Angeles, Cal., with a capital of $500,000, the directors being A. F. Moore, G. F. Moore, M. V. Robertson, J. D. McCutchan and J. Murray.

The Angeles Film Company has also been incorporated at Los Angeles, Cal., the capital stock of this concern being placed at $250,000. The interested parties are A. L. Bartlett, E. H. Jordan, G. S. Richardson, G. C. Schofield and Irene M. Van Laughingham.

One of the features of Home Coming Week at Bakersfield, Cal., to be held late in April, will be an exhibition of "Range Life," a rodeo event, which will be recorded on the films. This event will be in charge of Frank J. Griffin.

The first Baptist Church, of Modesto, Cal., at the suggestion of its pastor, Rev. A. E. Burch, is combining moving pictures, a band concert and a chorus choir with a sermon by the pastor, in a public service each Sunday night which is held at the Auditorium, instead of in the church. At a recent service "Birds of the Inland Marsh" and "Naples and Its Environs" were the pictures shown.

Work is under way on a number of State pavilions on the grounds of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco, and in each of these a moving picture hall has been provided for. From advance information it is judged that every State building, and thirty-eight have already been arranged for, will have a room for the exhibition of pictures. Foreign countries will show moving pictures, and many private exhibitors will also use this form of publicity, making an international parliament of films such as has never been seen before.

P. H. Corr, chairman of the Massachusetts Board of Managers for that State's participation in the San Francisco Exposition, was here recently and stated that motion pictures would play an important part in the exhibit that is being planned. "We shall show our splendid water system," said Mr. Corr; "our parks, our docks, the principal streets of the large cities, the fishing activity at Gloucester and scenery along the Charles, Merrimac, Connecticut and Blackstone rivers, and in pageantry reproduce the battles of Lexington and Bunker Hill, the Boston tea party, Paul Revere's ride, the landing of the Pilgrims and other historical incidents."

The California Motion Picture Corporation of San Francisco has secured the services of House Peters, a motion picture star of the first magnitude, as leading man for its feature productions. Mr. Peters comes to this city direct from the Famous Players' Film Company, with which he has achieved the reputation of being one of the most finished actors in the motion picture profession. Local playgoers recently had an opportunity of seeing some of his work in "The Pride of Jennico," which enjoyed a splendid run here. He has been secured by the local producing firm with the special purpose of playing opposite Beatriz Michelena, the beautiful prima donna, who will be starred in some of the first feature productions that will be made. The California Motion Picture Corporation will commence operations at San Rafael about the first of May.

CHURCH

ST. LOUIS, MO.

THE "Know St. Louis Moving Picture Show" will open at the Coliseum for a week, beginning June 8th. After that the films will be taken on the road and exhibited all over St. Louis trade territory. The pictures show scenes of St. Louis streets, offices and factories of different lines of industry, and also many interesting points about the city, such as the Missouri Botanical Gardens, and scenes in the many parks. In addition to the "Know St. Louis" films, two or three acts of vaudeville and a regular photoplay will be on the program. Admission to the Coliseum will be free, tickets to be furnished by the business houses which are interested in the show.

Angelich Brothers now control both the Sun and the Rainbow Theaters, within a stone's throw of each other in North Broadway. Both of these houses show a five-reel program. Five cents admission is charged. George Angelich is the manager of the two houses.

The managers of all St. Louis theaters have been asked to attend a meeting to be held at the Building Commissioner's office, where plans for improvements will be discussed. An effort will be made to get the managers to make their theaters as safe as possible, and if a manager refuses to accept the suggestions offered, it is said that the Building Commissioner will revoke his license. It is further stated that the Building Commissioner's office expects to force the theater owners into the courts to get a definite settlement as to the Building Commissioner's authority in ordering protection against accidents by fire.

The Burkely Weekly, a Current Events Film, has been launched and is proving very popular. The reel is devoted to happenings in St. Louis, East St. Louis, Southern Illinois, and Missouri. R. T. Edwards, moving picture editor of the St. Louis Times, is managing the weekly.

Miss Anne Shaefer, of the Western Vitagraph Company of Santa Monica, California, had her picture printed in the St. Louis Times, Tuesday, April 21st, as winner in that paper's popular photoplayer's contest. Miss Shaefer is a native of St. Louis, and is very popular with the motion picture playgoers.

Wm. J. Flynn, general manager of the Associated Theaters, which control seven of the largest amusement houses in the city, has sent a hundred and twenty-five thousand post cards to different parts of the world, setting forth the facts and figures that prove St. Louis to be the foremost motion picture city. The post cards carry a statement that more than fifty-seven and a half million people attend the St. Louis photoplay houses each year. Mr. Flynn will shortly issue another lot of cards of a similar nature.

The St. Joseph school for deaf mutes, at Garrison and Franklin avenues, uses motion pictures two or three times a month for the benefit of the children being educated there. The Mother Superior of the institution says she finds the pictures a great help and benefit in the school, and in speaking of the pleasure the children derive from the pictures, makes the true observation that to her charges everything is considered from a visual standpoint, and that life itself is simply a long continuous moving picture.

East St. Louis has just finished a Health Week campaign, conducted by Superintendent Potts, of the city schools, Health Commissioner Short, and officers of Business and Civic bodies. Moving pictures showing how the fly carries disease and contamination were shown in many of the public schools and theaters during the week. All of the city's nine thousand school children were given a chance to see the pictures free. Lectures accompanying the films were delivered by Dr. John Owen, of the Indiana State University.

Edward Stevison, manager of the Old Grand Central at Sixth and Market Streets, says that the Keystone two-part comedy, "Mabel at the Wheel," is the greatest laugh producer his house has ever exhibited.

Emmett Dalton, one of the famous Dalton boys, who figured largely in the stirring history of the Southwest, is in St. Louis with three reels of pictures, which were made in Bartlesville, Oklahoma, depicting the life and activities of the Daltons. Mr. Dalton will exhibit his pictures here in a few weeks.

John Karzin is building an airdome that will occupy the entire block between Seventeenth and Eighteenth, and Chestnut and Pine streets. This will be the only airdome near the downtown district, and it should do a good business, as this section of the city, which is only a few blocks from Union Station, is densely populated. The new airdome will be the largest in the city and will seat four thousand. It will be ready for its initial opening by the twentieth of May. Mr. Karzin, who is one of the oldest exhibitors in the city, is also proprietor of the Royal Theater, at 1629-31 Market street, and its twin, the Casino, which is just across the street. The Royal uses Mutual and the Casino General service, four reels of four to eight-day pictures being shown at each theater, for which a five-cent admission is charged.

The Famous Theater, at Seventh street and Franklin avenue, uses the actor-behind-the-screen style of talking picture. The Famous runs a five-reel Universal program, first and second runs, uses a Wurlitzer orchestra, and finds no trouble in keeping all seats filled. Five cents admission is charged.

MAYOR J. M. Curley's promised sensation in connection with an alleged attempt by an architect to get $500 from Marks Harris, of Boston, for a license for a moving picture theater at Humboldt avenue and Townsend street, Roxbury, fell flat last week at the hearing at City Hall upon Harris' petition. Harris explained that the story grew out of a misunderstanding of the words used in the agreement he made with the architect. The hearing room was crowded when the session opened, on Wednesday afternoon, April 22. After strenuous opposition was registered by property owners in the vicinity of the proposed house, against allowing a motion picture house to be erected at the corner, the mayor called on Mr. Harris to take the stand and pointedly asked him if the story he told Samuel Borofsky that an architect wanted $500 for getting him the license was true. Harris explained that there was a misunderstanding. He said that Max Kallman was the architect in question. He was engaged to make plans for the structure, and agreed to make them, supervise the construction, and agreed to make plans at the mayor's office for $500. A further explanation was furnished by Harris A. Pakulski, counsel for the petitioner, but regardless of all explanations, the mayor refused to grant the license. Mayor Curley stated that it has come to his ears that people are using his name, and promising licenses for moving picture theaters for pay. This, Mayor Curley is determined to stop, and has stated that not only is no one authorized to make such a promise, but also that he will prosecute the matter to the limit, and refuse a license to anybody who has paid any money to anyone for a license.

The mayor also gave a public hearing upon a petition of Jerome A. Petitti for a license for a moving picture theater at 392 Hanover street, Boston, and, although the petition was strongly opposed by the clergy, police and educational authorities, the mayor has taken the matter under consideration. Dominic Maggi was one of the few residents who favored the granting of the petition, and after declaring that the rough element found in the North End came from other sections of Boston, he declared, "I was down in the North End last week and believe that a moving picture theater would be of great educational benefit to those walking the streets there."

Tom Murray's Empire Theater, Holyoke, Mass., is a burlesque house, but on April 23-25 made an exception in favor of "The Last Days of Pompeii." Mr. Murray is very enthusiastic over this feature production, which pulled a capacity business.

Herman Rifkin, of the Eastern Feature Film Company, Boston, came on to the Hub from New York, where he now makes his headquarters, to look things over in his home office, in charge of Morris Sandler.

A moving picture theater is slated for 15-21 Green street, Worcester, Mass., to be built for Maurice Barsky.

The Massachusetts Amusement Company has been formed in Boston. It is capitalized at $10,000 by Samuel Lebowich, Joseph Lebowich and Charles A. Dooley, of Lynn.

Commonwealth Lodge, No. 19, K. P., of Boston, has made arrangements to show several reels of moving pictures at its next meeting at Historic Hall, on May 6. This will be the first time that motion pictures have been employed at this lodge.

Representative Levine, of the William Fox interests, was in Boston again this week, and has secured offices for the Box Office Attraction Film Rental Co., on Piedmont and Plesant streets. In this connection it is presently rumored that Mr. Fox will bring his Greater New York Film Exchange service into Boston.

J. A. McDermott and his brother, Charles R. McDermott have acquired control of Continental Hall, 184 Main street, Worcester, Mass., and will turn the hall into a moving picture theater, unless present plans miscarry.

J. A. Eslow, general manager of the N. E. Universal Film Exchange, Boston, was called to New York this week, in conference with his home office. Mr. Eslow was offered a position as general representative of the "Big U" program in England, but did not feel like leaving the country at this time.

The Eastern Theaters Company, Boston, has purchased the Casco Theater, Portland, Me., from the Casco Amusement Company, and will assume control on May 4. The house will be continued by the new owners with the Universal program, just as before.

George K. Robinson, formerly manager of the Orpheum Theater, Haverhill, Mass., is now associated with the W. E. Greene enterprises.

No licenses for moving picture theaters will be granted by Mayor Curley, of Boston, to persons who propose to operate in wooden buildings. Furthermore, the mayor proposes to direct the owners of moving picture houses now doing business in wooden buildings to make a shift into quarters of fireproof construction, as soon as possible. Announcements to this effect were made last week, and the mayor stated that there are about 18 applications for licenses of moving picture theaters, to be located in wooden buildings, on file in his office. All, he said, would be denied licenses, and he declared further that all such applications would be denied during the next four years. It is not the mayor's desire, he said, to force the owners whose theaters are located in wooden buildings to move into fireproof quarters at once. He will expect them, however, to get into fireproof quarters within four years. The mayor said that it seems to him that the moving picture people are especially anxious to locate in about every church that becomes abandoned. Most of the places, the mayor said, were fire traps, and not to be given licenses.

A recent incorporation for $700,000 is the Cooperative Feature Film Corporation, of Portland, Me., by A. F. Jones, A. A. Maxwell, B. M. Maxwell, A. B. Farnham and J. P. O'Donnell.

The Malden Amusement Company has organized at Malden, Mass., for $50,000. The officers are Frederick P. Green, Sarah Green and Harris Ellenberg.

Marcus Loew's St. James Theater, Boston, is now to be officially rated as the St. James Amusement Company, capital $50,000, with M. Douglas Flattery, William Lovey and Victor J. Morris as the officers.

A full moving picture equipment will shortly be installed in the new hall of the parish house to be erected for the First Baptist Church, Malden, Mass., for which more than $60,000 has been raised. The building will be four stories high, and so fixed that 2,500 can be accommodated. The Rev. Charles M. Moss, D.D., pastor, will use moving pictures every Sunday night, when the building is completed.

Sarah Bernhardt in "Camille," and Madame Rejane in "Mme. Sans Gene," were special features this week at the National Theater, Boston.

The special committees to arrange for the reception and entertainment of the delegates to the Massachusetts State Branch, A. F. of L. convention to be held next September, include the name of William C. Franke, business agent of the Operators' Union, Boston Local 182, under "Smoke Talk" and "Hotels."

Bennet & Snow have purchased the Alhambra Theater, Lowell, Mass., from Max Wolff, and intend to continue it as a rhoopiay house.

Manchester, Conn., is soon to have a new theater, to be devoted to photoplays, as work on the house now building on Birch street is nearly completed. Pictures will be the policy of this house.

Drastic changes in the regulations governing the placing and maintaining of signs, advertising devices and marquees on the streets, as well as the removal of all advertising matter from marquees, has been decided on by the Boston street commissioners. This will hit some of the local photoplay theaters.

The Pastime Theater, Boston, is now a thing of the past, having been closed, to allow Avery street to be widened.

The new Cort Theater, Boston, which had its initial opening recently as a "legitimate" house, has decided to show a nine-part production, "The Mexican War," for a single week, at 25 and 50 cents. The reels will be lectured on by Count De Besa.

"Evangeline," a five-part tinted and toned feature, was exhibited last week at Symphony Hall, Boston. Prices were up to one dollar. The production had a three-day showing.

George H. Sullivan opened the new Plaza Theater at Fall River, Mass., most auspiciously last week. The Plaza seats 1,000, and is a strictly first-class theater in every way, being of modern and fireproof construction throughout. Vaudeville and moving pictures were selected by Manager Sullivan.

Manager P. S. McMahan, of Keeney's Theater, New Britain, Conn., reports that the "Adventures of Kathlyn," the Selig serial, is "going very big."

The Academy Theater, Lowell, Mass., closed down on April 14, indefinitely.

Pell's Theater, Hartford, Conn., which has been playing vaudeville and picture programs, will install a summer season of stock, to start May 11.

The superb quality of Biograph's masterpiece, "Judith of Bethulia," led Gordon's Olympia Theater, Washington street, Boston, to break all precedents, an dto bill this masterpiece in the lobby and on the screen six weeks before its showing. "Judith of Bethulia" is booked at the Olympia for May 4, and has been continually advertised at this house since the middle of March! "The greatest picture under the sun or moon" is what the management of one of Boston's largest moving picture houses has to say about "Judith."

Business has been on the increase at Keith's Bijou Dream, Boston, since Manager James W. Craig was placed in charge. The house is managed much more efficiently than formerly, and shows it in many ways.

Charles H. Waldron, owner of the Casino, Boston, is lessee and manager of the new Colonial Theater, Laconia, N. H., which was opened on April 13. The Colonial is a beautiful theater in every way, and is strictly modern and fireproof throughout. The seating capacity is 1,100, and the house will divide its time between road shows and moving picture and vaudeville programs. Mr. Waldron, together with a large party of Boston friends, journeyed to Laconia for the opening, which was most promising. The resident manager is Charles Payser.

Manager D. D. Scullen, of the Broadway Theater, Springfield, Mass., is playing a vaudeville and picture policy, after a year of stock. Mr. Scullen reports himself as well pleased with the change.

Ida Heller's Farm Dance, or Springfield's first theatrical ball, was held at the Auditorium Theater on April 14, and a huge success was registered. The attendance was nearly 2,000, among them many of Springfield's most prominent people. The managers mostly responsible for the affair were: Dan D. Scullen (Broadway), Gordon Wrighter (Poli's Palace), Harry C. Cohen, Harry Pepper, Walter Griffith, Ralph Kellard and Carl Brickert.

Manager Adams, of the Lion Theater, Springfield, finds business very good, with picture programs. Mr. Adams tells us that on April 15 he entertained the pupils of the Hooker School at the Lion, and gave the children a special picture program.

Poli's Palace Theater, Springfield, will not run stock company shows this summer, but will continue the policy of vaudeville and pictures at special prices. This will be the first summer that Mr. Poli has not installed stock here.

Manager E. L. Knight, the genial manager of the Bijou, Springfield, is doing his usual capacity trade with feature pictures, but on April 16 turned his house over to the local Wellesley College Club, which is helping to raise money to rebuild the college building recently destroyed by fire.

The New England Amusement Company, of which Kaplan and Wasserman are the prime movers, has control of both Orpheum and Scenic Temple theaters at Haverhill, Mass. HENRY.

OHIO

THE Doan Square Realty Company, of Cleveland, was recently incorporated for the purpose of erecting a theater in Superior avenue, near East 105th street. Attorney George B. Harris, one of the incorporators, said about $150,000 would be spent on the building. It will be a house of large seating capacity, suitable for motion pictures and vaudeville.

Manager Emil Meyer, of the Penn Square Theater, Cleveland, put on a special bill recently in recognition of the anniversary of his house.

D. Keizerstein, general manager of the New Era Feature Film Company, Cleveland, has gone to Europe to arrange rights for first-class features. Phil Adler, formerly with World Features Company, has charge of the New Era branch here.

Motion pictures showing proper and improper ways to get on and off street cars, how to cross streets to avoid accidents and how folk may keep out of the way of cars and vehicles, are to be shown in every film theater in Cleveland. It is to be the first big move in the campaign of education along "safety first" lines.

The Metropolitan Theater, Cleveland, is showing big film specialties, following the close of its stock company's dramatic engagements.

Harry E. Vestal and Mrs. Maude Murray, members of the State Censorship Board, at Cleveland, have resumed work, following the decision of United States district judges in the contest case. They are examining films in Cleveland distributing houses.

George Capes is building a motion picture theater at 2404 Ontario street, Cleveland, costing $1,500.

Joseph W. Orenski is building a theater at 1214 East 79th street, Cleveland, at a cost of $6,000.

The Mirroscope Co., of Cleveland, has increased its capital stock from $10,00 to $50,000, in recognition of its business condition and plans for extensions.

Plans have been drawn by Architect George Rudolph for a one-story brick motion picture theater to be built at East 36th street and Quincy avenue, Cleveland, for Phillip Surad.

How the moving picture business is being successfully used in the advertising field was explained to members of the Cleveland Advertising Club at a recent meeting by R. E. Fowler, of the Printz-Biederman Company. "Putting the Motion Picture Into Women's Garment Advertising," was the subject of Mr. Fowler's address, illustrated by 3,500 feet of film.

The Orpheum Theater, at 8914 Wade Park avenue, Cleveland, has been sold by C. L. Smith.

The Market Square Theater, 7624 Broadway, Cleveland, was sold recently by the Market Square Amusement Company to S. H. Barck and Maurice Klein, formerly owners of the Chic, St. Clair avenue, and the Scovill, in Scoville avenue. The consideration was $7,000.

John Leavitt, of Youngstown, will build a $25,000 moving picture theater in Market street, that city. It will be the second largest theater in town and have a seating capacity of 500. It will occupy a site in the business section of the south side and will be the third house in that section of the city. The building will be absolutely fireproof and will include every modern appointment. The plans are about completed.

"Snowed under" is the word which comes from the offices of the State Industrial Commission at Columbus, with regard to the applications for the vacancy on the film censorship board. Nearly two hundred applications were received in two days. Most applicants were "moral reformers," it was said. A number express their views at length on the subject of precisely what kinds of films are proper and what are immoral. The position pays $1,500.

C. W. Rippus, formerly manager of the Majestic Theater at Lorain, died recently at Bellaire, O.

The fireproof curtain, costing at the Grotto Theater, Akron, fell with a crash recently. Seats were broken and light fixtures torn down. The damage was repaired and the house is again in operation.

Manager Hanley, of the Family Theater, Cleveland, turned the house over to the use of Miss Anna Marie Howard recently for a home talent production.

The Grand Theater at Athens has record success with "The Last Days of Pompeii."

The Imperial Theater Company has been incorporated for business at Zanesville with a capital stock of $20,000. Sam Lind, Roberta Lind, R. R. Geyer, A. C. White and Alva Vinsel are the incorporators. RARIDAN.

REGENERATION (Special—2 parts—May 11).—Remembering the miserable end of his father who had died a drunkard's death, George resolves to conquer the terrible craving he has inherited. Fortune favors him. The boy comes to the aid of Ames, a banker, who is attacked by footpads. In gratitude, the man takes George into his office and gives him a start in life. Katherine, deserted by the woman who gave her birth, has grown up and become one of the city's submerged. The girl is the companion of Burt.

Tired and discouraged, the girl drops into a slums mission. The words of the preacher go straight to her heart. Her forlorn appearance arouses the sympathy of a settlement worker. That night Anna's regeneration commences. Burt receives a note which states she has left him forever. Several years pass. Fate has caused the settlement worker to bring Katherine to Mrs. Ames, wife of the banker. The good woman takes the girl into her home. George has fought his way upward until he has become the banker's right-hand man.

George meets Katherine. Love at first sight results. Shortly afterward Katherine, awakened in the middle of the night, finds a burglar in the house. Snapping on the light, she confronts—Burt. The villain demands that she return to him. Katherine refuses. Burt sees her with George the next day. Wild with jealousy, he determines to reveal her past to the lover. George hears the tale with horror. Springing upon the wretch he almost strangles him. Rushing back to the Ames' home, George bitterly denounces Katherine for having deceived him.

Katherine is heart-broken. Despite her pleas, George breaks their engagement. But during the night, his own past rises up to damn him. The knowledge that his was not the right to cast the first stone irresistibly confronts him. When morning dawns, George returns to the Ames' home. Falling upon his knees he humbly begs Katherine for forgiveness.

A MAN'S SOUL (Special—2 parts—May 13).—Shortly after his marriage, Richard begins to drink heavily. Lucy, his wife, pleads with him to curb his terrible desire, but her words fall upon deaf ears. As the result of his habit, Richard's firm requests his resignation. The blow falls just when his creditors are pressing him. Lucy meets their debts out of her own purse until she comes to the end of her resources. She warns Richard that should he ever drink again, she will leave him.

That night, Richard is arrested during a raid on a gambling house. The news fills Lucy with cold rage. Removing her wedding ring, she returns it to her husband and tells him she is done with him forever. Years later, Richard, a drunkard and an outcast, resides in a mining town. When at the ladder's bottom, he receives a letter informing him that he has been made the guardian of Rob, the son of his old friend, Harry Keener.

With the coming of the lad, Richard realizes how low he has fallen. Due to his desire to be worthy of Rob's love, Richard wages a successful battle against his terrible habit. The man accompanies Rob to the little school on the prairie one day. To his amazement, he discovers that Lucy is the teacher. Lucy ignores her husband's pleas, but finally declares she will return to him when he proves himself worthy.

A terrible fire sweeps over the prairie shortly afterward. Lucy, who lives in the school house, is trapped. Richard learns of her peril. Dashing through the roaring inferno, he reaches the house. He compels Lucy to mount his horse. Knowing that the animal cannot carry them both, he makes it bolt off. Richard staggers after the horse, but finally falls, overcome by the heat and smoke. Lucy regains control of the animal and returns for her husband. She finds him just in time and carries him to safety. Her heart filled with joy, she promises Richard never to leave him again.

A DARKTOWN WOOING (May 15).—Sambo, engaged to Verbena, receives $10 from Rastus, his rival, upon condition that he surrender the girl. Verbena discovers that Sambo has the ten-spot and makes him spend it on her.

Rastus demands that Sambo live up to the agreement. Aided by Verbena, the lover beats him up. On the day of the wedding, Sambo steals a suit from a second-hand shop and runs home with it. He finds Rastus waiting for him. Without the aid of the husky Verbena, he falls an easy victim to Rastus' fists. The latter dons the stolen suit and departs for Verbena's house.

Sambo meets the clothing dealer and a policeman. He leads them to the scene of the festivities. Rastus is arrested wearing the stolen suit, while Verbena and Sambo are made one.

THE GIRL AND THE GONDOLIER (May 15).—Signor Spaghetti loves Theresa, but her father favors the suit of the rich Vermicelli. When the gallant Spaghetti tries to serenade his love, her stern duenna dumps a pot of water over him.

Spaghetti conceives an idea. Changing places with Garli the gondola man, he bores holes in the bottom of the boat. When his rival, Theresa, and her father enter the boat, Spaghetti, disguised, rows out into the middle of the canal.

The passengers find the boat is sinking. Spaghetti swims ashore with his sweetheart. Garlic begs Vermicelli to save him, but the favored suitor cannot swim. Returning, Spaghetti saves Garlic. In gratitude, the father gives his rescuer consent to marry Theresa.

THE WAR BONNET (May 16).—To a tourist who wishes to purchase his war bonnet, an Indian tells this story:

The bonnet once belonged to Blue Fox, a powerful chief. When Chaska, the chief's son, grew into manhood, the father

Honored him above all others
With the tribal band of feathers,
Said to shine in beauty only
On a brow brave, just and worthy

Kenabec, the young warrior's friend, viewed the ceremony with jealous rage.

Chaska wooed and won Wawina, whom Kenabec also loved. Later, he and Chaska were sent to spy upon a rival tribe.

While on this expedition, Kenabec stabbed Chaska from behind.

Still lay Chaska by the water,
Like as one with soul departed,
Like a pine tree felled for timber.

Returning, Kenabec declared that Chaska had been slain by a foeman. Later, the Sioux made an attack upon their enemies. In the battle their chief was slain. Believing Kenabec worthy, they acclaimed him their new chief.

Chaska, however, had not been killed. Although desperately wounded, he managed to stagger toward his tribe, just as Kenabec was being hailed as chief.

The war bonnet was placed upon Kenabec's brow,
But the sacred band of feathers
Touched him, but to writhe in anguish—
Vanished like the fading rainbow.

In horror, the tribe shrank back as the writhing war bonnet denoted its wearer's unworthiness. Tearing it from his head, Kenabec fled into the forest, a madman.

At this moment, Chaska tottered into the camp. Miraculously the bonnet resumed its former beauty. Placing it upon Chaska's head, the warriors hailed him as their chief.

MARIAN THE HOLY TERROR (May 12).—Marian, in truth a quiet and reserved girl from the East, in the new tonic atmosphere of Arizona seems to change her nature and through a series of misunderstandings is given the title of "The Holy Terror." Out in the Arizona town where she has come to help her uncle run the village grocery store, attractive girls are rare, and the grocery easily becomes the rallying point of the young fellows for miles around. Dave, the champion cowpuncher, is the first to become acquainted with her. The grocer is talking to the girl, when a ham that is tied to a rafter overhead falls, striking him on the head and knocking him down. He thinks that Marian struck him because he accidentally touched her hand. He immediately starts into circulation a yarn about the awful "wallop" that Marian carries in her left mitt, and they are all thunder-struck, as her appearance betokens nothing of the Amazon.

At a "sociable" given a few nights later, Dave suggests "Postoffice," in which he kisses a girl that Bob Benton has brought, and is correspondingly sore when she pays tribute. Dave calls for Marion and the others push her into the room. She breaks away, however, and all the others follow except Bob, who rolls up his sleeves, showing a muscular arm, and sneaks back into the room, where Dave, blindfolded, is groping about, trying to catch Marian. Dave hears the door open and comes forward with outstretched arms, when he gets a crack on the jaw that sends him down for the count. By the time he recovers Marian has been dragged back into the room, and he sees her standing before him as he opens his eyes. He decides that the episode of the grocer is true, and that she is "the only real white hope" in existence.

Dave and the other cowpunchers concoct a plan to get even with Marian, but she gets wise to their plans and turns the joke upon them. This kills all the ambitions of Dave, and the preacher persuades her to marry him, and then in his own effective fashion puts another good one over on the boys: so that the cowpunchers hold a meeting and vote in unison, "It is a tough old world."

A PAIR OF STOCKINGS (May 13).—Silk Hat Joe observes Mrs. Brainerd's jewels, ascertains the number and location of the room of herself and husband at the hotel, gains a peek therein by picking up a handkerchief which she dropped in the elevator, and which he restores to her. When later he meets them in a cafe, he observes that she is not wearing the pearls he envied so much, and concludes they must be in her room. The next scene shows him busily at work in Mrs. Brainerd's apartment. He finds the jewel-box and takes a necklace. He picks up a long stocking box from the dresser and observes it is filled with silk hose, which he jams in his outer pocket for luck. Then he rushes down the street, scents pursuit, and in his haste drops the box of stockings.

Robert Hawley happens along, picks up the package, and after observing there is no name on it, concludes to send it to his fiancee, Doris. This lovely young lady, receiving the gift, is more than delighted. Of course, the Brainerds soon discover their loss, acquaint the police with the facts of the case as far as they know, and detectives are instructed to search for the pearls, likewise silk stockings of a certain make and marking. A few nights thereafter, Mr. and Mrs. Brainerd are dining at the St. Janis, and at the next table are seated Robert Hawley and his sweetheart. The latter, unconsciously, cocks her daintily booted foot a trifle too high, exposing a plump limb with silk encasing. This catches the observant eye of Mrs. Brainerd, who informs her husband. Detectives are summoned; Robert and his would-be bride are arrested and taken to the station-house, where the latter submits to the humiliation of an examination by the matron.

A flash-in shows a terrific struggle between the police and an unknown man in the alley. The result is that Silk Hat Joe is dragged into the station-house as the other parties are making their complaint. When he is searched, the necklace is revealed. The Brainerds recognize him; he admits the game is up, and poor little Doris, who received the gift of the silk stockings, gets them in reality, and is otherwise recompensed for her humiliation.

AT LAST WE ARE ALONE (May 15).—The Rider family, who are wealthy, pool issues to prevent young Hugh Martin from ever being left alone with their delightful daughter, Dorothy, long enough to propose to her. The family fear Dorothy might accept him, and, moreover, they consider Hugh Martin absolutely ineligible. Hugh is finally forbidden the house entirely, and then encounters a series of escapades in which he impersonates a paperhanger, who has been engaged to cover several rooms in the Rider mansion. He also makes up for several other disguises with farcical complications; still he is unsuccessful in his efforts to see Dorothy alone.

About this time the ever-alert Rider family conceive the idea of sending their daughter to a fashionable rest-cure and sanitarium. He, however, feigns illness, and presents himself as a patient at the same sanitarium. Much to his amusement, the physician, on examination, tells him that an operation is at once necessary. He is thoroughly alarmed and tries to get away from his room by the fire-escape. Ignorant as to location, and unseen by Dorothy, he hides in her room. It then develops that it was the patient in the room next to Hugh's that was to be operated on, and not Hugh, and the physicians, discovering their first error, come to the conclusion that Hugh's symptoms are those of incipient smallpox. This rumor is freely told and drives out everybody, leaving Dorothy and Hugh alone in the premises. The denouement comes in picture showing Dorothy and Hugh standing on the roof of the sanitarium, which is now surrounded by police and is in quarantine. The telephone, however, is still immune, and Hugh sends for a minister, who stands upon the roof of the building across the way, while the policeman acts as best man, and the marriage service is performed.

THE TAINT OF MADNESS (May 16).—Richard Davidge, an artist, appears at a summer resort with Grace Hartley, an orphaned heiress, just as she meets with an accident. She appreciates his services as a rescuer, so much so, that acquaintance ripens into affection. Davidge tells her of his love for her, but she discovers him, and the morning after his protestations he finds a letter from her in which she tells him that she has gone away and that he must never attempt to see her again. Grace goes back to her lonely estate, where she lives with a retinue of servants and tries to forget Davidge. Her insane brother she accounts an insurmountable barrier to her happiness in marriage.

About this time the doctor in charge of the asylum writes Grace that her brother is acting in a rational manner, and gives his expert opinion that he can be safely taken home. She goes after him, but on the way back in their touring car, Harry suddenly becomes violent. Arriving at home, he develps new frenzied fancies, and it requires the full force of servants to keep him under surveillance. He has the cunning of a maniac, however, and when the servant is deceived by his seeming lapse into sleep, and leaves the room, Harry jumps for the barred window and throws the lace curtain against the flame of the light. Almost instantly the room is in a blaze, and he tries to escape by the barred window, but is caught. He shrieks for aid, and the smell of smoke arouses the household. Grace succeeds in gaining an entrance, but it is too late. She is overcome by the smoke and falls in a swoon beside her dead brother.

Davidge, who has not heeded Grace's injunction, follows her to her home and arrives there just in time. He finds the dead man and the girl unconscious beside him. He gathers Grace in his arms and heroically saves her. She is carried unconscious into the house of Judge Downing, the executor of her mother's estate. She is restored to consciousness, and Davidge calls on her the next day, but finds that she is still obdurate. She declares that the taint of madness in her family precludes such a thing as the thought of marriage. At this point the Judge comes into the room, and, overhearing the sacrificial declaration of Grace, informs her that "The Battle of the Sexes"

By ADA PATTERSON

"THE BATTLE OF THE SEXES" is a strong title for the motion drama being enacted three times daily at Weber's Theatre. At 4 o'clock, at 7 and again at 9 you can see it, a sombre slice of life, between two gay bits of laughter-guaranteeing comedy, as the dark layer of cake between two light tiers. The story it tells, mighty as truth itself, might have other titles. "When Men's Double Lives Meet" or "If a Daughter Followed in Father's Footsteps" would fit the silent but moving drama.

The man who is beginning to cast his eyes upon a fascinating neighbor, or the man who has already sent his glances that way too long, should see "The Battle of the Sexes." A bachelor gave as a reason for his bachelorhood: "I haven't the courage to make any woman suffer by my unfaithfulness as I have seen friends of mine make their wives suffer."

It is upon that picture this play in motion asks you to look. The little gray woman rocking in agony in her husband-forsaken home is a picture that roots itself deep in your memory. There are little gray women in many homes.

But even more gripping is the picture of the daughter in her dawning comprehension of her father's weakness. The girl, seeing her father in a dance hall with the shallow enchantress who has made him forget his vows, tries to shield her mother from the sight. But the mother does see, and though she slips quietly home and bids her son and daughter say nothing to their father of the adventure, she sinks into profound melancholy, such melancholy as presages madness.

When the wife reproaches her husband he grows angry, as every marital double dealer does when found out. He resents being spied upon. He declares his masculine independence. He moves to his club.

On the shoulders of the tender, innocent daughter falls the task of righting the wrong that has thrown its shadow upon the home. Drama tense as ever Sardou wrote ensues. The child woman steals into the home of their evil genius, waits for her return, and from behind a curtain we see a revolver levelled by the steady young hand at the Lorelei who has lured their home ship upon the rocks.

What happens next, by what means the sundered home is made whole and shattered happiness mended is a secret the pictures must tell you. Therein is the sermon, the text of which is, "There is but one standard of morals, a single one for men and women."

Harry is not her brother, but a child that was adopted by her family when she was a baby. With this knowledge divulged, there is nothing to interfere with Grace's happiness, and she bestows upon Davidge the joy of the life that he has saved.

ON THE MINUTE (Special—2 parts—May 11).—Marion Biddle, the daughter of an author of note, Henry Biddle, acts as his amanuensis. He is in ill-health and when he is notified by his lawyer of the failure of a big investment, and the shock proves fatal. Marion is out riding in her auto when she gets wind of this news and throws on full speed, but is arrested by a flat tire. The chauffeur attempts to open his tool box and make quick repairs, but finds he has lost the key. A guard in charge of a gang of convicts working the road, observing their plight, calls to Jimmie Nolan, who has earned his spurs and is serving time as an expert burglar and lock-pick. Marion loans the fellow in stripes a hairpin, and he deftly picks the lock, the tire is repaired, and they proceed on their way. Arriving at home, she finds she has come too late—her father is already dead.

Then she learns that his affairs are in a desperate state, and she is penniless. She is far from helpless, however, and her father's solicitor secures her employment, and she is appointed secretary to the newly elected Mayor. A year later, Nolan, the burglar, is released from prison on probation, and immediately seeks out Thomas Regan, an influential "Ward Boss," whom he has known in the past. Regan and some of his companions are rushing through a big gas franchise bill, which is a menace to the people. He, however, is sure of Mayor Weaver's co-operation, and sends Nolan with a note reminding him that he is expecting him to sanction the bill, and unwisely adding: "Then WE will shake the plum tree." Nolan visits the Mayor's office, and in his attempt to see that functionary, gets a fair look at the secretary, and she looks at him in return, and vainly tries to remember where she has seen him before.

Although "the cards have been stacked," Regan is furious when he sees an article in the newspaper stating that the Mayor is determined to veto the bill. He goes to the mayoralty office; he threatens Weaver with political ruin and the loss of the prospective nomination for Governor, but the Mayor stands firm, and Marion, who overhears the interview, has her admiration firmly fixed for this righteous Mayor with the backbone. Regan is desperate, and he knows that if the letter he has written to the Mayor is used against him, it will be "good-night." So he determines to secure it at all hazards. When the Mayor leaves for his home in the suburbs in the early evening, Regan's mercenaries waylay him on the road. His car is stopped; his chauffeur overpowered, and they are both taken by force to a lonely roadhouse to be held prisoners until the franchise is granted.

The Mayor and his chauffeur chafe under the restraint of ropes tied to the chairs as prisoners, while their watchers make merry and pass "the flowing bowl" until the late hours in the morning, and finally, in spite of themselves, sink into drunken slumber. The Mayor is almost overwrought with anxiety, because he has realized from the talk that the great Gas Steal will become a law by default if he is not in the Council Chamber by noon to repeal it with veto. Finally, the chauffeur, who has twisted himself free from his bonds, leans over and frees his employer. They make a break, locking the doors after them, and succeed in jumping into their own car, and speed toward the city, shaking off some of the gang, who have climbed upon the running-boards, for the Mayor is a man of power and fights with desperation. It is after 11 o'clock in the morning, and they have only until noon to get to the city hall, and miles away.

Marion is worried and anxious over the continued absence of the Mayor. She opens the safe and tidies up the office. Regan, the "Ward Boss," and his accomplice, the slick-fingered Nolan, go to the Mayor's office on pretext of business. As Marion enters the room, Nolan slips behind a screen, and Regan, pretending anxiety at the Mayor's absence, leaves shortly. She follows him out to see that he is safely away. Nolan, who has examined the safe, finds that the incriminating documents have probably been transferred from it to the Mayor's desk. So the instant he is left alone, he begins his old handiwork on the lock of the drawer. Marion returns quickly. In a flash she recognizes him; reaches into another drawer, seizes the Mayor's revolver, and covers Nolan before he realizes what has happened. Knowing his cleverness, she forces him at the point of the pistol to open the private compartment in the safe. This he is obliged to do, and Marion comes into possession of the Gas Bill with the Mayor's veto attached, something which he could not previously procure. The clerk of the office comes in at this moment. She gives him the gun to guard Nolan as a prisoner, and rushes to the Council Chamber, reaching there just in time to prevent the passage of the iniquitous measure by default. The Mayor arrives a few moments later, but finds the situation has been saved by a clever young woman's wit "On the Minute."

THE ADVENTURES OF KATHLYN, NO. 11—THE FORGED PARCHMENT (Special—2 parts—May 18).—The captain of the guards, who was deposed by Umballah, observes Kathlyn in a perilous plight in the third balcony of a burning building, and immediately rushes to Colonel Hare's residence, informing Bruce and the colonel of her tragic position. They rush forward. Bruce throws up a rope, which Kathlyn fastens to the balcony. He then ascends and helps her to come down. They reach the ground none too soon, for the building is now a mass of flames and quickly collapses.

Prince Umballah goes on his wicked way, thinking that he has ended the opposition of Kathlyn by fire, but soon after reaching his own residence, he is informed that his spy, the Majordomo, awaits him. He is admitted to Umballah's presence. Believing that he is near the end of his reign, Umballah informs the spy that the king, whom everyone believes to be dead, is alive and well, but has been kept a prisoner by his orders. He is secluded in a hut in the forest, closely guarded by Umballah's slaves. The Majordomo, after receiving his startling bit of information, is further instructed to return to the palace where Ramabai has assumed the throne, and to make full and accurate reports of all that takes place there. The following day, Ramabai, who does not know the real office of the Majordomo, gives him a message to Colonel Hare, informing him that he intends to arrest Umballah for high treason. The spy quickly carries this information to the wicked prince, who, in retaliation, forms a plan to poison Ramabai. He crushes some supposed pearls, which are in reality a composition of deadly poison, and gives this powder to the Majordomo, ordering him to put it in Ramabai's wine cup. At the banquet that follows, Kathlyn picks up this cup by mistake, and is about to drink from it, when the Majordomo, who really reverences her, sees the necessity for quick action. He snatches the cup from Kathlyn's lips and drains it himself, believing that it was his destiny to die, because he had failed in his mission. In his dying breath, he confesses the plot to kill Ramabai; likewise that the king is alive, and held a prisoner in a jungle hut, whose location he describes accurately.

With this information, a search is started for the king. But a disloyal slave at the same time carries the news of the Majordomo's death, and his confession to Umballah, and the latter decides to kill the king rather than have him rescued by Colonel Hare, and restored to the throne. With this purpose in view, Umballah starts out on an elephant, while Colonel Hare, Kathlyn and party are already well on their way on horses. Umballah, in his haste to cut across country, goes through a dangerous swamp, so that the elephant is mired, and he has the great dissatisfaction of seeing Kathlyn and her party ride by him, he helpless to go forward. The searching party scatter and Kathlyn stumbles upon the hiding place of the king, just as a leopard in a nearby tree is about to spring upon the guards at the door of the hut. They run for their lives, leaving Kathlyn to save herself. The leopard springs from the tree to the roof of the hut, which gives way, dropping the ferocious beast upon the sleeping king. He awakens and gives battle, but would immediately have been killed had not Kathlyn slain the beast with a well aimed shot from her revolver.

When the real king is restored to the throne, Colonel Hare requests his highness to cancel the document making him heir to the throne, to which the king willingly consents. Then Kathlyn tells the reigning potentate how Umballah stole the document from her. Soldiers are then sent to Umballah's house to recover this parchment, but Umballah, anticipating such a move, has skillfully forged the document, which the soldiers find naturally, and return to Colonel Hare. This is cancelled by the king, who believes it to be the genuine document.

Umballah has been scheming as usual in highly original fashion, and has a plan to dispose of the king. He cages a lion in a royal cart that usually carries the ladies of the Harem, and when opportunity presents itself, the hungry savage is taken to the window of the king's private chamber and released. The infuriated beast jumps upon his majesty, and almost tears him to pieces. Ramabai, hearing the commotion, runs to the king's chamber and finds that the long suffering man is gone past recall. His tragic death again changes the affairs on the chess board of state. The councillors again declare Umballah the Prince Regent of Allaha, and he in turn, demands that Kathlyn and her father be declared the only heirs to the throne. They are reluctantly brought before the councillors, and armed with the forged document, show it to him for relief. Immediately Umballah declares the forgery, and shows the genuine parchment. This so angers Kathlyn that she forgets herself and would fain end the life of the hateful Umballah, when the councillors sternly order her arrest. (To be continued.)

VITAGRAPH.

MISER MURRAY'S WEDDING PRESENT (May 11).—Old Miser Murray's particular hobby is the collection of precious stones. Harry Hastings, a young clerk, proposes to Marion, Murray's daughter. Her mother approves of the match, but Murray does not. The next morning, Harry's uncle learns of his predicament, and determines to help the boy out. He calls him into his office and promises him a junior partnership with him, on the day he marries Marion. Harry is highly elated and when he tells Marion and her mother, both are delighted. Old man Murray grumbles his consent. Mrs. Murray later tells her husband that they must give Harry a nice wedding present. He flatly refuses. A few days before the wedding, Murray is asked pointedly by a visitor what he is going to give his daughter and grouchily replies he has not yet made up his mind.

Two days before the wedding, Mrs. Murray determines to have it out with her husband. They quarrel and Mrs. Murray snatches a case of diamonds he is looking at and going to the window, threatens to throw it into the street. This brings him to terms, and he consents to her giving Marion three of the most beautiful stones. That evening, Marion thinks she hears a burglar and sees her father enter the drawing-room and go stealthily to where the diamonds are lying and put them in his pocket. The next morning, Marion tells Harry and they decide to teach Murray a lesson. He gets his old friend, Jack Thompson, to pretend he is a detective and old Murray nearly has a fit when he is told the detective is going to take everybody's fingerprints. Murray determines to bolt. He is stopped in the hall by a policeman. He breaks down and confesses, giving Marion the diamonds and consenting to the marriage.

THE ACID TEST (Special—2 parts—May 12).—Spoiled by too much attention, Grace Asheton, a society girl, refuses all her suitors. At the Lotus Ball, she meets Tom Marston. After the ball he escorts her home. He calls on her, proposes and is accepted, chiefly because he is a millionaire. At the Lotus Club, Ned Connor, his boyhood friend, takes him aside and tells him that the woman he is going to marry is absolutely heartless. Marston refuses to believe it. A few days later, he and Grace are married and leave on their honeymoon trip.

While on their honeymoon, Marston's wife treats him very coldly. After their return, he determines to learn if she really is heartless. He shows her a fake telegram from his mine manager, reporting the mines are played out and they are ruined. She coolly draws a large check on her private bank account and gives it to him. Determined to break through her reserve, he continues the deception, at last telling her they must leave their beautiful home. She agrees to go with him wherever he may choose. They take a cheap apartment and one day, Houston, one of her old suitors, follows her home and tries to induce her to elope with him. She refuses. Her husband enters and overhears them. When Huston attempts to force his attentions upon Grace, Marston takes him by the scruff of the neck and throws him out of the place. He then turns to Grace, opens his arms, and their lips meet in a passionate kiss. He knows his wife is sincere; her love has stood the crucial test.

BUDDY'S FIRST CALL (May 13).—Buddy Watson, the youngest of three brothers, and just getting accustomed to long pants, meets Elsie Forster at a church social and is smitten by the young lady's charms. He writes, addressing the letter simply, "Miss Forster," asking permission to call. Elsie gets the note and joyously answers "yes," but Grace, her sister, sees the letter and is quite sure he means her. The two girls prepare to receive Buddy and when he arrives, they greet his effusively. He tries to talk to both at once and is getting a little confused when Grace quietly tells Elsie her mother wants to see her. After the reluctant Elsie has withdrawn, Grace appropriates Buddy and leads him off to the drawing-room. When Elsie discovers the trick, she is furious, and determines on revenge. Seeing Buddy's new hat on the hall rack; with the aid of writing and feathers, she trims it in the latest style. She then tells father of the deception practised upon her and he immediately goes to the drawing-room, just in time to see Buddy kiss Grace. He gives them both a severe calling down, and Buddy decides it is no place for him. He excitedly grabs his hat without noticing the recent additions, slams it on his head, and is off for home. On the way everybody laughs at him. He thinks they are making fun of his first long pants. Arriving at his house, father, mother and the boys burst into laughter. This is the last straw and Buddy becomes so mad he almost cries. One of the boys leads him to the mirror, where he gets a glimpse of the weird headdress, and collapses limply into his brother's arms. Disgusted with the result of his "first call," he wreaks vengeance on the festooned hat.

THE SEA GULL (May 14).—"Sea Gull," an Indian maiden, is wooed and won by "Panther," a stalwart young brave. They live happily together for many years. Their little son, whom they call "The Raven," grows tall and strong, but his mother ages quickly. She is no longer beautiful and Panther ignores her, dreaming of the young and handsome "Red Fox," whom he had met across the valley. One sad day, her lord and master brings the youthful Red Fox to his wigwam, and Sea Gull, seeing the girl's beauty, realizes she is hopelessly supplanted. Red Fox hates the Sea Gull, and does everything possible to make her life miserable. Some months later, the two women rig up a swing on the edge of a high cliff, overlooking the shore. Red Fox tells Sea Gull to get in and she will swing her out over the water. Sea Gull hesitates, but when the younger woman taunts her with being afraid, she gets in. Overcome with hatred and jealousy, Red Fox cuts the rope and Sea Gull plunges over the edge, fortunately landing a short distance down, on a narrow ledge. Red Fox, thinking she has fallen to the bottom of the cliff, goes to the wigwam. Panther and his son miss Sea Gull and ask Red Fox of her whereabouts, but she sullenly pretends ignorance. The Raven searches in vain for her. He falls asleep on a rock near the shore and sees her in a dream, lying on the cliff side. Calling his father, they rescue the Sea Gull. As they are carrying her back along the shore, Red Fox, who has been watching them, falls over the cliff and is instantly killed. Later we see them seated on the shore, with the sea gulls circling about them, as Panther folds his blanket tenderly about Sea Gull and their son, and clasps them in his loving embrace.

BUNNY BUYS A HAREM (May 15).—As property man of a large theater, Bunny frequently sees Lily Balantine, the leading lady, and greatly admires her. Bunny's wife is Lily's maid, and intensely jealous of Bunny. They have a fearful quarrel when she finds a photograph in his possession, with the inscription, "To dear old Bunny, with love, from Lily."

The following day Bunny sees a notice outside a store that a beautiful painting of the slave market in old Cairo is on exhibition inside, and Bunny pays five cents to see it. He is fascinated with the picture and imagines one of the slaves looks like Lily. After the matinee, his mind still obsessed with the painting, he goes to sleep in his room and dreams he is a millionaire, outbidding a crowd of Arab shieks for the slaves he has seen in the picture, the most beautiful of whom seems to be Lily Balantine. He also dreams his wife is put up for sale and he will not buy her, saying the shieks can have her. The shieks, in revenge, accuse him of paying for the slaves with bad money, and the slave dealer proves that Bunny has bought them with the stage money used at the theater. Bunny refuses to give up the girls, and a terrific fight ensues, in which his wife joins and tries to assault him with a spear.

Amid wild excitement, the vision fades and he finds himself back in his room. His wife and the leading lady enter, and Bunny, his mind still befuddled, tries to embrace the fair Lily, but she indignantly repulses him. Mrs. Bunny gives him an awful "call down," and realizing that it was all a dream, after all, he asks in a despairing tone, "Have I still got you?" She is puzzled, but asserts most positively that he has, and poor Bunny, with a forlorn look on his face, cries, "Good Heavens!" and falls back on the sofa.

THE COUNTESS VESCHI'S JEWELS (Special—2 parts—May 16).—Because of an early friendship with his father, Mr. Soper, a wealthy business man, invites young Tisdale, one of his clerks, to his home. At dinner he meets Ruth, Mr. Soper's niece. They are immediately attracted to each other, much to Mrs. Soper's annoyance. Later, despairing of ever receiving another invitation, Tisdale pawns his full-dress suit to pay his room rent, and when he receives another invitation to spend the week-end at the Sopers' country home, he decides to wire his regrets. In the telegraph office he overhears a Mr. Rowdin order his suit-case sent to the Pennsylvania R. R. station. A daring plan occurs to him. He will borrow the suit-case, supposing it to contain a dress suit. Giving Rowdin's name, Tisdale gets it and boards the train for the Sopers. Rowdin, discovering the loss of his suit-case, is furious, but determines to make his destination, hastily boards the same train and car as Tisdale. They both prove to be guests of the Sopers. When at last Tisdale opens the case he finds a complete burglar kit.

Tisdale dares not tell any one openly. He quietly warns the Countess Veschi, one of the guests, to put her jewels in the Soper safe. She does so and is seen by Rowdin. That night Tisdale is unable to sleep, and is attracted by a noise beneath his window. He sees a man enter the floor below and is about to warn the house when the safe is blown open by a terrific explosion. A dark figure hands out the jewels to his confederates, who then disappear. There is great consternation when the robbery is discovered and suspicion is fastened upon Tisdale. His room is searched and the valise with the burglar outfit found. Knowing his story would be laughed at Tisdale keeps silent. Believing the young man innocent, Ruth plans to help him escape. With the aid of a rope, he gets out the window. They walk down to the beach and board the little speed launch. The control is broken and it dashes up on an opposite bank. The robbers, in another launch, land near them and hide their plunder in an old boat house. Ruth and Tisdale follow them and manage to capture both. They bring them back to the Soper home, where they are turned over to the police. They accuse Rowdin of being their leader and he is also arrested. Tisdale and Ruth are heartily congratulated and left alone in the happiness of their engagement.

MARTHA'S REBELLION (May 11).—Bill Ruff believed that the only way to manage a wife was to keep her in a state of cowed submission. So Martha, Bill's wife, lived in an atmosphere of harsh words and blows. Martha was naturally a meek and lowly person, but even a worm will turn at last. Her opportunity came when Bill left for a long voyage. After Martha had carried all his heavy luggage down to the ship for him, and had received a surly kiss of farewell in payment, she decided that for once in her life she would cut loose and have a good time. So she went to the theater.

It happened to be Amateur's Night. Nobody could possibly have mistaken the performers for professionals—except Martha. Martha thought the whole thing was great. She was particularly impressed by a pair of supposedly humorous boxers. They gave her a brilliant idea. The next day, Martha went to see a professional pugilist and made arrangement with him for a series of lessons. In a few weeks' time she had grown so proficient that the professor occasionally had some little difficulty in evading her vicious swipes.

When Bill Ruff returned home he was in a reasonably good temper, but thanks to the after effects of a bottle of whiskey, the good temper did not last very long. As usual, he attempted to let his wife have the benefit of his fit of anger. Martha gave him the surprise of his life. She handed him one on the nose to start with, and followed it with a free hand swing that caught Bill under the ear and nearly put him out of business. When she finally finished with him he was so polite that butter wouldn't melt in his mouth.

AN ALASKAN INTERLUDE (May 12).—Ed Fisher's wife was very discontented. The great bleak wilderness of that Northland seemed to have entered into her soul. She hated the cold, the vastness of it all and the awful loneliness and she longed for the warmth and the bustle of her own country so many miles away to the southward. Ed Fisher realized his wife's discontent and was grieved by it, but there was nothing he could do. His salary as collector of customs was too small to have allowed him to save anything in that land of inflated prices.

One afternoon, after the wife had been particularly sorrowful over the prospect of remaining in Alaska, Ed left several thousand dollars of the government's money in her charge and set out on a long trip. Shortly after he had gone, a man tottered up to the cabin and begged the woman to give him shelter. Mrs. Fisher, fearing for the funds in her charge, at first refused, but the man's state was so evidently critical that she was unable to resist his appeals for long. The exhausted miner staggered into the hut, threw himself down and fell into a deep sleep.

All that night the woman with pistol in her hand, stood guard over the money. Toward morning she heard a noise. Careful listening convinced her that somebody was trying to break into the shack. Choosing the lesser of two evils, she awakened the exhausted miner and begged him to help her. He readily assented and they waited together in the darkened shack. The door creaked slowly open and a masked figure entered. A revolver shot rang out and the figure sank to the floor. The woman sprang to his side and pulled off the mask. It was her husband! Despairing of any other solution, he had taken this means of getting the money which would enable him to carry out his wife's wish. Luckily, Fisher was not seriously wounded. The old miner who had readily grasped the situation, introduced himself as Klondike Smith, the richest man in the Northwest. When he offered Fisher a ridiculously large amount for the shack, the couple could only give him their heartfelt gratitude. A month later, they were back in the land of their hearts' desire.

ANDY PLAYS CUPID (Sixth of the Andy Series—May 13).—It all happened because Andy had an ineradicable dislike for foreigners. When he read in the newspaper that the beautiful Elsie Worth was to marry the Count de Penutti, he fell deeply in love with Elsie's picture and a violent rage entered his sturdy American bosom that this fair rose of the Western hemisphere should fall to the lot of a decadent sprig of European nobility. Andy decided that since he was not old enough to marry Elsie himself, the only thing to do was to find some other real American citizen for her. He thought of Joe Parker, a splendid young man who had occasionally employed Andy on errands, was the very man. Joe Parker was a regular fellow.

Andy's opportunity arrived when he was sent by the count to Miss Worth's home with a box of flowers. He extracted the count's card at the door and by a mighty effort, chewed it up and swallowed it. Then he told Miss Worth that the flowers had been sent by an unknown admirer who would be at a certain restaurant that afternoon wearing one of the flowers. Leaving the surprised Miss Worth, Andy went to Joe Parker, gave him one of the flowers, and told him that a young lady was crazy to meet him. Joe followed out Andy's instructions, went to the restaurant, and by a lucky chance was introduced to Elsie. They fell in love at first sight, but unfortunately there was still the count to reckon with.

Andy fixed him. He took a letter to Mr. Worth, telling him that the count was only a fortune hunter, and that he would demand money before the wedding. Then he took a letter to the count, telling him that the Worths were penniless. The indignant count instantly went to Mr. Worth and demanded a settlement. Mr. Worth quite naturally refused, and the count broke the engagement. So Elsie and Joe were married and Andy heaved a sigh of relief. How could a man be expected to pay attention to his business if he had to go around and fix things for people all the time?

HIS SOB STORY (Special—2 parts—May 15).—John was distinctly down on his luck. He had come into the city fully prepared to set the world on fire with his genius, but as yet he had not noticed much of a conflagration as a result of his efforts. At the time the story opens, he was down to his last dollar and as yet he had found small prospects of any sort of a position. On his way to the only newspaper office he had not as yet importuned with his prayers for work, he came across a shabbily clad woman on a park bench. As John approached her, she fainted, dropping her hand bag on the sidewalk. John picked the bag up, put it into his pocket and set out to do justice to the woman again. John made a tour through a number of city hospitals, but without success. However, the handbag gave him an idea. About its pitiful contents a story gradually developed in his mind. With eager haste he rushed to the newspaper office and brushing opposition aside by the sheer irresistibility of his purpose, sat down at the typewriter and started his story.

John had felt the pinch of poverty too closely himself not to be able to do justice to his subject. He drew a poignant picture of this woman, forced by her husband's cruelty to support herself and her child. It was all fiction for all John knew, but it was certainly a "sob story" of the first order. When John had finished, they sent his story into the editor. He read it, carelessly at first, and then with a drawn haggard look on his face. In a few moments he came out and questioned John. John told him the particulars and showed him the photograph. "The woman was my wife," said the editor simply. Jumping into a taxicab, John and the editor commenced another tour of the hospitals. This time luckily enough the search was successful. When they found the woman, she forgave the editor for the misunderstanding that had driven them apart and the grateful editor promised John a first-class position on the paper.

THE COWARD AND THE MAN (May 16).—The only excuse that can be pleaded for Joe Brown is that he was hungry and desperate on account of the apparent impossibility of finding honest work. When he asked Preston Senall for a job, and Senall not only refused, but added an gratuitous insult by telling Joe that he was a worthless loafer, Joe was certainly wrong in losing his temper. Whether his offense merited the severe prison sentence given him when he was arrested on Senall's complaint is another matter.

The fact that Joe saved the life of one of the wardens during an outbreak in the prison had a great deal to do with his early release. In the tenement in which he roomed after his release, Joe met Mrs. Burrowes, who supported herself and daughter by sewing. Joe was able to be of some service to her on one or two occasions, and an intimacy sprang up between them. One day Joe learned that Preston Senall had been the cause of Mrs. Burrowes' poverty.

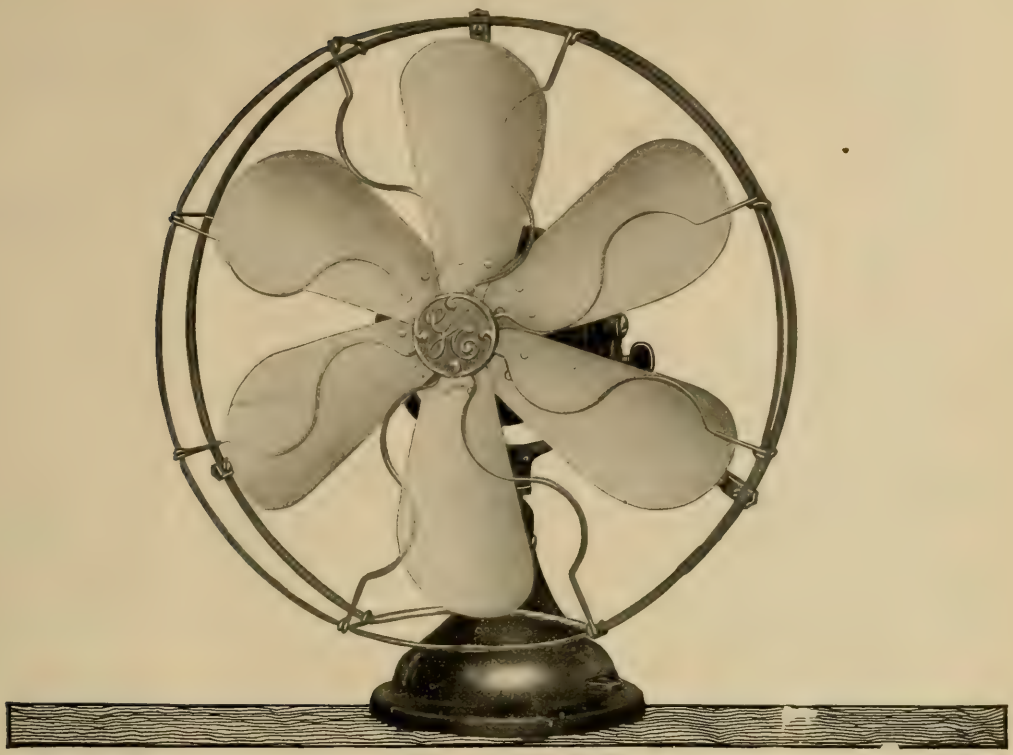
When Joe found Preston Senall's young son, Harry, who had strayed away from home, he sent an anonymous letter to Senall, directing him to meet him in a certain deserted building at a certain time. Senall, after one vain attempt to catch the writer of the letter with detectives, came to the appointed spot. Joe met him and gave the boy into his father's charge.

When Senall, overjoyed at regaining his son, offered to pay him the reward, Joe threw it into his face. Then he confronted him with the woman he had robbed. "Do you remember what the judge said to me?" he asked the trembling Senall. "Only cowards take advantage of the weak." Preston Senall was not a good man, but, on the other hand, he was not an absolute villain. So, although Joe bade him take his son and go, he refused to go before he had made arrangements to pay back to Mrs. Burrowes the money she had lost.

ESSANAY.

IN REAL LIFE (May 12).—The editor of a well known magazine informs John Carson that his manuscript lacks the necessary punch. Walter Jordon, a clerk in a broker's office, discovers that his sweetheart's mother has been defrauded, and by the firm he is working for. He pleads with the manager to return the money, but is refused. He appropriates it and dashes madly up the street and into Carson's apartment. He explains the situation to the author. The broker arrives at the apartment—Carson holds him off at the point of a revolver. It is then that the author discovers that it is his own mother who was defrauded. Things are finally straightened out and Carson discovers he has a great deal of material to embody in his story, which the editor later buys.

THREE LITTLE POWDERS (May 13).—Mrs. Wallace Williams is much given to conversation and, when she and her husband have a word battle, she of course wins out, making her husband exceedingly cross. That night, Williams dreams that his wife received from a sorcerer powders of laughter and love, while he is the happy possessor of silence powders. A burglar gets into the house and complicates things by getting some of the love powder, while Mrs. Williams gets the silent powder



Cooling Comfort for Patrons

Extend the good service to your patrons during the sweltering summer days and hot, oppressive nights by having your theatre cool and fresh inside.

Make a welcome change from the sultry, heat-laden air of the streets to the cooling comfort inside your house.

Ventilate thoroughly with

G-E Six Blade Oscillating Fans

These fans are especially constructed for motion picture theatres; the air is freely circulated as these fans swing silently to and fro bringing a cool current of air as from the hills.

Be sure you install G-E fans—then you can be certain that your fans will run inexpensively, without trouble or attention except oiling once a year. G-E fans will last for years; there are no complicated parts to get out of order, there's just quality of the highest, plus twenty years' knowledge and experience in every G-E fan; that is why a G-E fan is as good five, ten years hence as it is today.

Write today; send dimensions and particulars of your theatre; our engineers will be glad to lay out a "fresh-air" plan that will soon prove a good investment for you.

and Mr. Williams tries hanging powder. Williams awakens while in the act of strangling the burglar in his dream, and finds the cat in his hands. Hus band and wife adjust things and all ends happily.

SLIPPERY SLIM'S STRATAGEM (May 14).—Sophie Clutts gives Slippery Slim, the postmaster, a postcard, telling him to mail it. Slim reads: "Dear mother: I will marry the boy who gives me a ring upon my birthday." Mustang Pete calls at the store and Slim sells him a ring. Slim then changes the postcard to read call instead of ring, which he "accidentally" places in Rawhide Bill's box. After Rawhide reads it and discovers it does not belong to him, he remails it. Slim then substitutes the word corset for calf, and another cowpuncher gets it. Slim manages to get the ring from Mustang Pete and loads the box with gunpowder. Rawhide sees the exchange and tells Mustang about it. The box is then placed in Slim's pocket. That evening things begin to hum around Sophie's home, when she is presented with the various gifts, but the ring caps the climax, blowing both Sophie and the room to pieces.

BRONCHO BILLY'S LEAP (May 16).—John Wilson had driven the stagecoach for years. When his daughter, Marguerite, became old enough, he allowed her to make an occasional trip with him. It was when she was about 19 that she had the terrible experience. Her father and the express messenger had gone into the general store. Marguerite remained on the coach to watch the horses—four of them. A shooting contest a few feet away frightened the horses and they bolted. On a gallop they dashed down the road. Marguerite screamed for her life. She could not hold them. For miles the animals fairly flew—her strength giving out. An outlaw was awaiting the stage in the hopes of making a haul. He was startled to discover the girl clinging to the reins for dear life, and the horses madly galloping at breakneck speed. He mounted his steed and the race for life or death began. He sped on and on, faster and faster, until it would seem that his horses would fall from exhaustion beneath him. At a curve in the road, the stage is overtaken. He makes a flying leap from the animal's back to the coach, takes the lines from the hysterical girl and brings the horses to a halt. He had saved her at the risk of his life. She thanked him—yes, she kissed him—and he vowed to live a straight life ever after.

ASHES OF HOPE (Special—2 parts—May 15).—Through the untiring efforts of Fred Willard, a theatrical manager, Zalata, a dancer, has become a huge success. Charles Donald, an attorney, and a man who will gain his end—at any cost or by any means—becomes infatuated with Zalata, and tries in every way possible to meet her. He bribes the stage doorman, who takes his card to Zalata, with a request that the attorney would like to see her, but she refuses. Willard introduces Zalata to Roy Norton, a dramatic critic. Norton compliments Zalata on her performance, which is very gratifying, as he is the only critic who had not given her a splendid write-up. Donald, in the shadow of the building, sees Norton leave the theater, and he determines to meet Zalata through the critic. The dancer refuses to meet Donald at first, but under Norton's threat, finally consents. After the evening performance, Zalata meets Donald at a fashionable restaurant—Norton leaves the two together. Donald makes advances to her and she repulses him—slapping his face. The guests are on their feet in an instant and Zalata dashes madly from the place. She becomes lost and, finally exhausted, sinks to the ground. An early morning pedestrian finds her and carries her into a nearby convent, where she is cared for tenderly by the Sisters of Charity. Three days later Zalata leaves and takes with her a note from the nuns to the effect that she has been under their care for the past three days.

Willard had entered the restaurant with some friends, in time to see Zalata slap the attorney—and vanish. He thinks she has been false to him and when the dancer returns to her boarding house three days later, he refuses to have anything to do with her. The landlady ejects her, complaining that she does not care for girls of her character. Zalata is cross-examined and is unable to prove her whereabouts the past three days on account of losing the note the Sisters had given her. They refuse to go out of their way to call the convent by 'phone. Some time later we see her in another part of the city, living down her sorrow, making brighter the lives of little children. They worship their pretty teacher, who is so kind to them. One day, one of the little boys is very naughty, and is distracting the other children's attention from their work. The teacher sends one of her pupils out for a whip—to frighten the boy. At the thought of a whipping, the child drops dead. Zalata is accused of murder and things look terribly dark for the poor friendless girl. Donald, now a district attorney, is called in for the summing up. He demands a conviction, although the evidence brings out the fact that the child suffered from a heart affection, and that death was natural. Zalata recognizes her accuser, the man who is the cause of all her suffering—she had slapped his face once and promised to do it again, and so she does in the crowded courtroom. She openly denounces him—tells her story, blaming him for her present predicament. The jury acquits her. Fred tries to atone for his suspicions, but Zalata, now hardened to the ways of mankind, enters a convent.

HEARTS ARE TRUMPS (May 11).—Professor Barton is visiting at the home of Vincent Stark, who has been his friend and pal since boyhood, when a note arrives announcing that young Paul Barton is on his way home from college and will call to see Stark and his daughter Madge. Paul has just received his diploma as a physician, which is great news for Madge, for her father and Paul's father had ordered the wedding of their children postponed until Paul had finished his schooling. The old men are engrossed in a game of cards when Paul arrives. The game is halted until greetings are exchanged, but it has not long been resumed when a dispute takes place. In anger Professor Barton arranges to leave his friend's house and instantly Stark regrets his part of the quarrel.

But most of all Paul and Madge are alarmed. Fate offers an opportunity when a weak spell attacks the aged professor. His son orders Madge to get a glass of water. The clever girl drops into the glass a harmless sleep-inducing drug and after drinking it Professor Barton nods to sleep. When he awakens they convince him that he has fallen asleep and that nothing unusual has happened. He glances at the cards he is holding and finds that he has a perfect hand of hearts. Cheerily he plays them, completely vanquishing his partner, Stark, while Paul and Madge hold real hands in the background.

WOOD CARVING AND TURNING AT ST. CLAUDE (FRANCE) (May 12).—Fancy wood carving and turning is the least known of all manufacturing trades, although its results are everywhere in common use. Much of it is still done by hand, but the use of modern machinery has minimized the hand work and greatly lessened the time consumed in manufacturing. A rough block of wood is prepared for the lathe by a circular saw and then placed in the rapidly moving lathe, where it quickly assumes the desired shape. The "bent wood" effect, so common in chairs, is obtained by cutting wood into curved pieces by means of a hand saw. It is then fed into a turning machine, which rounds and polishes the wood in preparation for the cabinet worker, who deftly edges and grains it. So cleverly is this done that expert knowledge is necessary to detect the difference between the artificial and the genuine. The making of a wooden bowl is an interesting operation, but art enters into the trade with the decoration of a clock-case and the exhibition of free-hand drawing is fascinating.

THE JERBOA (Habitat Africa) (May 12).—The Jerboa is a small four-footed rodent that very much resembles a diminutive Kangaroo. He inhabits the African desert and parts of Europe and although very timid, is far from harmless, as his fondness for grain makes him particularly obnoxious to the farmer.

THE STRENGTH OF THE WEAK (Special—2 parts—May 14).—Nothing would seem to mar the complete happiness of the Countess von Meersberg and her beautiful daughter, Elsa, who has just been betrothed to the Count von Ballstadt, were it not for the fact that her son, Egon, is addicted to the convivial companionship of Bohemian comrades. Under the influence of liquor and with the entreaties of his sweetheart, Bertha Harden, still ringing in his ears, Egon returns to his home and is tempted to steal some jewelry brought there by Wilfred Holzer, manager for Marcus Wolff & Company, jewelers, for the approval of the Countess. Unaware of the theft, Holzer returns to his firm, where the loss of the jewels is discovered. Getting in touch with the police, an investigation is made, and Egon, returning from a midnight revel, meets the party having Wilfred Holzer under arrest. Not having the moral courage to acknowledge his guilt, Egon allows suspicion to rest on the unfortunate Holzer.

As days go on Bertha Harden, sorely pressed for money, is compelled to pledge her earrings. Through reference to the "list of missing jewelry" the loan broker's suspicion is aroused and detaining Bertha with a plausible pretext, he communicates with the police and the result of the interview brings forth the startling announcement that the jewels in question were presented to Bertha by Egon von Meersberg. Marcus Wolff is then sent for, identifies the jewels and, meeting Bertha, the two repair to the home of the Countess and tell their story, at which time the Countess relieves the financial straits of Bertha. Wilfred Holzer, released and freed from the hateful suspicion, is restored to his sweetheart and once more enjoys the high esteem of his firm. Egon, confronted with the alarming disclosure of his guilt, decides to go to America and there under the assumed name of Karl Schaller, by honest and conscientious efforts, achieves great fame as a surgeon.

Some years later, the call of the mother land compels him to return to his native town. In despair at the futile efforts of the local physicians to cure his wife, the Count von Ballstadt, husband of Elsa, determines to enlist the aid of the celebrated American surgeon now stopping there. Having aroused his sympathy, a remarkable operation saves the life of his patient, who on returning to consciousness is astounded to recognize the doctor as her brother Egon. This knowledge she keeps to herself and only when Egon comes to bid her farewell does she entreat him to stay for his mother's sake, which he finally does, reuniting a new happy family.

My dear Mr. Kane:-

It is not very often that I care to commend any product that I use in the theatres which I have directed, but I feel that I must make an exception and tell you how greatly pleased I am with your "Radium Gold Fibre Screen" that was installed in the Strand Theatre.

I have made careful tests and comparisons of every known screen on the market and the fact that I chose this is sufficient proof that I think it without question the best projection surface that I ever saw. I was not however, prepared for the delightful surprise that the screen gave me after its installation. We must project pictures here 167 feet under the most adverse conditions, and all experts say, that the projection in this theatre is perhaps the finest in the world.

I congratulate you upon the fact that you are the distributers and manufacturers of this splendid screen. Surely every exhibitor who wants the best will certainly come to you and I am convinced that if they test this screen in comparison with others as I have, there will be but one result.

Thanking you for your many courtesies in assisting me in opening this theatre, I am

Very sincerely yours,

THE PRECIOUS TWINS (Special—2 parts—May 16).—While John Grafton feared his sweetheart, Mildred Munson, would not have him for a husband it never occurred to him that Mildred's father would be the sole opposition to the match. But so it happened. John told the irate parent that he was living on an allowance from an uncle and mentioned the amount. "Not half enough!" declared Daddy Munson. Exit John. Heavy hearted he returned to his bachelor quarters. He sat down and wrote a lying letter to his Uncle Ebenezer from whom he was receiving the allowance. "I have a confession to make," began John's letter. "I was secretly married and am now the father of a little boy. We call him Ebenezer after you." He added a suggestion that he could use an increased allowance very handily.

Uncle Ebenezer responded quickly with a letter and a check. But in his letter Uncle Eben announced that he and Aunt May would call on John to spend a day with the family. John is sorely perplexed and consults Mildred. She offers to pose as his wife. Together they set out to hire a baby. They cannot find a mother with a child to rent, so they hire a midget. Uncle Ebenezer and Aunt May arrive and are delighted with the child; so delighted in fact that they decide to stay a month. Mildred crumples 'neath the blow. John whistles. The lovers hold a council of war. But the council is interrupted by the arrival of Ethel, another midget. She has missed her fiance, the dwarf who is acting as little Ebenezer, and comes to see him. Mildred thinks quickly and throws a shawl over Ethel. Enter Uncle Ebenezer and Aunt May. John hesitates, stutters and stammers, "Er, I didn't want to tell you all at once, Uncle, but our child is twins." Uncle fails for it. But a moment later Fate again shows her spiteful disposition. Aunt May suggests that it would be good fun to bathe the babies together. Instantly little Ethel is unalterably opposed. So is little Ebenezer.

PATHE'S WEEKLY, NO. 34, 1914 (April 29).—London, England.—Thousands cheer King George and Queen Mary on their visit to the Duke of Cheshire at his estate.

Massillon, Ohio.—"General" Coxey and his "army of unemployed" start on their long tramp to Washington.

Oakland, Cal.—California and Stamford Universities are easily defeated by Washington in their annual contest for the rowing supremacy.

New Orleans, La.—Sailors and marines work day and night loading supplies aboard the transport Hancock prior to her departure with 1,000 men for Tampico.

Galveston, Texas.—Here is Uncle Sam's fleet of transports, awaiting the order to carry the regulars from the border of Mexico.

Livadia, Russia.—Czar Nicholas of Russia, reviewing his favorite regiment of Moscow guards, drinks to their health.

Vera Cruz, Mexico.—Mexican troops, driven to the outskirts of Vera Cruz by United States marines, open fire upon the Americans.

New York, N. Y.—The super-dreadnaughts Texas and New York at the Brooklyn Navy Yard take on supplies and ammunition for service in Mexico.

Seattle, Wash.—Work on the Lake Washington canal locks, a gigantic engineering feat, is nearing completion.

Boston, Mass.—Three hundred strong, the Bay State Motor Cycle Club whirls away to Worcester, 50 miles distant, on its first run of the season.

Paris, France.—Flowers and feathers of many hues and forms adorn the latest creations in Paris hats.

BIOGRAPH.

THE SAVING PRESENCE (May 4).—While the mill owner was entertaining guests at his home outside the town, the hands from the mill he had closed were moving on to the next district. The mill owner was called away. Incensed by the contrast of their own lives, the men made an example of the idle women left behind, until Sarah, a mill hand, a woman who suffered as they, awakened their manhood.

UNDER THE SKIN (May 9).—Nance of the Red Wing was fighting her last fight, though only Jimmy the Dip saw beneath the struggle. At the Red Wing the woman, hungry for her indifferent husband's love, met her lover. Woman's heart met woman's heart, there in the death chamber. "She won't be goin' with you," said Jimmy to the man.

MANIACS THREE (May 7).—Mary came down from the city and no doubt about it, she made a hit. "Would you risk your lives for me?" she asked the two rivals, and forthwith they hied themselves off to the club, longing to risk their lives. Presently the quiet of the village was broken by a maniac rushing through the street with a large knife. He disappeared into Mary's house. Two other maniacs followed, the rivals in disguise. Did they risk their lives? Not them. When they returned with the officers of the law Mary was in the hands of another rescuer. "My husband from the city," said she.

GILLIAGIN'S ACCIDENT POLICY (May 7).—Gilliagin may have been a bad provider, but when it came to politeness to the ladies, there was hardly his equal. When Nancy Jinks was attacked by farmer Kinkin's cow, he saved her life and was rewarded with a dollar. An accident policy agent was in town. "A policy for one dollar," he said, "and you get five hundred in case of an accident." Gilliagin took the chance, but never was a man in harder luck. The good angels were with him and not one injury could he get, so Gilliagin went back to the agent and demanded back his dollar. Now Gilliagin's daughter, Pansy, was learning scientific biscuit making. They fell on Mrs. Gilliagin's foot and that irate lady, thinking them stones, threw them out the window upon Gilliagin's passing head. Fate is a perverse and fickle lady. He was all but maimed for life.

IN FATE'S CYCLE (May 11).—His baby dying at home, he was held by the physician, from whom he had sought help, for a crime another had committed, in prison he was confronted by his wife, who had stolen that their child might live. One hardly wonders at the man's inflamed hatred against the judge. Yet the child, the real cause, prevented a great catastrophe, enabling the judge to establish true justice.

HER MOTHER'S WEAKNESS (May 14).—The mother, a kleptomaniac, promised her daughter to keep from temptation, but her weakness overcame her. "You're ruining my life—I'm to be married," cried the girl. Away from daughter and friends the mother struggled alone. In the end she saved others from the sin that claimer her.

ALMOST AN OUTRAGE (May 16).—If it hadn't been for the church donations, it is a question where Reverend Binks would have eaten, slept and drank. Rich Aunt Amelia arrived from the city. Church donations appeased her ravenous appetite. Horrors upon horrors! Fido's collar was found in the soup. It looked very much as if something beside church donations had provided the wherewithal.

WHILE THE BAND PLAYED (May 16).—No sir, pa would not have Percy for a son-in-law—but there was no telling what pa would do. He had the toothache. Professor Hicks, the great American tooth puller, arrived in town. Percy helped his trade, while grateful pa changed his mind.

LUBIN.

THE WALLFLOWER (May 12).—Edith Lyle, a pretty young graduate, gives a little dance for her classmates. Among the girls is Mary Morris, who is much poorer than the others. Edith feels that she will be out of place at the party, but sends her an invitation, nevertheless. Mary is delighted, for such happenings are very rare in her life. She finds that her dress is very plain, and in marked contrast to the beautiful gowns of the other girls. And as she can neither tango nor turkey trot she soon finds herself a neglected wallflower. She steals off, unnoticed, into the hallway and there finds Edith's little sister who, in trying to reach her mother, falls fainting at Mary's feet. The girl carries the little one into the drawing-room, telephones for the doctor, who states that the child has scarlet fever, and immediately places all under quarantine. The servants, hearing this, manage to escape. Mary helps the doctor with the sick child, for she is the only one in the house he can rely upon. When the others fear hunger, Mary reassures them, stating that she can cook. She soon becomes the most popular girl in the house, the boys spending most of their time with her in the kitchen. Before quarantine is removed each of the boys, who slighted Mary on the night of the party, has proposed and been rejected. But when the doctor asks his pretty assistant to become his wife, she accepts him gladly.

IN THE NORTHLAND (Special—2 parts—May 13).—The lovemaking of Jean Leseur, woodsman and trapper, is pleasing to Celeste, the belle of the French-Canadian village, because he is the handsomest youth of the region. They are betrothed, and soon after Celeste goes to visit an aunt in Quebec. At the end of a year the girl returns with new ideas of life; her frontier lover appears crude to her and, because of his gentleness, she thinks him stupid. Still, she must wed, and Jean takes her to his cabin in the forest. The young wife does not attempt to hide her contempt for her husband, but his tenderness is unfailing.

A traveler, Jack Hadley, a polished rake, chances to see Celeste, and, attracted by her beauty, determines to make a conquest. Jean is warned of the attentions Hadley is showing Celeste and thrashes the informer. At length the girl elopes with the stranger, though she does not love him—she yields to the lure of the bright life he promises. Snow is falling when Jean comes home and discovers her flight. He realizes that the elopers may encounter great danger, and follows, but soon loses the trail. Their way lost and exhausted, Hadley and Celeste take refuge in a cave. The man's nerve is gone, and the girl finds wood and builds a fire. She tells Hadley it may be days before they are found or are able to make their way to shelter and that they must save their small supply of food, but while she sleeps he devours it all and allows the fire to go out. All night Jean searches and late in the morning finds the cave.

Celeste is unconscious from cold and hunger. Hadley, having had food, and now selfishly drinking all Jean's brandy, is not in a bad way. It is necessary to get to the cabin at once, and Jean carries his wife in his arms. Hadley soon gives out, and Jeanh leaves him, giving him his own coat. Reaching the cabin and leaving Celeste, Jean retraces his steps. Hadley will not make any effort to save himself, and the woodsman takes him upon his back and begins a struggle through the snow. Still carrying his burden he bursts open the cabin door and falls unconscious. An hour later he revives to find Celeste tending him. Hadley, having expended no energy, is quite restored. Jean weakly gathers up his pack and rifle, and telling Celeste that to him nothing is of consequence but her happiness, and that because Hadley seems necessary to that happiness he has brought him safely back to her, he moves to the door. But Celeste stops him with clinging arms, begging him to stay, to forgive her, to accept the love which she now realizes she had for him. Hadley hurries cruelingly away. The snow ceases to fall, and sunshine streams into the little cabin.

MADAM COQUETTE (Special—2 parts—May 14).—James Roberts neglects his wife, Ethel. At a reception Ethel meets Wilbur Cortland, a sentimental youth who falls in love with her. Wilbur escorts Ethel home and before he leaves her steals her photograph, of which he makes a small duplicate and places it in his watch charm. Ethel doesn't take his love seriously enough at first to discourage him. She tells her husband of Wilbur's attentions in hopes of arousing his jealousy so that he may be more attentive to her, but Roberts is not inclined to be jealous and driven to despair by his indifference, she resolves to compel his attentions by deliberate flirtations. She is the most admired woman at the dances and the envious women nickname her Madam Coquette. When Roberts sees his wife frequently in Wilbur's company, he does feel a pang of jealousy, but succeeds in hiding it. As soon as Ethel realizes how seriously infatuated Wilbur is she tries to discourage him and make it plain that it is absolutely impossible for her to return his affections. Wilbur calls again and when she sends out word with her maid that she can't receive him, he sends her a note, reading: "Dearest—I must see you tonight—Wilbur." The note drops to the floor and Ethel tears up the envelope, not knowing that the note was not in it. She still refuses to see Wilbur and he goes from there to the club where Robert is playing cards. From the club Wilbur sends Ethel a note reading that he is going to commit suicide and that he will be dead by the time the note reaches her. Before he leaves the club, he drops the watch charm containing her picture and it falls into Roberts' hands. Robert determines to demand an explanation from Ethel and rushes home. In the meanwhile Ethel, frantic with fear that Wilbur will kill himself, phones to the club and when informed that Wilbur has just left, she rushes to his home in hopes of preventing him from committing the deed. Roberts, arriving home, discovers Wilbur's note saying that he must see her tonight and surmises that Ethel must be with Wilbur. The wife reaches Wilbur just in time to prevent him from blowing his brains out and Roberts just in time to see Ethel enter the house. He steals in through a window. A passerby mistakes him for a burglar and calls the police. Roberts accuses Ethe and Wilbur of misconduct, and, telling Ethe that he never wants to see her again, turns his back on them and walks toward the door. Wilbur snatches up the gun and places it at his own temple. Ethel jumps forward, the gun goes off, but instead of blowing Wilbur's brains out, it wounds Roberts, who falls unconscious. Policemen rush in and place Wilbur under arrest. Wilbur believes that he killed Roberts, tears loose from policemen and, backing toward the window, falls through. Roberts' wound turns out to be a slight one. Ethel explains that she was in the house to prevent Wilbur from committing suicide. Wilbur breaks a leg falling through the window, and confesses to Roberts that he stole Ethel's picture. Roberts tells the policemen that the shooting was accidental, and Wilbur falls in love with the next woman he meets.

THE SIGNAL (May 15).—Ruth Conway, a self reliant girl, arrives in the West to take over her dead brother's claim. The girl is alone in the world, and it is her intention to remain alone. On her arrival in the village she meets Dave Fischer, a mining foreman, who was a friend of her brother's, and a smooth Mexican of the better class, named Carlos Moreno. She asks them to help her load her baggage on burros and pack it to her mountain shack. Dave falls in love with the girl, but she will allow him to do nothing to show his love. The Mexican admires her from another motive. Carlos attempts to become familiar one day and Ruth awakens to her danger. She beats the Mexican off with a club. She does not tell Dave of her encounter, but the miner does not cease to worry for her safety.

Finally Dave declares his love and is gently turned down, but Dave hits upon a plan to guard the girl. He lays a fire of wood and leaves on a bluff overlooking the valley near the girl's shack. He tells her that if ever she needs aid to light the fire. Ruth laughs at the precaution. An hour later while the girl is sitting on the grassy slope, Carlos sneaks up behind her and manages to snatch her gun and cartridge belt. The girl escapes to the shack with the Mexican in pursuit. In terror, she bars the door and taking her second revolver from a chest of drawers, she fires at the Mexican through a hole in the door. This repulses Carlos for a moment and he retires. The girl finds, however, after she has emptied her revolver, that no ammunition remains. Carlos, having retreated to the bluff to watch, rolls and lights a cigarette. He throws the match, still burning, off to one side and it falls in the signal fire. Carlos again advances on the shack. Dave, from the mine in the valley, sees the signal and starts up the mountain. Carlos cannot break the door in with his weight, so he attacks it with an axe. Dave arrives. A desperate struggle ensues. Meanwhile, Ruth, in an agony of terror, throws herself on the bed and buries her head in the pillow. Dave overpowers and chokes the Mexican, then enters the shack himself. He goes to the bed and touches Ruth's shoulder. She seizes a chair and lifts it above her head to strike. As she swings for the blow she comes face to face with Dave. She stands a moment with the chair upraised, then her hands relax, the chair falls to the floor, and with a cry of relief, she throws herself into Dave's arms.

HE SAID HE COULD ACT (May 16).—John Brown, who is really black, loves Mattie White, who also is black, and he might have won her had it not been for Rastus Johnson, who has been an actor with a colored troupe. Mattie falls for the glamour of the stage and it looks to be "good night" for John. He gets a job as a slave with a Shakespearean company and proudly announces to Mattie that he is an actor, *too, with a white company, at that. More important still, he has a job and Rastus has none. The only thing that prevents complete surrender is the fact that he cannot take her to the theater and act, too. Rastus is her escort. John is disappointed in his costume. He expected more and even the addition of a spear does not help him much. On the scene his awkwardness breaks up the show, helped by some tricks that the stage hands play on him. The irritated leading man charges on John with a sword, but John beats him out of the back door. He is not quick enough, however, to outstrip a charge of birdshot the property man sends after him, and he cannot even sit down to think over his troubles. Mattie spurns him and the last we see of him a policeman is sending him home in a barrel to cover his scanty wardrobe.

UNIVERSAL IKE.

UNIVERSAL IKE GETS A LINE ON HIS WIFE (May 12).—Universal Ike and the sheriff—the best of friends—each entertain a commonplace sentiment in regard to his wife; namely, neither is interested in her so long as she doesn't burn the biscuits. There is to be a picnic. The two wives wish to attend. The two husbands find no pleasure in the idea. As a result, Ike and the sheriff decide to spend the day at the beach together and leave their wives behind. Each goes home to spruce up and each has a heated dispute with his wife.

The sheriff comes after Ike and meets Mrs. Ike. She tells him what an utterly unappreciative husband she has. The sheriff becomes confidentially sympathetic, and finally volunteers to take her to the picnic himself.

In the meantime, Ike is looking for the sheriff and meets Mrs. Sheriff. She recites her troubles, and tender-hearted Ike invites her to accompany him to the picnic. Their affairs become sadly mixed up until Mrs. Ike and the sheriff go fishing. Ike gets a fish on his line and it becomes entangled with that of the sheriff. A most painful meeting takes place when the two couples follow their lines to the seat of the trouble.

JOKER

THE SHARPS WANT A FLAT (April 25).—The one consuming passion of Mrs. Sharp's nature is her love of dumb animals. Among her collection are cats, dogs, birds, a sheep, a goat, a pony and a monkey. She keeps them all in her small flat on the fifth story of an apartment house. Her neighbors, however, object to them. In short, Mrs. Sharp is asked to move. She complies with this unreasonable request and forthwith she and Mr. Sharp set out in search of a new flat. It is a terrible experience. Howbeit, the Sharps decide upon a flat and move. Above them is located an all-night tango school. The dancers are most inconsiderate. In the early hours of the morning they disturb the poor dumb animals by stamping their heels upon the floor. The Sharps come to the conclusion that there is no way of getting away from obnoxious neighbors; that they may as well become martyrs to the system. They give away all their pets, the pony, monkey, goat, the parrot, and with a deep sense of their martyrdom, return to their first flat, forgiving the offenses of their inconsiderate neighbors.

LUTTIE'S LOVERS (April 22).—Little did Hy Holcomb, Justice of the Peace, realize the havoc he would work by reducing the rates on marriages. First, Pinky Peters, a persevering and long-suffering suitor for the hand of Luttie Lipkum, reads of the reduction in rates and, figuratively, turns a double somersault in his hurry to carry the joyful news to the Luttie. The girl is half willing to be married. Pinky goes to get the consent of Luttie's mother.

During Pinky's absence the front gate is opened and Willy Walrus, the dream boy, the logical soulmate of any girl under eighteen years old, walks into the Pinky's romance. Luttie loves him at sight and after an exchange of six hot words, they decide to take advantage of the marriage offer. From a window Pinky sees his fiancee climb into a buggy and beat it down the road with another. He will not be robbed of his bride without a fight, and begins to chase the eloping couple.

However, after some wild excitement, everybody is the loser. The judge loses his fee; Luttie her soulmate; Pinky a wife, and the dream-boy his liberty—all because the judge interfered with the tradition of the marrying business.

HOW GREEN SAVED HIS WIFE (May 13).—Green was stricken while spending an afternoon at the seaside with his wife. He saw a fisherman whipping the waters with a line.

"Now, my dear," he said, "you just sit down on the warm sand and I'll be back in a minute. Be careful, though, and don't let the tide isolate you. This little stretch of sand will be an island in no time."

Thus it is. She waited and waited and Green fished. She went to sleep. The tide rolled in and she was surrounded by water. The nearest that Green could get to her was the summit of a cliff directly above the island. Green conceived the luminous idea of lowering a man, head foremost, over the cliff—the man thus lowered to grab Mrs. Green and lift her up to safety. At the critical moment he lost his hold and dropped the man upon his wife. In desperation Green then went in search for aid.

In the meantime a bather happened by. The bather rescued Mrs. Green. When Green returned with a newly enthused party of life-savers, public sentiment, at finding the woman already rescued, ran so high that the disappointed rescuers merely tied Green to a rock and left him alone with the tide.

CRYSTAL.

CHARLIE'S NEW SUIT (May 12).—Charlie and Jack are rivals for Vivian's hand. Charlie buys a new suit and prepares to call on Vivian. While he is washing up a thief enters and steals the suit. The thief meets Jack in the street and sells it to him. Jack calls on Vivian. So does Charles, arrayed in his old suit. Charlie sees Jack with his suit on and moves to take possession. They fight all over the house. Charlie succeeds in tearing the trousers from Jack. Jack gets a rug to wrap around himself. He beats a hasty retreat. Charlie dons the suit and when Vivian arrives in the room, she is glad to see him.

THEIR PICNIC (May 12).—Geraldine and Joe go on a picnic. So does Harry and Alice. Joe goes for some water. He is chased by a tramp. Harry falls asleep and Alice goes for a walk. She meets Joe and they engage in conversation. Geraldine sees them. She is furious. She meets Harry. He escorts her home. That evening Geraldine writes a letter to Harry, asking him to call, and one to Joe, telling him she never wants to see him again. But she gets the letter mixed and Joe gets the invitation to call. He does so and Geraldine, realizing her love for him, submits to his embrace. Harry cannot understand his short-lived success.

CHARLIE'S WATERLOO (May 17).—Charlie leaves his wife, Vivian, after a quarrel. He meets his friend, Don, who, with his horse, has just come from a parade. They have a few drinks. Charlie suddenly sneaks out and rides away on the horse. He runs into people and causes general mix-ups. Finally he decides to go home. Vivian, tired waiting for him, is asleep. She has locked the door. Charlie tries to climb through the window and gets caught. He falls asleep hanging by his trousers. Vivian awakes in the morning and hears Charlie snoring. She cuts him down, and then gives him a fearful tongue lashing. He decides to buy her a new hat as a peace offering. He goes out. On his way back he comes across Don, who immediately engages him in a combat. Charlie gives the hatbox to a boy to mind for him, while he does battle. The boy takes the hat out and substitutes in its place a live chicken. Charlie finally escapes. He returns home. Vivian is surprised at his battered appearance. He gives her the hat box. She opens it and the chicken hops out. Vivian then takes Charlie in hand and he suffers.

STERLING

SERGEANT HOFMEYER (May 7).—Sergeant Hofmeyer's son wants a new coaster. Hofmeyer schemes to get one. Meantime, the neighborhood kids decide to have a coaster race and little Billy, who wants to be in on it, hasn't his coaster. While Hofmeyer does his best, he observes a coaster in the street out of commission. Hofmeyer walks off with it and presents it to his son. Billy steals off with the coaster when Hofmeyer is in the house. Before he goes far the machine breaks down. Hofmeyer comes up and takes the youngster to the police station. Billy then declares that the coaster does not belong to Hofmeyer—that he stole it. At this moment the captain's boy enters and accuses Hofmeyer of taking his machine. The captain smashes Hofmeyer and a general fight commences. Billy looks on, proud that he can at least cause such trouble.

ECLAIR.

IN THE FANGS OF JEALOUSY (2 parts—May 13).—Pierre Darcier, a dramatic author, lives at Lugano with his wife, and is writing a play which he hopes will bring him success. He communicates his project to his wife, and they joyously discuss the possibility of his success. They are informed that an accident has just taken place in front of the mansion and a lady has been injured. Pierre Darcier orders the injured young woman to be carried into the mansion. She remains there to complete her recovery, and is overwhelmed with gratitude for the friendship of her hosts. Her name, she says, is Gilberte Daubier.

In the course of long walks in the country, Gilberte soon notices the impression she has produced on the dramatic author, but does nothing to encourage what she looks upon as a mere flirtation. Mrs. Darcier, however, resents this intimacy and her jealousy is awakened when she sees the young woman offering a flower to her husband, and anxiously awaits her departure from the mansion. Gilberte Daubier returns to Paris to the great joy of Madeline Darcier, who thus hopes that peace will be restored to her household and calm to her husband's mind.

But Darcier, in looking over some illustrated papers, sees on the front page of a theatrical paper the photograph of their former guest under the name of Therese Santenil, the famous actress of the Theater de Varietes Parisiennes. Desirous of meeting her again and also, perhaps, in the hope of having his play presented, he decides to go to Paris and enlist her aid. He finds himself in the theater where Therese Santenil rehearses. In recalling the time passed at Lugano, the young woman's heart melts and she promises Darcier to interest herself in his behalf. She soon introduces him to the manager, who reads his play, and convinced of its excellence, accepts it.

The intimacy between the author and Therese Santenil arouses the jealousy of Rene Tellier, the star of the company, who decides to seek some means of getting rid of Pierre. The reading of the play receives an enthusiastic reception; Rene Tellier alone criticizes everything. The cast is arranged and rehearsals begin. The author works with Therese Santenil and Rene Tellier surprises them both in her room. He concludes that the author is making love to Therese Santenil and sends an anonymous letter to Mrs. Darcier, hinting at her husband's infidelity.

On reading the letter Mrs. Darcier comes to Paris and her husband, agreeably surprised, presents her to the manager; all the more readily, as there is existing between Therese Santenil and himself but a sincere friendship. But Madeline, in a moment of illumination, recognizes in Therese Santenil her former guest, Gilberte Daubier, and takes an awful determination. On the night of the play's premiere, she replaces the harmless property pistol with a loaded one. Rene Tellier appears on the stage, and when he is about to shoot Therese, the conscience-stricken Madeline screams, but—too late. Therese is dangerously stricken. The curtain is lowered and she is carried behind the scenes.

Pierre Darcier suspects Tellier, who, on being called before the manager, swears he is innocent. Mrs. Darcier then acknowledges that she changed the pistols and explains her reason. A very dramatic scene ensues between husband and wife, but fortunately Therese Santenil, who was more frightened than hurt, hurries to absolve her friend, Rene Tellier, and with true magnanimity forgives Madeline. Husband and wife unite in gratitude to the generous-spirited artiste, and face a future cloudless of misunderstandings.

OUR DAUGHTER (May 17).—Mrs. Albert Van Dyke, wife of a well-to-do Senator, has sent her daughter, Edith, to visit relatives at a fashionable resort. The Senator and Mrs. Van Dyke, with their daughter, have lived a happy married life until the good woman goes in for suffrage. She is elected to the presidency. Her head turned at her pupularity, she neglects her husband and daughter. The gulf which is caused by this condition becomes wider and they quarrel frequently. Their quarrels become more frequent until they are ready to separate, when one day a telegram is received, saying "Come immediately, matter of vital importance to Edith. Forgetting their bickerings and troubles they go to their daughter and arripe just in time to prevent an elopement with a worthless adventurer. The daughter tells them that she has been so neglected and so hungry for the love of her mother that she readily accepted the attentions of the adventurer. A sudden light breaks upon Mrs. Van Dyke and realizing her mistake, she gives up her suffrage work and decides to devote her time hereafter to her husband and daughter.

BISON.

THE TRAGEDY OF WHISPERING CREEK (2 parts—May 2).—In a small mining community lives an orphan girl who is engaged to a miner. A degenerate Mexican infests the camp and proves a menace to the citizens. The orphan's sweetheart finds him intimidating two young sweethearts and gives him a well-deserved beating. Thus he incurs the Mexican's hatred.

A young stranger, coming into camp, accidentally shoots himself while cleaning his revolver. The orphan girl takes him into her cabin and dresses his wound. She is called out by the Mexican and attacked, but is saved by the stranger. To secure revenge, the Mexican informs the miners that the orphan is harboring a man in her cabin; this reaches the ears of the orphan's sweetheart. With a strong fist, the young miner smashes the lying mouth.

In the meantime, the stranger, unaware that the girl is engaged to the miner, falls in love with her. The miner finds it out and his heart aches—but he acts straight. Upon learning the truth, the stranger departs; he makes his way up the hill, leaving the girl behind with a sore heart, for she loves him in a way. However, as he looks back and down the mountain, the stranger sees the Mexican below him on a cliff about to shoot the miner and the girl as they stand on the door-step. He hurriedly throws his pack onto him, spoiling his aim; then he jumps over and down. He kills the Mexican, but his own life is sacrificed.

Eastern town, leave for the California gold fields. After many days of weary travel they fall in with an emigrant train and continue westward. During the journey Jack Blake persues his courtship and Mary Reed. Before the emigrants have completed more than two-thirds of their journey they find themselves in a territory peopled with hostile Indians. The Reed wagon and the Blake wagon become separated. Without any anticipation the redskins fall upon the handful of white men. Mary's mother is killed and herself, her father and brother barely escape with their lives. Even a worse fate overtakes Jack Blake. Every member of his family except himself is massacred.

The surviving members of the Reed family settle in California, but the older Reed's sorrow for his dead wife preys upon him so heavily that he loses interest in the affairs of life. Surrounded by rough men, Mary accustoms herself to the use of a revolver that in time of need she may protect herself. But misfortune follows her family. One day while she is practicing with the weapon she accidentally shoots and kills her brother.

After a lapse of a number of years Jack Blake again shows up in California. He is now a graduate mining engineer. In a fight which begins over a game of cards he is wounded by Red Lawson, a worthless vagabond and gambler. In hiding from the authorities, Lawson seeks refuge in the Reed home. Mary is there alone and in protecting herself from the fugitive, a lamp is overturned and the house is burned down. His former home has done its worst for the Reeds and the turning point is at hand.

While in pursuit of Lawson, Jack Blake finds Mary, his former sweetheart. The elder Reed sees the lovers reunited and, concluding that they have no more use for him, leaves him. The story comes to a dramatic climax down in the midst of a homesteaders race Red Lawson comes upon Reed, who is mourning beside his wife's grave. Red is about to kill Reed when an old enemy of the badman shoots and kills him. Jack Blake and Mary seek out the elder Reed and the remaining members of both illfated families reunite for a luckier future.

NESTOR

THE SIREN (May 13).—On her death-bed, Renee's mother confides to her daughter the troubled history of her life. She was wealthy and she was loved alone for her riches. She was to be married; on her wedding day the bridegroom married another woman he really loved. She married her second choice of men and, after two years, he left her. When Renee was born she swore an oath to the effect that her baby, Renee, would be a siren and break a heart for every tear she had shed. With this confession Renee's mother dies and the daughter takes the fulfillment of the oath upon herself.

Finally she picks out Dick Northrop, the eldest of two brothers. Dane, the younger brother, admonishes Dick to beware of her. But Dick is young also. He proposes to her and is accepted. On his wedding day he receives a note which reads: "I despise you. I never intended to marry you—you fool, Renee!" Dick commits suicide. Then it is that Dane swears to repay the siren in her own coin. She promises to marry him. On her wedding day she receives a note: "I despise you. I never intended to marry you—you fool, Dane." Once again Renee and Dane meet. She is at her mother's grave. He is at the grave of Dick. Over all the madness and folly which is buried in those two graves Renee appeals to Dane for forgiveness. He turns away and leaves her in the darkness with her dead.

REX.

THE UNLAWFUL TRADE (May 14).—There is a fine opportunity for bravery during the height of battle. But there is probably a finer opportunity at the moment of defeat when the cry increases to a roar, "Every man for himself!" The man worth while is the man who does not heed this cry of the panic stricken. Such a man was George Tate, moonshiner by birth, but possessing the qualities of which heroes are made. His father was murdered by a half-breed. His sister, Amy, was assaulted and was in continual danger from the same source. Although he lived in the shadow of the law, an outcast with other moonshiners, he believed in a square deal. One day the revenue officers swept down upon the moonshiners' still. Tate and Neut Haigh, who loved Amy, led the forces of the moonshiners. At the deciding moment in the battle the half-breed exposed the secret defenses of the rugged country to the revenue men.

Tate, Haigh and Amy were finally driven into the Tate college. They were surrounded and the battle was at that stage when the weaker ones cry, "Every man for himself." Tate looked into the faces of Amy and Haigh. They were lovers. They had something to live for. His thoughts ran in leaps and bounds. He lifted a trap door in the floor. He knew that he was looking upon his sister for the last time. He could say nothing, except, "go."

A BOOB THERE WAS (May 17).—A boob there was who had never become sufficiently intimate with a woman to even look at her teeth without blushing. The even tenor of his life went on without a disturbing element until about the time this story opens. Then his good luck left him and a cyclone loomed up on the horizon of his milk-fed career. He went right out in the back yard and met her. Her first name was Helaise.

Just about the time he met her a traveling salesman who owned an automobile met her too. The traveling man was a smooth talker and she fell for him. They sneaked away to get married, according to the traveling man. The boob faced this situation bravely. He sold the family cow and purchased an automobile with the proceeds. Thus dolled up he makes a wild dash after the fickle Helaise, captures her and leads her to the altar. The moral is, that if she throws you down, doll up, hock the family legacies and buy a joy wagon.

DAD'S ALLOWANCE (May 14).—Mr. Huckleberry, finding that his two sons are spending too much money, decides to cut down their allowances. This is particularly a hard jolt to Jimmy, who is engaged to May. The two brothers and May get together and plan a little scheme to make the old man loosen up. May is introduced to the father. She leads him a merry chase along the great white way. Nothing is too good for Huckleberry and he proceeds to do things up in the right style. The boys think that father's tight spell is broken. When they broach the subject of more allowance he tells them that he will be obliged to stop their allowances entirely.

But another scheme comes to the trio. One night Huckleberry, while looking on the wine while it is red, signs a certain paper. The following day the boys again appeal for more money. When he bluntly refuses they flash the paper. He learns that he has appointed his own sons as his guardians. Huckleberry decides that May is at the bottom of the trouble, but learning that she is to marry his son, he finally consents to do the right thing by them all.

WON BY WIRE (May 16).—When he learns that Edythe is going with her father on a prospecting trip into the mountains, Arthur, the telegraph operator, presents her with a small home-made instrument, telling her that while she will not be able to write to him, by connecting the instrument with the wire on the left hand side nearest the post she can converse with him.

Peculiar circumstances lead Edythe's father to join with Charlie, a bad man, in working a mine. The mine proving to be a rich one, Charlie makes a getaway, while his partner is down in the shaft, and starts for the registration office. Edythe remembers her fiance's gift. After a hard trip Charlie arrives at the claim office only to learn that Arthur has already filed.

POWERS.

PITFALLS (April 17).—Clark Sanderson, a devotee of high refinement, is party to a pretty romance with Belle, which results in their engagement. Hal, Sanderson's brother, is a ne'er-do-well. He is the principal in an escapade with Celeste, a dancer, which results in his being expelled from college.

He returns home and becomes acquainted with Belle. He is a man of the world and appeals to women while his brother, upon the exterior, is a musty student. Belle soon learns that it is Hal she loves and not Clark. Her engagement with the student is broken off and she marries Hal.

Two years later Hal meets Celeste and all the old love is re-kindled. He leaves his wife for the dancer. Belle is so deeply wrought up over her husband's perfidy that she suffers a shock which impairs her eyesight and threatens to destroy her reason. In the hours of her suffering she does nothing except call for her husband. To save her reason, Clark impersonates his brother.

AMERICAN.

A SOUL ASTRAY (Two parts—May 11).—Larry Gordon, a beach comber, spends his time in the pastures of black sheep, in Honolulu. Edith Sands, the girl back home, continues to love him. Anthony Wentworth, who loves her, proposes, but she gently refuses him. One night as she sings Kipling's "Gentleman Rankers," she breaks down, weeps, and tells Anthony the whole story, how she and Larry had been sweethearts since childhood, how when he had been expelled from college, she sued and won for him his father's forgiveness. Larry gambled until penniless and dishonored he left home.

Anthony tries to comfort her. A cousin of hers returns from a trip around the world and among his kodak pictures Edith recognizes in the dissolute face of a beach comber, Larry Gordon. The cousin tells her that it is the picture of a notorious character in Honolulu known as "Gentleman Larry." Edith writes to Larry and the letter reaches him through the Rev. Otis, a mission worker. She writes him that she still loves him and begs him to come home. His first impulse is to go, but sinking down on his cot, on the dirty wall before his eyes there passes in stinging vividness the hideous steps of the downward path he has come. Sick with self loathing, he determines to save Edith from himself at any cost. His love for her is the one decent thing about him, but he realizes that he has forfeited past recall all right to love her.

He writes her a letter, supposedly from the Rev. Otis, telling her that Larry Gordon is dead. A year later Anthony again proposes to Edith. For a moment she hesitates and turning from him moves across the room. Faintly the vision of Larry, dissolute, passes before her and, as closing forever the thought from her memory, she, with a fierce smile, turns and is folded into the patient, longing arms of Anthony. At this moment Larry is upon his knees on the beach of Honolulu praying "God, ha' mercy on such as we, poor black sheep."

THE NAVY AVIATOR (May 13).—Commander Evans, U. S. N., is the expert on aviation in the navy. On his arrival with the fleet at Galveston, he goes to the Army and Navy Club where, as he is explaining his bomb-dropping aeroplane, a Mexican, who is a guest of the club, sneers at the project and is informed by Evans that he will show a practical demonstration on the aviation field that day. The scenes in the story are laid at Matamoras, in Mexico, and in Galveston, Texas. In Matamoras live the daughters of the Mexican envoy, who, a few years before, had been stationed in Washington as the representative of his country. On the outbreak of war and the death of the president of his country, he retired to his estates at Matamoras.

A captain in the Mexican army, on the outbreak of war has allied himself virtually to both factions and when accused of being a traitor to both, the blow he strikes kills the envoy. As the contending factions were engaging in war near Matamoras, for safety the ladies are taken to Galveston by their major domo. They arrive during a terrible storm, in which they are separated. They meet again at the aviation field and the practical demonstration of the bomb-dropping machine results in the killing of the traitorous Mexican and all ends well.

THANHOUSER.

GETTING RID OF ALGY (May 3).—May drops her purse and Percy follows her to the theater to return it. May likes him, but Jim, who secretly loves May, doesn't, and conspires with a gang to get rid of him. Jim doesn't want him killed, but simply taken out of the way. May and Percy became engaged, to Jim's chagrin, and the gang gets after Percy. Delayed one day, Percy fails to keep an appointment with May to purchase a trunk and follows after. Whitey and the gang closely pursued him, and the gang leader, finding Percy sitting upon the edge of May's trunk, pulls him over and into it, locks it up, and goes for a team to take it away. An observing woman sees the act and hastens to the police station to start the machinery of justice going. In the meantime May exits from the store, and an expressman is given orders to deliver the trunk at her house. The storekeeper puts another trunk in its place for a possible purchaser, and this trunk the gang takes, believing Percy is inside. The cops chase the gang and catch them with the trunk on the rail of a bridge, just about to heave it over; but May, opening her trunk, discovers Percy, and so not to lose him, she agrees to keep him for life.

A WOMAN'S LOYALTY (Two parts—May 5).—The green house proprietor did not take any heart in his work, for he firmly believed he was destined to be a great painter. The result was he neglected business for his easel and customers gradually fell off until the inevitable happened—he went into bankruptcy. His wife, who had faith in her husband's ability with the brush and a deep and abiding love for him, supported the household by her skill as a dressmaker.

One day, unexpected good fortune came to the couple—a distant relative of the wife's died and left her $1,000 in his will. The woman made all sorts of plans, but finally decided that she would pay off the mortgage on their little home. Then she noticed for the first time that her husband had left the room, and following him she demanded to know what was wrong. At first he would not tell her, but he finally explained that he wanted the money himself, for it would pay for the art course in Paris.

Again the self-sacrificing wife yielded and turned over her legacy to the husband who departed for the French capital. There he got along famously and achieved success. His fickle heart, however, did not remain true to the woman to whom he owed everything, and at last he brutally wrote her that he had decided to get a divorce so he could marry one of his models, a woman he explained "who thoroughly understands me."

The wife did not interfere, but sadly dragged out her lonely existence. The painter in time was punished, for he lost his sight and his second wife crueler than deserted him. The faithful woman in America in time heard that her former husband was dying in the Paris slums, blind and a beggar. She sold everything she had to cross the ocean to him, and reached him just before he passed away. The man was so low he did not recognize her, but believed she was the faithless model and welcomed her with tears of joy. The wife did not undeceive him and he died holding her hand and babbling his love for the other woman, but the first wife did not falter, for she saw her husband not as he really was, a weak, deceitful creature, but as the man he might have been and as the man she hoped he would have been—a leader among artists and a faithful and loving husband.

HER HERITAGE (May 12).—Mrs. Dr. Van Arsdale, a young woman of more than ordinary attainments, happily married to a physician with a large and growing practice, finds herself alone frequently, and a craving for alcohol, which she has inherited from her father, takes a hold on her. An old sweetheart, Preston Warren, moves in the same circle and at a social function where Mrs. Van Arsdale has permitted her inherited craving too much latitude, he volunteers to take her home, but instead takes her to his apartments, where he has his mother watch over her during the night, while he stays at his club. The doctor anxiously awaits his wife's return. In the morning when she awakens and learns where she is, she imagines most anything and rushes home to her husband, demanding that he kill Warren. Warren, upon request, calls on the doctor. The mother has accidentally heard over the telephone what may take place and rushes to the doctor's in time to prevent any serious consequences and tells that she slept within reach of Mrs. Van Arsdale all night. The doctor and Mrs. Van Arsdale are reconciled, and her inherited appetite is overcome.

OUR MUTUAL GIRL (May 4—No. 16).—Over the coffee cups at the breakfast table, Margaret, "Our Mutual Girl," admired the work of Cartoonist Briggs in the New York Tribune. Turning a page she laughed heartily over the humorous column, "The Conning Tower," at the bottom of which she saw the initials "F. P. A."

"Why, I know Mr. Briggs and Franklin P. Adams who signs himself F. P. A.," said "Our Mutual Girl's" aunt. "I'll take you down to their office." So Margaret was ushered into the office of the two famous New York newspaper men. As she chatted with them Cartoonist Briggs drew a picture of her. Margaret watched the work with interest. When Briggs had finished, he presented her the picture with a bow.

From there "Our Mutual Girl" went to Castle House, which is run by Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle, the country's most famous exponents of modern dances. The Castles are recognized as the most graceful and expert instructors in New York, and are co-authors of a pretentious book on the newest dances. At Castle House "Our Mutual Girl" met Mr. and Mrs. Castle, and was instructed by Mr. Castle himself in the tango, hesitation, one-step and maxixe.

That night when she returned home after the opera, "Our Mutual Girl" found a burglar in her room. Brave little country girl that she was, she did not scream, but dispelled the intruder's suspicions and drew from him the story of his life. He had become a thief to support his sister to keep her from the evils of the city, especially the East Side dance halls.

The next night Margaret and the burglar went to the dance hall he named. There they found the sister. "Our Mutual Girl" quickly led her out and took her home. Then "Our Mutual Girl" showed the sister the error of her ways and promised to help her to a fresh start in life.

THE BROKEN BOTTLE (May 6).—When May Ford hands her father the paper in the morning and he reads that the cashier of the bank has absconded, he naturaly fears for the safety of his deposit, and accompanied by May, hurries to the bank to withdraw his money. He is not the only one who is worried about his money, and when they get to the bank he has to stand in line with other depositors. Bud Fay and Curly Charlie, two crooks, also read the newspaper item, and conclude, as a lot of people will withdraw their money from the bank, t hey should have a good day's work. They see Ford withdraw his money and shadow him. As Ford is in a hurry to get to his office, he hands the money to his daughter to take home and put in a safe place. The crooks still think Ford has the money, and taking advantage of his good nature, they lure him to their shack: they search the victim but find no money, only his home address. They conclude the money must be at his house, bind Ford, leave him in charge of an old hag named Nancy. When May arrives home she puts the money in the desk, then hearing someone at the door, she partially opens the street door and then, suspicious, as she sees the two crooks, she tries to close it again, but the crooks are too strong for her. She runs from hall to room and barricades the door, takes money from the desk and hides it under carpet. Nancy is a vigilant guard until she finds the bottle that is hidden in an old chest. She drinks freely, then falls in a stupor; the bottle falls from her hand and breaks. With the aid of the broken bottle Ford severs his bonds and escapes from the shack. He informs the police and they arrive at his house in time to rescue May from the crooks. Ford realizes the run on the bank was only temporary, and that it is the safest place for his money. He again deposits his money and by his show of confidence in the bank, reassures other timid people and stops the run on the bank.

THE DEPUTY SHERIFF'S STAG (Two Parts—May 9).—Old Dan Holton, who has been sheriff of Wolf County for years, is defeated at election by Young Jim Harper. Old Dan is chagrined and Young Jim thoughtlessly tells him it is time someone else had the job. Old Dan having held it long enough. Old Dan is angry at the young sheriff, and tells him he'll have the time of his life handling the local bad men.

The young sheriff is engaged to marry Mary Snively, a daughter of a ranchman. Jim tells her the good news of his election, and says they shall now be married in a month. Three weeks later the stage, carrying $20,000 of Well's Fargo's money, is held up and robbed by three masked highwaymen. The young sheriff starts out on their trail. Mary cries, knowing Jim's dangerous mission, but he reassures her.

Old Dan, the former sheriff, warns him that the men are reckless, and offers to go along as deputy, but young Jim rejects the offer. Mary forgets the bad feeling she knows exists between Old Dan and her lover, and rides to his cabin two hours after young Jim started. Meetinf Old Dan, Mary shows her fears for Jim.

Old Dan at first is grim enough, but her youth and beauty and her love for the young sheriff melt the old man's anger. He reassures her, but says he can do nothing, not being a deputy. Back at his cabin, Old Dan reviews the situation, and goes down to the saloon, and tells the men there they ought to go out as backers for young Jim.

Old Dan warns them further that rumor says "The Lone Highwayman had been seen in the neighborhood and might have been after the Wells Fargo's money himself." They tell him that it isn't their business, that Jim is sheriff, and if he wanted a posse, he could have raised one easily. Old Dan, back in his cabin, pictures young Jim trying to round up the three highwaymen, and Mary's broken heart if anything happens to the young sheriff. An hour later than that the highwaymen who have captured the young sheriff, and are now cooking their dinner at their fire, bind their captive still more tightly, and sit down to eat. Suddenly a voice cries, "Hands up!" and the masked figure, who has approached them stealthily on horseback has them covered with his two guns. They are not fast enough in obeying and he shows them his skill with the pistol. Then they throw up their hands. He makes them drop their guns, collects them, then edges towards the bound sheriff whispering, "Give me your star, make me your deputy." Young Jim starts, then works his hands loose with the help of the other's knife, gives up the star, which the other pins with one hand to his breast. Then, with a grim laugh, the masked man throws off his mask. It is Old Dan, and he and the young sheriff, who is remorseful for his cruel jests at the old ex-sheriff, take the highwaymen to the town and the jail. Mary meets them. Young Jim explains matters to her. She throws her arms around Old Dan, and young Jim appoints the old man his perpetual deputy, telling him to keep the star.

Extraordinary Announcement!

As President and General Manager of the Balboa Amusement Producing Co., manufacturers of "The Pictures Beautiful," I have made arrangements by which all features now on hand and those to be produced in the future, will be released by the

Box Office Attraction Company

(William Fox, President)

130 West Forty-Sixth Street, New York

These rights embrace the entire United States, Canada, Central and South America, and the West Indies. The Box Office Attraction Co. will reserve New York City and State, Northern New Jersey and the New England States for itself, and supply exhibitors in these territories with Balboa attractions.

The state rights for all other sections of the United States, Canada, Central and South America and the West Indies will be offered for sale to responsible individuals and corporations operating reliable exchanges. Those familiar with the high standard maintained in all Balboa Amusement Producing Co. features will advance their own interests by opening correspondence at once with the Box Office Attraction Co.

Twenty Great Motion Picture Masterpieces Now Ready for Release

Each of these is a wonder-worker—the very best product of an all-star company of players and our mammoth, splendidly equipped Studio at Long Beach, California.

The first of these to be disposed of, so far as state rights are concerned, and the first to be released in New York City and State, Northern New Jersey and the New England States will be a Remarkable Picture Dramatization of the World Famous Love Story

"ST. ELMO" In Six Great Reels

In comparison, all other cinematographic undertakings pale into insignificance. More than one hundred and twenty-five gorgeous exterior and interior scenes furnish lavish backgrounds for the action, which ranges from the expression of quiet happiness to the deepest torment of the human soul.

In announcing this transaction I do not fear contradiction when I say it is by far the largest deal that has ever been consummated in the moving picture business.

LOVE'S SACRIFICE (2 parts—May 1).—Exiled from Mexico, Don José, a wealthy Spanish grandee, crosses the border and is captured by a band of Indians under Chief Black Bull. All of those in the caravan are killed, with the exception of Don José's baby daughter, who has been secreted under the wagon train.

Black Bull takes the child into his tribe and brings her up like one of his own children. Years later, John Cobb and his partner become lost in the desert. Cobb is found unconscious beside the body of his partner by Black Bull's adopted daughter, now known as Little Fawn. Cobb is taken to the Indian village. There he falls in love with his rescuer, Little Fawn, and marries her.

Soon after an Eastern financier offers to buy the mining claim which Cobb and his dead partner had been working before they became lost in the desert. Cobb sells out at a good price and takes his bride back East to Washington, where he introduces her as a Spanish lady.

At a reception in Cobb's home two of the Indians in Black Bull's tribe who come to Washington to see the Great White Father, visit Little Fawn, as they continue to call her. Their visit greatly scandalizes society women at the reception and believing Little Fawn to be an Indian they snub and "cut" her until the girl's spirit is crushed.

Little Fawn steals away and travels overland to the reservation. Cobb follows her, but too late. Black Bull, after revealing the secret of her birth, points out the mound that marks her grave.

THE SUBSTITUTE (Two Parts—May 8).—Sergeant Peters, found guilty of theft, is drummed out of the service in disgrace. Lieutenant Taylor, having just graduated from West Point, arrives in Arizona. He and Peters take the same stage and they realize that their resemblance is remarkable. The stage is wrecked and Taylor loses his reason completely, the past becoming a blank. Peters, finding cards and letters of Taylor's, resolves to go to Taylor's home and impersonate him. The next day he reports at Fort Graham as Lieut. Taylor. In a card game Peters is killed by one of the gamblers. Fearing that the news of Mrs. Taylor's supposed son's fate will kill her (and the fact that she is blind), the Colonel plans to keep her in ignorance of it and substitutes Lieutenant Taylor. The Colonel is about to leave the post for a campaign against Wounded Hawk, and refuses Lieutenant Taylor permission to accompany the troop. Taylor dresses, however, as a private and accompanies the ammunition train, which is later cut off from the main command and surrounded by Indians. In the fight that follows Lieutenant Blake, who is in command of the ammunition train, is very severely wounded and Taylor, whose reason has been restored by the grazing of a bullet, assumes command and holds the ammunition train until help is brought from the fort. Lieutenant Taylor is taken to the hospital, and Marion, the Colonel's daughter, who, when sent by Mrs. Taylor to look for her son, finds the letter and a photograph of Peters, is the means of Taylor being restored to his proper place in rank at the Fort.

BRONCHO.

THE ADVENTURES OF SHORTY—"Shorty's Strategy (Two Parts—May 13).—Ranchman Landers, owner of the Three Bar Ranch, sends his son, Dick, and Shorty, a friend, to town for money for the pay roll. A gambler, with his sweetheart, Madge, sees Dick enter the bank, he waits outside. Shorty leaves Dick for a few minutes to go to the shoemaker. Madge approaches Dick and bumps into him as he is reading a letter. She apologizes and immediately begins to encourage an acquaintance. Dick invites her to have a bottle of beer and also into the dance hall for a dance. Madge tells Dick that the gambler will not allow women to gamble at his table, and asks him to bet some money for her. He loses and before he is aware of it he has bet the pay roll. Shorty, in order to get the money back, gets a bottle of whiskey, follows the gambler to his room, and at the point of a revolver makes the gambler drink the whole bottle. Shorty puts him on a burro and turns the burro loose. Dick's father and the cowboys, who have become worried over their non-appearance, find Shorty and Dick asleep in a room at the hotel. Shorty explains that they could not go home in the dark, after having whispered to Dick not to worry as the money is under his pillow.

DOMINO.

OUT OF THE NIGHT (2 parts—April 30).—After deserting his wife, Marie, Francois Lefevre goes to the gold mining region in western Canada. He meets there Sargeant Patton, one of his wife's early sweethearts. Fickle as well as faithless, Francois flirts with Adele Gregg, wife of one of the miners. Gregg resents Lefevre's actions and quarrels with him. Francois kills the miner, but manages to escape.

Exchanging clothes with a miner who has been killed in an explosion, Lefevre manages to make his pursuers believe that he has been killed. Sergeant Patton returns to Marie with news of Lefevre's death and again proposes marriage. Marie accepts him. The following winter Francois returns to Ontario, his old home, to make a visit to his wife. Not knowing of Marie's marriage to Sergeant Patton, he peers into the window and sees his wife and her old sweetheart. Believing her faithless, Francois determines to kill Marie.

He creeps into the living room of the house while she is in her bedroom. While he awaits her return he notices that she has been sewing on some tiny garments, baby clothes. He picks up the little lace dresses and then lets them fall with a sigh. Realizing that she is about to become a mother and fearing to disgrace her, he leaves the house sincere in his determination to lead a better life.

THE FOREST VAMPIRES (2 parts—May 14).—Pierre Duval, leader of the Forest Vampires, a band of robbers, with his confederates, holds up and robs a lady and two gentlemen of the Royal Coach. Armand Pauvre, a detective, disguised as a musician, goes to the Tavern d'Lion to watch the landlord, Pierre Duval, as it is suspicioned by the chief of police that he is in league with the Forest Vampires. Pierre Duval's daughter, Marie, falls in love with Armand. He determines to use her love as a means of discovering the secrets of the robbers, and writes a letter to the chief of police to that effect. Pierre Duval, finding the letter, becomes suspicious of Armand and calls the band together. They capture Armand and take him to their cave. Marie, hearing the noise, rushes to the office of the magistrate and tells him what has happened. The magistrate and soldiers go to the cave to save Armand, and there, to Marie's surprise, is her father. She tells him that she loves Amand and that it was she who sent the officers. Pierre Duval shows Marie the note, where Armand tells the chief of police that he is only using her. As Armand comes out of the cave Marie shoots him. Then he learns that it is she who has saved him from the hands of the Vampires; he pleads with her to come to him, but she refuses.

FILM RELEASES OF AMERICA.

THE ACTOR (Three Parts).—Robert West, an actor, after his performance in "Hamlet" steps into a restaurant. Through a door leading into a private dining room he sees his wife with Vickers, a friend. Infuriated he attacks Vickers, who escapes with the actor's wife. Contemplating suicide, the actor treads the dark streets. His old friend, the bottle, has superior allurement. The liquor steals away his senses and a new found woman friend steals his pocket-book. Unable to pay for his drink, West is arrested. The publicity attending his troubles causes West to plunge deeper into alcoholic excess. He is so brain befuddled that he is unable to go on for his performance and he is discharged.

West goes from bad to worse. Finally John Spencer, a friend, with West's permission, takes West's little daughter Ellen to Spencer's home, away from the evil influence of her drunken father. Five years pass and the miserable actor is now "down and out." An old actor friend comes up and tells him about an opportunity for him to substitute in "Hamlet." West is engaged. On the evening of the opening performance he stops for a stimulant. While he dresses, he reaches frequently for the flask in his pocket. The effect of his too frequent potations overtake him in the second act when an attack of delirium tremens comes upon him. Seeing snakes, rats and monstrous animals, he smashes the furniture and hurls chairs at his fellow actor. In a fit he falls.

Some weeks later West leaves the hospital and drifts about the streets. He attends a Salvation Army meeting, one of whose officers obtains a position as stoker for him on a steamer bound for America. As he is stoking in the fiery hot engine room, the old temptation again comes upon him and he takes out his ever present bottle. His

ECLECTIC

WAR IS HELL (Four Parts).—Lester Hardy, who lived in the principality of Bergstern, sent his son, Adolph, to live with his friend, Modzel, at Dawsbergen, where he was to learn the art of aviation. Modzel also had a son, Sigmund, who attended the aviation school and the two young men became fast friends. Aloph, after three months, became a proficient aviator and wrote to his parents of his progress. He also confessed that he had fallen in love with Helene, his host's daughter.

But peace and harmony was destined to be disrupted. War was declared between the two principalities and Aloph was ordered to return to Bergstern. Sad indeed was the parting of the lovers, who vowed that the cruel war would not separate them for long. But fate smiled wickedly to herself. Helene fastened her locket to Adolph's watch-chain as a token of her love. When Adolph arrived home, he immediately enlisted with the aviation corps and was ordered to destroy the enemy's balloons, if possible. Sailing through the air on his mission of destruction, he sent bomb after bomb into the enemy, destroying a dozen great balloons. Consternation reigned in Dawsbergen. Sigmund, who had enlisted with his country's aviators, was ordered to set out after the enemy's destructive aeroplane. Soon he sighted it and succeeded in gaining a position directly above it. He sent a bomb toward the other machine, which was struck and fell to the ground. Unhurt by the fall, Adolph ran for the shelter of a nearby mill. From this vantage point he succeeded in killing several of the enemy. Sigmund volunteered to capture the bold aviator, but fell mortally wounded. Lieutenant Maxim then commanded that the mill be blown up. The great structure came to the ground with a crash, and the lifeless body of Adolph was laid beside that of his friend. Neither had known that the other was his old comrade.

Lieutenant Maxim reported the death of Sigmund to his bereaved parents, who sadly but proudly learned of his heroism. Maxim was smitten with the beautiful Helene. Helene, who waited in vain for news of her lover. One day Maxim told her that he loved her and asked her to marry him, but she told him that she could not give an answer to him then. As they were resting after a stroll through the wood, Helene was startled to see hanging from his watch-chain the locket which she had given to Adolph when they parted. Maxim then explained that he took it from the body of the man whom he had killed in the destruction of the mill. Beside herself with grief at the unexpected news, Helene was tempted to throw herself in a nearby lake. Hearing the bells tolling in a cloister nearby, she hesitated, and realized that the bells were calling to her. For the world had no place for her now, with her memories of grief and memories, and she made her way to the holy house. And oft in the twilight those memories come back to her of the days when peace reigned in the land and the terrors of war were unknown.

THE WAIF (Six Parts).—Robert Daubrais, while in London, learned that his brother died in Paris. He had expected to inherit the bulk of the estate as the only heir, Arthur, was a sickly child. However, another child, Remi, was born after the father's death and Daubrais was furious. Scheming to get the estate, he hired a gangster, Moretti, to kidnap Remi. The child was left in a park where he was found by Barberin, a laborer, and his wife, Chavanon. This fact was told to Daubrais. Eight years passed and Remi's mother gave him up for dead. During this time Remi grew up, believing that Barberin's wife was his own mother. One day Barberin broke his arm and decided that he could no longer support Remi, who overheard his foster-parents talking about him. He was sorry to learn that he was not their child. Chancing to meet Vitali, a street-performer, Barberin hired Remi out to him. Soon after Vitali was arrested for not having a license and was sent to jail. Remi, left alone with three dogs and a monkey, was forced to struggle for himself.

Daubrais' scheme, however, was frustrated, as Arthur, while never robust, still continued to live. While cruising for his health, Arthur spied Remi and his trick animals on the river bank and persuaded his mother to take them on board. Remi told his new friends of how old Vitali was arrested and Madam Daubrais succeeded in having him liberated. He rejoined Remi, who regretted leaving his friends. So, for the second time, fate separated mother and child. Misfortune seemed to follow Remi and Vitali, for soon after two of their dogs died and they found it difficult to eke out a bare existence. Believing he could do better alone, Vitali gave Remi into the keeping of Garafoli, a rascally Fagin. Seeing Garafoli flog his other boys, he again took Remi with him. His strength was exhausted, however, and one cold night he passed away, leaving Remi alone once more.

Madame Daubrais often requested her brother-in-law to try to locate the little boy whom Arthur wished to see again. But Daubrais willed otherwise. He succeeded in finding Remi and told him that Moretti, the kidnapper, was his father. Remi had taken up with a little street gamin named Matteo, who overheard Daubrais tell Moretti who Remi's real parents were. This he told to Remi and the little chums decided to run away. Daubrais told Remi's mother that the boy she sought was dead. But just then Remi and his little friend arrived. Great was her surprise and delight to learn that Remi was her long mourned child. Daubrais, now unmasked, was driven in anger from her sight. Safe again in her arms at last after many years of trials and tribulations, Remi vowed that he would never again be separated from his mother. And Madam Dubrais breathed a fervent amen.

WILKAR FILMS

KADRA SAFA (Five Parts).—Miss Weisenthal portrays the favorite wife of a sheik, having found favor with him owing to her grace and beauty and her poetry of motion. Being the favorite wife, she is allowed the privileges of the harem, with a retinue of slaves, and she lives like a princess.

One day, while taking her daily ride accompanied by several of her slaves, they are set upon by bandits, and Kadra Safa is taken prisoner. She is, however rescued by an American doctor and botanist, who, together with a party of his friends, is exploring the desert. The doctor is surprised and startled to find so beautiful a woman in this far-out-of-the-way place. The doctor accompanies Kadra Safa back to the palace, where he is received as a guest. He is not, however, permitted, according in the Mohammedan custom, to see Kadra Safa. The sheik orders that to him the party of the palace, and sets aside slaves to do his bidding.

Some time later the doctor and his attendant, wandering through the gardens, suddenly behold a beautiful sight. Kadra Safa is entertaining her lord and master with one of her dances.

The doctor is enthralled, and, forgetting himself, tosses her a rose. Love is blind? How would it be possible for this man of culture and refinement to successfully carry off this oriental woman? The way is opened up to them. Kadra Safa feigns illness and the doctor is sent for.

He slips her a note, saying that on the morrow at high noon, the day set for the massacre of the Christians, and probably the palace will be thrown into a pandemonium, if Kadra Safa will meet the doctor near the outer wall they shall escape to civilization. Things go well until the lovers are discovered. Everything is forgotten, even the massacre, to avenge this desecration of the Mohammedan harem. The doctor and Kadra Safa seek refuge in an old well. They are discovered and vengeance is meted out to them. Water is turned in upon them. Kadra Safa and the doctor die like rats in a trap.

THE GREAT DERBY (Three parts).—Lieutenant Curt Stoffeldt is in constant money difficulties. Every day that passes it becomes worse and worse. Just as he has become engaged to the beautiful Alice Brandit everything seems to combine to crush him. He writes to his old friend, Otto Storm, and asks for his help. Otto Storm is ready to help his friend and introduces him to a money lender, Creutz, from whom Curt gets a loan. Creutz is very affable towards Curt, and even invites him to dinner. But his kindness is only intended to get the young officer for a son-in-law. He tries his very best and is ably assisted by his daughter, Sarah, but Storm, who is secretly in love with Sarah, is pleased to note that Curt, happy in the affection of his fiancee, Alice, does not take the hints.

After having gotten in the power of the note-broker Creutz, Curt's money matters have gotten in a still worse state, and one day, when he is on the brink of bankruptcy, Sarah makes a final effort to capture him. She writes him a letter in which she offers to pay all his debts if he will wed her, and Curt declines her offer with thanks. His last hope now is to win the first prize (20,000 dollars) in the coming great race, and he has the advantage of being considered a sure winner. He does not even fear his own friend, Otto Storm.

But the jilted Sarah desires revenge. The day of the race arrives, and before the start Sarah steals into the stables to put out her wicked deed. But Alice, who on a former occasion having seen Curt and Sarah together, suddenly gets an inspiration: she suspects Curt of having a liaison with Sarah. She follows Sarah to watch her movements, and is horror-stricken to find her engaged in cutting the saddle-girth on Curt's saddle. Her first thought is to shout, but suddenly she gets an idea. She hides herself in one of the boxes and when Sarah has finished her work she comes out of the box and exchanges Curt's saddle with the one lying next to it. This belongs to Otto Storm. She then returns to the enclosure. The race begins and the public follows Curt with strained eyes, who, as usual, is leading. Suddenly a scream from the densely packed onlookers is heard. An accident has happened. Otto Storm has fallen with his horse and is being led to the ambulance. Sarah, who, horror-stricken, has seen the result of her wicked deed, hurries to the scene, where she finds Storm, who through a wonderful fluke of luck has only been slightly wounded. She throws herself at his feet and begs him to forgive her. Alice also has come, frightened because of what she has done. But Storm cannot withstand the pleadings of the girl he loves, and finally the two young ladies are conciliated. Just then a great shouting is heard from the enclosure. Curt has won the race. With a wreath of laurels around his shoulders he is receiving the cheers of the frantic public. He has saved his honor—and now he can pay his debt.

FEATURES IDEAL.

PETROFF, THE VASSAL (Three Parts).—Petroff Sementick, a Russian nobleman, becomes ruined financially. His creditors seize all his property and the man becomes a wandered. He continues this precarious existence until one day he rescues a man from under the wreckage of his turnout. It transpires to be Prince Dimitrieff. In a sudden burst of thankfulness for his deliverance, the Prince retains Sementick as overseer of the palace. Each day's experience drives home to him what a bitter thing it is to eat the bread of others. The great possessions of Princess Sonia only mock her, for the Prince, a man of overbearing vanity, seeks tribute to it in new smiles. Tatiana Leontieff, the Russian Imperial Dancer, is his latest conquest. While he basks in the warmth of her calculating smiles, the Princess Sonia wanders alone and forgotten through the palace grounds. Her steps are stayed by the sound of piercingly sweet strains—and thus commences the friendship between the Princess and her vassal which is fostered by their loneliness into a deep love.

Tatiana Leontieff tires of her Dimitrieff. A younger noble engages her attention. This noble and the Prince engage in a duel over the dancer. Dimitrieff's life pays the price of his vagrant affections. He closes his eyes on this world in Sonia's presence. She is overwhelmed by grief.

Twenty years have passed. Petroff Sementick has degenerated into a simple fellow who is the laughing stock of all. His Princess Sonia had died abroad, leaving a daughter. Sementick, faithful to the memory of his Princess, surrounds her portrait with fragrant flowers each day. Sementick is excited over word that the Princess Olga, Sonia's daughter, is coming with her husband to reside in the palace. Sementick's anguish is terrible to behold. He cannot bear the thought that his daughter will see her father jeered at and a spectacle for all to scorn. But an overwhelming hunger to behold her keeps him from fleeing. The Princess and her husband arrive and accept the rustic entertainment arranged in their honor. Sementick, called upon to do his share, pours forth his heart in the old songs that pave the Princess Sonia.

Follows a dinner at the palace to a company of notables. After the repast Sementick is called upon to divert them. They ply him with drink, then crown the maudlin with the fool's cap, pelting him with the flowers that decorate Sonia's portrait. At this desecration of his beloved Princess, he regains a terrible lucidity and shouts aloud the secret of his life to the assembled guests, all are shocked by the disclosure. Sementick, fearing the consequences, takes a secret farewell of Sonia's portrait in the morning, before resuming his wanderings. Olga sees him praying before her mother's portrait. A great understanding comes to her.

Sementick, on the point of starting from the palace, is called back by the master. He is offered pardon if he will recall his terrible confession. Sementick looks at Olga—her eyes plead with him. He perjures himself. As he turns to leave Olga holds out her arms and bestows upon him a daughter's kiss.

FAMOUS PLAYERS.

THE BRUTE (Four Parts).—"The Brute" is a self-made man, wrapped up in his work, but loving his pretty and delicate wife, and his little son, Bobbie, with all the ardor of his great nature. He has no time to cultivate the niceties of life, and his rugged exterior and lack of the social graces often annoy his wife, who loves luxury and secretly covets the wealth and position her hard-working husband is unable to give her. One day an old suitor, now rich, crosses her path, and renews his former advances, in spite of the fact that her husband is his best friend and utterly unsuspicious of the state of affairs. Influenced by the refinement of bearing and the delicate attention of her adorer, she half promises that she will elope with him. He hurries West to dispose of his mine holdings so that he may be free to take his friend's wife to Europe. While in Denver he is stricken with appendicitis and dies after willing his entire fortune to the woman. The wife is now crushed with remorse, and realizes, even in her grief, that fear of her husband's discovery of her half-premeditated guilt is greater than her sorrow for her dead admirer; and with this fact also comes the realization that she loves her husband more than she ever did any other man. How she accepts the fortune bequeathed her, how the unsuspecting husband finally discovers the truth, exerts his supremacy, and eventually conquers and forgives her is vividly portrayed in the further development and finale of this excitingly realistic drama.

APEX.

A WARDEN'S CRIME (Four Parts).—John Halling, a prison warden, is charged with crime against the State. The counsel for the defense asks the judge to let the accused tell his own story. The court scene fades away, and we see John Halling kneeling beside his little girl, who is seriously ill, and this is how he tells his story:

"I had no more money left out of my month's salary to buy medicine for my little girl, but my friend and neighbor, Engine Driver Bueller, gave me one dollar out of a dollar and fifty cents, which was all he had. To my dismay the chemist informed me that the medicine was one dollar and fifty cents, and I only had one dollar, but Bueller cheerfully gave me his last cent, and I vowed that I would one day repay his great kindness."

The judge then asks for convict Bueller to be brought into the court, and he is asked to tell his story, after the time when he gave Halling his last cent. The court scene again dies away, and Bueller tells his story:

"I gave Halling the last cent I had, and then I went on duty. On my official instructions I was told to pull up at the Junction, where the single line commences and to wait the passing of an express. The thought of my neighbor's sick child was in my mind, and I forgot my instructions and dashed headlong into the express. By a miracle I escaped practically unhurt. For three days and nights I wandered about half dazed, but at last I gave myself up. I was sentenced to imprisonment for life, but owing to my good conduct my sentence has been reduced, and I am to be released to-morrow."

Here we see Bueller placed under the charge of John Halling, the warden. One day Halling's daughter inorms him that Mrs. Bueller is seriously ill, and when he goes to see her, she cries pitifully for her husband, and the warden tells the convict that his wife is dying.

Bueller, mad with anguish, begs the warden to secretly set him free for a few hours to see his wife. The convict reminds him of his promise when he gave him his last cent to buy the medicine for his sick child. At last the warden consents, and the men change clothes. The warden tells the convict to be sure to return before 9 o'clock before the final inspection or it would mean ruination for the warden.

The convict dashes off and spends with his wife the last few minutes before she dies. Stunned by the terrible shock he falls across his wife's bed, and when he looks up he finds that it is ten minutes to nine, and it would take him twenty minutes to get back to the prison. He tears madly along the road, over the level crossing, and escapes death by a miracle from a passing express, and when he arrives in the prison cell, the guard of inspection is already there, and John Halling says, "You are one minute too late!"

The court scene now comes into prominence again, and the jury retires to consider their verdict. The foreman enters the court, and announces the prisoner "Not Guilty."

IN THE HANDS OF THE LONDON CROOKS (Five Parts).—Frank Linley, a student, is liked by Captain Bland, unaware that the captain is a well-known crook. At the Cactus Boxing Club, Bland, by bribing Bermondsey Bill to lose a big fight, is enabled to fleece Frank of a large sum of money. Later, Bland introduces Frank to Delilah, an adventuress, who suggests a visit to a roulette club. Frank again loses money to Bland. Soon the club is raided and Frank, in company with the others, is taken to the police station, outside of which a photograph is taken by a press photographer.

Next morning Hilda, Frank's sister, learns of the news, and tells Sir James, her father, who, thinking his son in bad hands, goes to town himself to see how matters stand. Frank is in his rooms with Delilah and as his father arrives he pushes the woman behind the curtain and goes to welcome Sir James. Sir James hears of his son's debts, reads him a lecture, then gives him a check with a few more words of advice and then departs, Frank seeing him to the door. Left alone in the room, Delilah reappears and looking about sees the check book left behind by Sir James. She secrets it about her person as Frank re-enters, accompanied by Captain Bland. Frank pays over his father's check to Bland, in payment of the L. O. U.'s. Frank leaves the room. Left alone with the Captain, Delliah shows him Sir James' check book. The latter has an idea. Departing, he takes the blank checks and leaves Delilah to wait for Frank.

At a low quarter of the town Bland calls upon Nobby, a forger, and bribes him to fill in the blank checks, using Frank's check. He disguises himself as a messenger, goes to the bank and successfully cashes the forged checks. Next day Frank goes home to attend his sister's birthday party, and sees Sir James present her with a foal from his famous mare. The foal is named "Sunflower," and is given to Harry Norman, a trainer, who loves Hilda. The party is held on the lawn. There Sir James is informed that representatives of the bank wish to see him.

They inform Sir James that checks, supposed to have been endorsed by Frank, have drained his account almost dry. Frank is sent for and though he protests his innocence, is ordered from the house. To save the honor of his name, Sir James admits the liability, but the shock results in heart failure. Back in his rooms at Chelsea, Frank, while searching for the check book, is visited by Bland and Delilah, who laugh at his misfortune. He orders them from his rooms. Then Frank receives a telegram stating that his father is dead. Half frantic by the course of events, the boy is about to shoot himself when his hand is stayed by the sound of martial music, and, looking from his window, he sees a company of guards marching past and determines to join them. Bland attends the sale of Sir James's effects and attempts to purchase the foal "Sunflower," but Norman soon proves that the foal is the property of Hilda.

Two years pass. The forger, being hard up, makes use of the old check book still in his possession. He visits Bland, who is spending his time with Fifi, a dancer, which whom he is fascinated, and attempts to blackmail the captain on the strength of the check book. Bland refuses to be blackmailed and ejects Nobby from his house. Meeting Delilah in Kensington, Nobby tels her that Bland is false to her. The woman, enraged, buys the check book from Nobby to aid her in her revenge.

Meantime, Bland is betting against Hilda's horse, "Sunflower," entered for the 20,000-pound race at Royal Ascot. He takes up his quarters near where the horse is being trained. He watches the trials and fears that unless he can prevent "Sunflower" from running he will be ruined. With an accomplice he schemes to hough the horse. At this time Dick, after honorably earning a commission on the frontier, returns to England to visit his sister. He is seen at the station by Delilah, who follows him to Norman's training quarters, where Hilda is staying with her fiance's mother. There she tries to frustrate Bland's attempt on "Sunflower," but is shot and mortally injured. The miscreant escapes and Delilah is taken to Norman's house, where she confesses all, and tels how Sir James was ruined, thus clearing Frank. Then she dies. The day of the great race dawns, and Hilda promises to marry Norman if her horse wins. Before the race, Bland makes a last attempt to prevent "Sunflower" from running. Inviting the jockey to a drink, he succeeds in drugging him. The latter, a few minutes before the race, is discovered by Hilda, Norman and Frank. Frank volunteers to ride.

In the paddock, watching the horses parade to the post, Bland is surprised to see "Sunflower" looking in fine shape with Frank up. The race is on. "Sunflower" rushes to the front and stays there, so Frank wins a race for his sister, and a bride for Harry Norman.

After the jockey has recovered, he tells of his being drugged; he sees Bland standing alone—ruined—and points him out. Frank rushes forward and gives the author of all his troubles a thrashing and finally hands him over to the police for the murder of Delilah.

HIS HIGHNESS, THE PRINCE (Three Parts).—Prince Heinrich and Herbert Prince, a journalist, are very similar in build and facial resemblance, although neither is aware of the fact. Therein lies the secret of the memorable day the journalist enjoyed. Prince Heinrich, bored over billiards in the officer's quarters of his regiment, discards the game to take a brief nap, the journalist was involuntarily (at first) feted in his stead. Herbert has been granted leave of absence, and, before departing from his duties, persuades his friend, Bob Garrick, to accompany him. While Bob is busy packing. Herbert shaves off his moustache. It is then that the resemblance to Prince Heinrich is most marked, particularly as both Prince and journalist affect monocles. But neither Herbert nor Bob is aware of the resemblance and do not reckon when enroute for the distant city of Waldeck that they are marked out for the distinction that awaits them.

The solitary passenger who shares their compartment, a tubby smiling little individual, is the first to mistake the identity of the journalist. Seeing a photograph of Prince Heinrich in his newspaper, he promptly concludes that he is fortunate in the prince traveling incognito. Elated over his discovery he notifies all passengers and soon the journalist and his companion are the object of many courtly bows and courtesies.

For some time they both imagine they are surrounded by lunatics, but when Herbert is addressed as the Prince, it at length brings enlightenment to their understanding. Councillor Hall, their little associate, wires the mayor of Waldeck of the impending arrival of the Prince and counselling an official reception. When Herbert and Bob observe all the civic dignitaries awaiting them, and entering into the spirit of the jest of mistaken identity, they decide to go through with what has been thrust upon them without speaking.

Herbert acts as though of manner born—his majestic mien and urbane courtliness impressing all with whom he comes in contact, albeit Bob, for the nonce acting as his valet, has occasionally to resort to strong measures to keep the Prince up to concert pitch in maintaining his august position. From the railway station, Herbert and Bob proceed with ceremony to the hotel, where apartments have been arranged for their reception and where everyone, from proprietor to call boy, shows the greatest deference to the pair. They manage to retain their gravity till they reach their apartments and then they can contain themselves no longer. Their merriment is suddenly checked. A deputation headed by the be-whiskered mayor enters upon them, soliciting the honor of their presence at a banquet. The pair accept and have a gay time, although Bob's enjoyment is tinged with a little bitterness in that he has to act throughout as the Prince's private valet.

Herbert shows strong partiality for the corpulent mayor's winsome little daughter, and while the company is enjoying the wine and walnuts, he makes the most of his opportunities to improve his acquaintance. He is caught in the act of a kiss and as a compensation to the mayor for his injured feelings, promises to confer upon him and his companion, Councillor Hall, the coveted order of the Golden Eagle.

While their enjoyment is at its height the real Prince Heinrich reads in his paper of his own visit to a nearby town and the cordial reception given by its inhabitants. At a loss to understand what it means, he telephones to the hotel Waldeck and is told the Prince is still there. Eager to learn the facts of the case, he summons his aide-de-camp and they speed to Waldeck. Upon reaching the hotel he finds the room to which the Prince has returned and proceeds thither. The mayor and Councillor Hall are wakened from their maudlin state at the sight of Prince Heinrich and at a respectable distance follow in his wake, expecting dire consequences will be the outcome of the masquerade on the part of the men they feted. Herbert, too, is aghast at the appearance of the Prince, but when he explains that he entered involuntarily into them through being mistaken for the Prince—with the view of getting excellent copy for his paper—the Prince joins in Herbert's laughter to the discomfiture of the two officials. To save the dignity of the civic pair, the Prince endorses the gift of the order of the Golden Eagle, and after saying a kindly word to the mayor's daughter (whose faith in Herbert is still unshattered) he also confers a decoration upon Herbert, conditionally he says with a laugh, that Herbert, in future, wear a moustache.

COUNT ZARKA (Three parts).—Count Zarka is an unscrupulous nobleman, who entertains a strange hatred toward Prince Roel. Owing to the latter's activity in state affairs, Count Von Bernstein, a foreign ambassador, is anxious to put him out of the way, and Zarka is promised a large sum of money to accomplish this. Zarka learns of his message the prince sends to Phillipa, in which he tells her that if she loves him she is to wear the red roses sent, and if not she is to wear the spray of white roses. Phillipa is much disturbed after she has worn the white roses and finds that she is overlooked by the prince. Zarka takes into his confidence three thugs and agrees with them to capture the prince, when he is least suspecting. This is accomplished when the prince goes out into the grounds to brood over his disappointment. Zarka, with the aid of his minions, overpowers and imprisons the prince in the former's castle.

Zarka collects the money from Bernstein for the capture of the prince. Zarka's actions arouse suspicion, and it is revealed that the prince has been the victim of a plot.

Galabin, Phillipa's brother, rents a house, which overlooks Zarka's castle. One day with a spy glass he recognizes the prince peering through a grated window. With a friend Galabin investigates. Seen by Zarka he escorts them into the castle, where Zarka seeks to poison him by dropping the contents of his hollow ring into the wine which is brought to them. He traps them later in the armory, from which they are subsequently released by a servant vindictive because of Zarka's harsh treatment.

Phillipa, seeking her brother, accidentally meets Royda. The latter suspects Phillipa of being her rival and inveigles her into Zarka's castle. Going into the armory she snatches a rapier. A duel ensues in which Royda is slightly wounded. Royda is then in a more reasonable frame of mind and Phillipa tells her that she hates, not loves Zarka. Royda recognizing the count's perfidy, agrees to help Phillipa. They succeed in releasing the prince. At that moment Zarka comes upon them with his hirelings. Zarka pulls a lever and the center walk of the passage caves in leaving only a narrow ledge on either side. Royda and Galabin are precipitated into a dungeon into which a deluge of water pours. The prince struggles with Zarka on the narrow ledge, the count falling into the pit for which he had destined the others. Another battle ensues here between Galabin and the count. The prince and his party, having vanquished their foes above, soon release Royda and Galabin from their jeopardy, leaving the count to his fate.

IN THE HOUR OF TEMPTATION (Three Parts).—Jane Bernard, a woman whose husband has divorced her through no fault of her own, leaves her home for the seashore in order to forget the past. She meets Robert White, a wealthy young man, who can judge by the power of a woman. They are mutually attracted to each other, and agree to meet again at the seaside resort. Upon her arrival at the fashionable hotel, Jane unwittingly attracts the attention of David Lennox, a man of means, who passes most of his time with the young women who throng the promenade. Lennox is puzzled in his endeavor to recollect where he has seen Jane in the past, and finally solves the mystery when he finds her picture in an illustrated weekly, which printed the news of her divorce and hints that she is leading the life of an adventuress. After being repulsed in his attentions, Lennox informs the hotel management that Jane is not a desirable guest, and in consequence she is requested to settle her account on the following day. In order to meet this obligation she is obliged to sell her jewels, and, being aware of this, Lennox again presses his attentions upon her.

In the meantime, Mr. White has arrived at the hotel and is welcomed by Jane. While seated in the dining room of the hotel brooding over the future she picks up a diamond brooch from the floor, and in her financial extremity disposes of this in order to realize money. Then, swayed by an impulse which she cannot resist, she visits the gambling casino with other guests, and is winning heavily when White appears upon the scene and dissuades her from tempting Dame Fortune any further. On the following morning she attempts to redeem the jewels which she had sold, and learns that they have been sent to the auction room. Upon her arrival there she finds that no one only bidder against her is Lennox, and when she has exhausted the last of her money in bidding, a voice on the outskirts of the crowd proceeds to outbid Lennox. Robert White is the successful bidder, and restores the jewels to Jane, who at once gives back to its rightful owner the diamond brooch which had been dropped on the floor of the dining room and picked up by Jane. The ending of the photoplay is a happy one, but there are many interesting situations before the climax.

BLACHE FEATURES.

THE WOMAN OF MYSTERY (Four Parts—May 10).—Norma, a dancer, receives many presents from admirers. Among them she finds a peculiar looking box, out of which spring several poisonous snakes. Nelson, a detective, is called upon to solve the mystery. On the box he finds a peculiar trademark, which he seizes as a clue. At his home he finds the same odd mark on an ash tray bought by his mother in a Hindu curio shop, and he learns that the box containing the snakes was purchased by a Hindu woman.

Calling upon the woman, he is surprised to find himself in the home of a Priestess of Buddhaism. The Priestess tries to fascinate him with her beauty and, not succeeding, drops a powder into an incense burner, the fumes of which begin to throw him into a stupor. He fights his way to a window, blows a police whistle, and is attacked by three giant Hindu attendants. But the police arrive in time to save his life, and the Priestess is arrested and thrown into prison.

The dancer, Norma, is attracted to Nelson by his bravery, and they become friends. Meanwhile, the Priestess succeeds in working a psychic miracle in which she goes into a trance and, while her earthly form remains in prison, her soul is freed and appears before the horrified detective in his study. His nature is changed immediately by the Priestess's mystic influence, and his face becomes the face of a hardened criminal. Changing his clothes for one of the rough suits used in his detective work, he visits a den of crooks and aids them to rob a bank, the plans of which he has been entrusted with in his professional capacity. Later he is called to the bank to investigate the robbery and, not knowing of his dual personality, makes every effort to find the man who had committed the crime. He finds his own scarf among the scattered papers taken from the safe. A threatening letter, which he receives from the followers of the Priestess, is seen by Norma, who is so greatly concerned for his safety that when he asks her to marry him, she quickly consents to an engagement, so that she can do all in her power to protect him. His old mother is puzzled by seeing him leave his own house through the window, when he is again visited by the spirit of the Priestess and influenced to aid the same band of crooks in the robbery of his own home. When his real personality returns, he finds himself in his own office, where he has been discovered by his mother, sleeping in a chair, dressed in his old clothes.

Upon discovery that his house has been robbed, he calls the chief of police and is seen by the companions of his criminal personality, who think that he is acting as an agent of the authorities merely to place them in the hands of the law. When he is again transformed by the spirit of the Priestess and returns to the thieves' den, they regard him as a spy and plan to do away with him, leaving him bound and gagged in the care of an old hag, while they celebrate his capture.

But Norma, who, with his mother has been watching him, follows him to the den of thieves and, overpowering the old woman, helps him to escape. Meanwhile, the followers of the Priestess succeed in rescuing her from her prison cell and are speeding away in an automobile when Nelson, who still retains his criminal personality, asks them to assist him to escape from the crooks, who are closely upon his trail. Thus, he unwittingly places himself and his fiancee in the power of the Priestess, who makes them prisoners in a temple of Buddha.

Norma faints, and when Nelson's real personality returns, he finds himself bound hand and foot in the temple. Norma quickly explains the situation to him and, by burning the ropes that bind his wrists with the fire in the incense burner, he frees his companion and makes his way to the roof by the aid of a heavy chain from which a large oriental lamp is swung from the ceiling. He succeeds in helping Norma to the roof by the same method and they reach the ground with the aid of a large tree.

The chief of police, who has been summoned by Nelson's mother, overtakes the crooks and arrests them after a desperate struggle. But the Priestess cheats the majesty of the law by the aid of a poisoned ring with which she does away with herself during one of her wild fanatical dances. Her death marks the end of her influence over Nelson, and he at last feels free to marry Norma.

THE CALVARY OF A MOTHER (Three Parts).—It is December, 1870. Paris, in the throes of a siege, struggles with the energy of despair. Father Pommier, a painter, and his two sons, Justin and Jean, worthy mechanics, have given up work and taken to arms. It is a rigorous winter, and the discontent of all the improvised soldiers makes itself felt. The valiant fellows weary of inaction, and the announcement that a sortie is about to be made, is enthusiastically received. At night, Pommier and his sons return home and the sufferings of the day the dead—are forgotten. Now and then the vibrations of a cannon shot shake the house.

Suddenly the quiet of the fireside is rudely disturbed by a comrade with the news that Justin's batallion is chosen to effect a night sortie. The days glide away and at the end of January, 1871, the besieged line up and take their turn at the butcher's and baker's. Meanwhile, Mother Pommier goes in search of her son Justin. She questions his comrades, the National Guards, and learns that her son is dead. Meanwhile, there is revolt in the air. Pommier and his son join in the revolt and the mother knows she has another sacrifice to undergo.

It is May 24, 1871. The Versailles soldiers enter Paris, and a fearful fratricidal struggle ensues. The batteries of the regular army hurl a hurricane of iron against the famished city. The people are forced to shelter in cellars and underground passages. Troops advance, patrols search the houses and every man carrying a gun or wearing the uniform of the Federates, or whose hands are stained with gunpowder, is arrested and mercilessly shot. Father Pommier has managed to escape the repression, but he has lost sight of his son, Jean. At the Pere-Lachaise Cemetery the tombs are pillaged. There are corpses everywhere. Thither, braving all danger, comes Mother Pommier, in search of her son. She is taken for a petroleuse and is on the point of being shot, when an officer intervenes and she is spared. That same night Paris is ablaze.

Ten years later. Since the war and the death of his sons, Father Pommier has taken to drink. His two daughters, Celine and Cecile, are apprenticed to a dressmaker, but the precocious Celine has not escaped the morbid fascination of the street. She resents her mother's chidings, and runs away to join her lover, a pale-faced ruffian. His sons dead, his daughter gone, the wretched father tries to drown his grief and misery in drink. He imagines himself pursued by mad dogs. His weakened brain finally gives way after a short period of sanity and his wife and daughter find him in the padded cell at St. Anne, where he expires in agony.

Worn with grief and privation, the poor mother gradually wastes away. The devoted and loving care of her daughter, Cecile, is her sole comfort. One morning a lamentable creature knocks at the door. Cecile opens, and there, in rags, and starving, stands Celine. The prodigal is welcomed, but cannot adapt herself to the peaceful home. She longs for excitement. One evening, Cecile returns home alone. Her sister has again run away. The mother falls prostrate when she realizes the truth. It is the end—she passes away, leaving Cecile alone to battle with the world.

Mr. Film Manufacturer, You Have At Last Come Into Your Own!

THE film manufacturing industry has developed so fast that it has outgrown its theoretical windpipe. It has been choking for air, for the air of publicity, for the big, fresh, quick, perpetual, brilliant, fast and furious publicity which the tremendous development of this industry absolutely demands.

The thing that will at once relieve this asthmatic condition is bound to be the biggest thing of the day in the motion-picture field. And here it is, the most important development in all your history; the biggest, clearest, busiest, publicity "megaphone" which the motion-picture industry ever could hope to possess,

The MOVIE PICTORIAL

The Up-to-the-Minute Illustrated Weekly

It is the biggest thing for you, Mr. Film Manufacturer, because it will enable you to gaze into the eyes of twenty million people, every one of them a motion-picture lover, waiting eagerly for your story, told as you never could tell it before. It enables you to talk directly to the millions who support you. No more relayed, stunted publicity. It will now be direct, wide open, generous, resultful. It is of reaching the masses, without huge waste in circulation. It is the biggest thing, because it will portray your product in the nearest possible reproduction of the original in a mill-race of pictures reproduced by the best workmanship, displayed with ingenious effect, with their beauty and full expression unimpaired. It will do this every week, an interval neither too short nor too long, and representing 100 per cent efficiency in high-powered, trip-hammer publicity.

It will be the only magazine of its kind in existence. It is to be distinctive—new in conception, new in design, new in size, Forceful in Presentation, Fearless in Representation.

It is going to be just what its name indicates—a pictorial magazine with a parade of pictures crowded in from cover to cover, a photographic and illustrated weekly review of the most interesting events in the Motion-Picture Industry.

The New Publicity Battering Ram

It is to satisfy the seven-day hunger of those who want the "reel-food" quick, early and often. Crisp pickings are to be served them every Saturday morning, contained in big pages, rich in material, rich in effect, rich in illustration, all bound in brilliant, striking covers. On Saturday, May 9th, the first edition of 100,000 copies will be selling all over the United States. One Hundred Thousand people will be eagerly exchanging their dimes for this weekly, because this "One Hundred Thousand and More" appetite will be whetted by a sharp, biting, advertising campaign of national announcement. Husbands, wives, sons and daughters, all will want to read "The Movie Pictorial." This means it will be read by over 200,000 live, red-blooded moving-picture-loving men, women and children.

The First Motion-Picture Medium To Offer You Consumer Publicity On a Guaranteed Circulation Basis

"The Movie Pictorial" will start right out with a circulation of 100,000 copies. This circulation will be guaranteed, its distribution will be national. Advertising rates are based on the guaranteed minimum of one hundred thousand, 50 cents per line per hundred thousand. We absolutely guarantee One Hundred Thousand circulation or refund advertisers two dollars per page (or pro rata for less than a page) per thousand copies that do not remain in circulation.

Begins with 100,000 Guaranteed "No-waste" Circulation, Weekly

"The Movie Pictorial' is to be a magazine full of thrill and ginger, and of the highest mechanical excellence. The pages are 11 x 14 inches, the size most inviting to the eye of the reader and most adaptable to forceful display by the advertiser. Its magazine quality, its fine engravings on high-grade paper, its highly colored covers, its peppery storiettes, earliest news of the latest releases, photoplay stories, the live news of the screen, fresh and unstalled by lapse of time, and its pages brimful of illustrations will make it a magazine that all moving-picture patrons will revel in.

With this formidable initial circulation and its tremendous strength of appeal, "The Movie Pictorial" is bound to exert a general publicity influence of great power. Published by "The Movie Pictorial," 8 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

WHY LOSE THE VALUE OF THE LATEST FILMS!

Your films may be the latest and best, but unless your lens equipment is right their value is utterly lost.

Bausch and Lomb Projection Lenses tell a film story upon the screen with unerring accuracy, down to the merest detail.

Bausch & Lomb objectives and condensers help increase your box-office receipts by giving your house a reputation for the best in the "movies."

Edison and Nicholas Power Machines are regularly equipped with our lenses, and they are procurable through any film exchange.

You will find our interesting free booklet well worth writing for. It is of value to owners and operators.

Film Quality

Quality in the film—quality from a technical photographic standpoint is as important to the Exhibitor as is interest in the story that the film tells.

There's one film that's recognized the world over as the standard of quality—that is always used by those whose effort it is to give the Exhibitors the very best goods and the very best service—Eastman film.

And it is identifiable. Look for "Eastman" on the perforated margin.

MAKE 'EM YOURSELF SLIDES
Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and anyone can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact, they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.
For the sum of $3.50 we will send, by parcel post, prepaid and insured, the following:
24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address:

J. H. GENTER Co., Newburgh, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

We wish to state that the curtain we purchased from you is fine. Don't see how we could run a picture show without one. The MIRROROIDE Curtain is the best one yet. If managers of picture shows only knew what a MIRROROIDE Curtain would do for them, they surely would install one. My patrons say, "You have the finest pictures, so bright and clear—just like seeing oneself in a mirror!"

Wishing you all kinds of success, we beg to remain,

Yours respectfully,

G. W. FREEMYER.

THE MILLION DOLLAR MYSTERY

"Will Crowd the Theatres to Capacity"

Read What the Author, Harold MacGrath, Says:

"I have interviewed every person in the cast for the 'Million Dollar Mystery' and I congratulate the Thanhouser Film Corporation and Mr. Hite for having brought together such an array of talent.

"The 'Million Dollar Mystery' has the tremendous incentive the 'Adventures of Kathlyn' lacked—the capital prize of $10,000. We know how successful the Kathlyn series is, and it is only reasonable to expect that this great photo-drama, backed by the big prize offer, will crowd the theatres to their capacity."

(Signed) HAROLD MACGRATH.

Exhibitors: Get Full Information from Syndicate Film Corporation

FOR the convenience of exhibitors, the "Million Dollar Mystery" will be released through the Syndicate Film Corporation—operating independently. Offices are now established in every Mutual Film Exchange in the United States and Canada. Syndicate Film Corporation representatives will be in charge. Exhibitors may obtain these films regardless of the program they may be using.

The "Million Dollar Mystery" will be released in weekly installments—two reels each week, starting June 22. The story will appear in the Chicago Tribune and 200 other leading newspapers, starting June 28. Don't miss this opportunity to pack your houses during the summer months. Act NOW! Robert, a bank clerk, is entrusted with a large sum of money. He is followed by a fellow clerk, robbed and thrown into a sewer to cover all trace of the crime. After many days of wandering in the underworld, he finds an opening and staggers out an insane man and is taken to an asylum, where he remains many months. His former fiancee, who has become a celebrated prima-donna, comes to sing to the inmates her famous opera "Mignon," and her voice restores to Robert his lost memory. Through a cigarette case which she had given Robert she locates the criminal, who is her most ardent suitor, and he receives his just rewards.

THE "OLD BULL"

Seems to be the ONE GREAT FEATURE of the Feature Film Business these days, and, judging from the numerous places in which this very much overworked quadruped bobs up serenely, he is in great and constant demand in the marketing and selling of many (so-called) Features.

THERE---IS---NO---BULL---IN---THE---SAWYER---ORGANIZATION

President Sawyer, declaring himself at the start that this gentleman bovine be tightly lashed to a good strong post outside this office—and kept there. When last seen he was the center of an admiring "coterie" of "Feature Film gentry" who have made a profound study of his general usage.

We don't claim our Features to be the Best Features in the World*—That's "Bull."
We don't tell you our Features are Smashing all Box Office Records*—That's more "Bull."
We don't tell you every foot of our film has a punch and a couple of kicks, and that you must have our Features to do business*—That's a whole herd of "Bulls."

When we talk to you, Mr. State Rights Man, we talk to you straight from the shoulder—man fashion—and we don't plaster our statements with a myriad of brainless adjectives. While "Magnificent," "Wonderful," "Lavish," "Finest," "Marvelous," etc., would no doubt legitimately express the quality of our output, we are satisfied to tell you, and back it up with facts, that SAWYER FEATURES ARE GOOD FEATURES, AND THE PRICE IS LESS THAN EVER BEFORE OFFERED ANYWHERE. For the first time in your life

"SEA WOLF"

"THE Sea Wolf" opened on Sunday, May 3rd, at the new million-dollar Strand Theater, New York City. It broke all records at that house for attendance.

"The Sea Wolf" played to more people in one day in this theater than any other motion picture ever shown.

"The Sea Wolf" was also the opening feature at the beautiful new Stanley Theater in Philadelphia, and the new Strand Theater in Newark, N. J.

This same great picture is also booked to open many new theaters in other parts of the country within the next few weeks.

For future release:

THE TREASURE SHIP

Featuring Alice Hollister in a Two-Part Romance of the Sea.

Unscrupulous John Harley stops at nothing in his effort to get hold of the model of the Golden Cloud, the secret of which he alone knows. But he is foiled, and the incidents which bring this about make this a story of rare interest.

Released Monday, May 25th. Eye-catching 1, 3 and 6-Sheets for this Feature.

THE BOTTLED SPIDER

A Two-Part Western Drama Featuring Princess Mona Darkfeather.

The "Spider's" wild dash into the mountains; Anna's awful predicament while her captor and husband fight on the narrow mountain ledge—these are but two of the incidents which make this one of the most exciting dramas ever filmed.

Released Wednesday, May 27th. Superb 1, 3 and 6-Sheets for this Headliner.

AND THE DANCE WENT ON

A Railroad Comedy.

Fate's conspiracy to keep Jim and Tom from attending the railroadmen's ball will make your patrons roar with glee.

Released Friday, May 29th.

THE COMING OF LONE WOLF

A Message from P. A. Powers

Good news! Great news! Wonderful news!

We have it—another spectacular six-part Warner's Feature to release shortly—and I think so well of it that I want to personally recommend it to you.

Beyond the shadow of a doubt, it is the most magnificent film production I have ever seen, and that's stating it broadly. But mere words will never be able to describe its impressive battle scenes, its perfect photography, its superior presentation by a cast of world-renowned stars; it must be seen by you to be rightfully appreciated.

We are going to release it in two parts of three reels each, but it can be shown in its entirety in one day.

Need I tell you that our lobby display for this supreme Warner's Feature is going to be a revelation?

Let me urge upon you the necessity of becoming a service customer now; only by doing so can you hope to reap the benefit of these extra good features that we are continually buying.

Next week our advertisement will give you complete information about this record breaking, six-reel attraction.

Watch for it.

Sincerely yours,

P. A. Powers.

Five Kalem Masterpiece Films

It is a risky proposition to disappoint the patrons who come to your theatre with expectations of seeing good features. There is one SURE way of eliminating this risk—see that your headline attraction is one of these five Kalem Masterpiece Films. There is no surer way of building up a permanent clientele than by leading the people in your locality to expect Kalem Features REGULARLY.

FRANCIS MARION

"The Swamp Fox"

IN THREE PARTS

A more absorbing story of the Revolutionary War has never been shown. Marion's clashes with the British, his amazing dash into their camp to rescue Gates, will keep observers a'quiver with excitement. Guy Coombs and Marguerite Courtot in leading roles.

The Death Sign at High Noon

IN THREE PARTS

The struggle between the traders and Chief Painted Horse's Indians represents the utmost in realism. William H. West, Jane Wolfe and Marin Sais among the stars who appear in this Indian classic.

The Other Half of the Note

IN THREE PARTS

Cole, Secret Service detective, learns that criminals have smuggled a fortune in jewels into the country. How he captures them after a smashing fight is shown in a wonderful climax.

A Celebrated Case

IN FOUR PARTS

The Battle of Fontenoy is one of the great incidents in this superb adaptation of the famous old French drama. Peerless Alice Joyce, Marguerite Courtot and Guy Coombs are among the Kalem stars who appear.

COMING

Wolfe, or The Conquest of Quebec

A spectacular Five-Part story of the conflict between England and France that is absolutely authentic. Produced in original locations in Canada. Battles on the Plains of Abraham and Montmorenci Falls, and the bombardment of Quebec, a few of the many sensational incidents.

Facts and Comments

MANY exhibitors and no small portion of the theater-going public are prejudiced against foreign-made pictures not so much because the subject or its treatment is foreign, but because the titles are impossible. The delusion that titles in English can be made by amateur linguists in France or Germany or Italy or Scandinavia persists in the minds of many importers and producers of motion pictures. The delusion is fatal. As a matter of fact the titles that are made abroad either offend or mystify, while the proper mission of all good titles is to please and elucidate. We have in some rare instances seen titles made in England which were on the whole satisfactory to audiences in this country. Such cases, however, are exceptional as in most instances, even titles made in England have to be edited to meet the demands and expectations of American audiences. Some of the titles that we still see on films of European origin are enough to make one's hair stand on end. The spelling is bad, the grammar worse and the diction, as far as there is any diction at all, is stilted and unnatural. We know of more than one high-class feature which is marred by these Ollendorfian titles. Theoretically everybody recognizes the importance of titles and everybody admits that nothing but the best will do, but practically we are in too much of a hurry to get the pictures out into the market and we slight the very task which skillfully performed might make the foreign feature more acceptable.

WE are glad to observe that exhibitors all over the country are announcing their opposition to censorship of all kinds. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has in one of its recent issues pointed out the unheard-of power which the censor or his political creator must needs exercise over the industry. It is in his power to make or break a producer. Censorship as a political evil is still in its very infancy, but it will not be long before the "tip" will be passed along that the producer or exchange man who "steps up to the captain's office and settles" is to be given the preference at all times and in all cases. If there is anywhere in our country a better and more effective machinery for the collection of blackmail, euphemistically called "graft," than a censorship law it has not become known. All the insidious implements of political blackmail will soon be at work in each and every state which legalizes censorship of motion pictures.

Those of us who remember the revelations of the Lexow committee which showed such a fearful trail of police blackmail will have no trouble in picturing to themselves the possibilities of censorship blackmail. There will be "wardmen" and collectors, and "protection" will be sold with the same refinement of art which made our tsars of the Tenderloin infamous. The fact that the courts have in one instance sustained the constitutionality of censorship is no argument whatever in favor of censorship. On the contrary, knowing now that the courts will uphold the enactment of such laws, we must bend all our energies to either repeal them or to prevent their enactment in the free states. Censorship bestows a degree of power which we would hesitate to entrust to the most enlightened statesmen in our public life. To entrust such power to politicians with little visible means of support is to bring ruin upon the art and industry of producing motion pictures.

IN another part of this week's issue of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD we print a full account of the hearing on the Smith-Hughes National Censorship Bill before the House Committee on Education. It is surely instructive, but the most significant part of it all lies in the fact that none of the producers of motion pictures was represented at the hearing. Prominent Washington exhibitors attended the hearing, because of an intelligent interest in a question which affects the entire industry. Frankly we cannot understand this apathy of the gentlemen who have the biggest investment at stake. Censorship of the type proposed by the Smith-Hughes Bill would hit the producers first. They would have to send their films to Washington before they could distribute them among their own exchanges. A tax is imposed for the examination of each film or any duplicates. This would mean a heavy burden, not to speak of the inconvenience and the loss of time. In striking contrast to the indifference of the producers is the ceaseless well-directed activity of the advocates of the bill, who have undoubtedly made quite a deep impression on the members of the committee. It is more than possible that the bill will be reported favorably to the House before the end of the Sixty-third Congress. It is not, however, too late to make a determined fight against the bill even at this moment. If the motion picture interests let this bill become a law through continued indifference, they will have no one but themselves to blame for the consequences.

Half Gods

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

THERE was once a poet of lofty ideals who had a message to give which should enlighten mankind. Long he pondered that there would be no fault of judgment such as might lead to the promulgation of an error. With utmost care he wrote and corrected and wrote again, tormenting his brains for exact expressions to suit each significant line until the twelve-lined thing his creative mind had devised grew to be a structure of beauty. It was a diadem of verse, each thought a jewel, its setting purest gold.

The poem went wandering in the literary mart and the poet went hungering in a hall bedroom where the sun never shone. But he had sun in his heart, and he lived on mental pabulum, food for thought, while he wrote a masterpiece in twelve lines. At last a check came at space rates, so much a line, and sweetness fled from the poet's spirit. He bitterly cut his masterpiece to fragments and, from each word made a line, from each line a verse, and thereafter his stomach was filled and the gods laughed.

Once there was a director of temperament who saw in this new and God-given art a noble opportunity to give sight to sightless eyes, to give mind to the mindless, to bring a powerful influence to bear on benighted souls which should quicken them with the eternal joy of enlightenment. He built with infinite care his structures of beauty, revealing beauty that those who flocked to the silent theaters might wander beyond the gates of humdrum existence into fields of enchantment and romance, the while inhaling the pure air of a wholesome thought.

But there were merchants in the market place whose sordid eyes could see naught in creative imagination of today, could only determine values by what had formerly brought results, and they pestered the director of ideals until he submerged his talent and agreed that even the moon was only a clipped piece of silver. He devoted his time and his talents to transforming the creative efforts of classic authors to senseless visualization, and grew so bitter toward authors in general that, if he had had a chance, he would not have hesitated to edit the works of the Almighty. And the gods laughed.

There was once a publicity man who attempted to tell the truth, so it is said, but that was many years ago, and his nationality has not been discovered unto this day. Still there are publicity men of generous hearts outside of business. When they get away from newspaper advertisements, reading notices, boosts, criticisms, reviews, billboard posters, lithographs, display cards, and the utensils necessary to convince the public that what is not worth while really is worth while, the publicity men show a certain sweetness of disposition that must have been inherent to have endured so long.

Away from the shop—what fine chaps! In pursuit of their insidious calling all sense of righteousness vanishes in thin air. They attempt to deceive credulous buyers and unsuspecting critics with methods that are heartrending, become a compound of Ananias, Baron Munchausen and Michaevelli, regardless of consequences in the sweet by-and-by; and all for dross. Their verbal mechanism becomes so responsive to their trained consciences that they only falter and turn pale when they fear they have stumbled into telling the truth. The gods chuckle.

Then there are critics. Alas! No ignoble concessions to Mammon in their code, it is true, and if criticism is truly a record of one's own soul, an advanced form of autobiography, it would seem that the iron of bitter truth is in every critic's soul who dares be himself, but does he? Commiserate him when he must tell an interesting story about a mediocre production, for that is his daily mission. Credit him with initial honesty at least and with enough strength of character to assert himself for a while, but what becomes of him when he is finally ground between two stones of commercialism, the ad-seeking paper and the puff-seeking producer.

What is finally left of his individuality? Perhaps he settles down to a dismal grind of hack work and talks about fine photography and remarkable acting in order to square matters with what is left of his conscience, and at the same time escape critical mention of the play he is expected to review. At this sort of work all the juice of his original constitution is squeezed out of him. He becomes a "dried peach" of doubtful or merely reminiscent flavor. He may be ground down to a space-filling hack where he still retains his ability to say something, though in a state of innocuous desuetude to what he shall say. Or he may become a universal and unread booster, read only by the boosted, with an educated conscience capable of accurately balancing the review of a play with the advertising space taken by its producer. The gods shrug their shoulders.

How can one blame the much-photographed ones, the men, women, and children of the screen? They honestly cope with the roles assigned them, try to reveal what should be revealed, try to convey all there is to convey. They are as honest as a new critic before he has readjusted his sense of the fitness of things. They are willing and even anxious to surpass themselves, even to surpass all others in the matter of interpretation, a bright, happy and generous-hearted lot by nature and training.

Then comes the innocluation of green envy. Chance, favoritism or actual superiority of performance sends one of their number into dazzling prominence. HER picture is featured in all the magazines, or may even help to sell a patent medicine. Then do all other members of the company become afflicted. The kindly child of the screen becomes introspective, so self-centered that no other world than his puny one exists. He cannot think, write or talk of anything but his past performances, his former bright prospects, his present grievances, himself. He becomes an IT, with no sense of obligation to any living being, no realization that he is but a word, a phrase on the printed page of what is destined to become a language universal. The gods merely smile.

Pity the poor playwright. The pipe that lured him into the flowering fields of photodrama was certainly that which would have him tell the secrets of his own heart and mind rather than get at those of some other author. The greatest appeal he could make was one from his own soul to other souls, to give others the fruit of knowledge penetrated by his own mind in its own way, with all the spiritual ambition and imaginative stimulus he could summon.

Instead of realizing his own ideals, he has been called upon to lay aside that perfect type of art at the behest of the man in the market place in order to give a poor and incomplete imitation of what was ill-suited, if suited at all, to screen portrayal. Thus has he been forced to become dumb and sterile, or to shake off all trammels and paint old faces with the free hand of modern interpretation. Debasing what is fresh and strong in his creative talent to the revitalization of stage senility for the little that is in it! Oh miserable one!! Weep, ye gods, weep bitter tears!

Wizards of the Screen

By W. Stephen Bush.

PEOPLE interested in films, whether on the inside or on the outside, are pretty well agreed that the great progress of the last two years has, in no little measure, been due to the feature consisting of three or more parts. The fact that motion pictures today are paralleling the legitimate attractions on Broadway is due to the successful feature. Broadway in this respect is a prototype of the other great amusement lanes all over the country. Everywhere the motion picture is entering houses of big capacity heretofore devoted to the legitimate drama. We do not believe there is one man in the industry today who imagines that the old single reels with their dreary monotony and their time table regularity would ever have advanced the industry to the point at which it has now arrived.

Speaking of features, the experts on the inside as well as the great mass of motion picture patrons are fully aware of the fact that there is a sharp line of demarcation between a feature and a mere multiple reel. While every feature is a multiple reel, not every multiple reel is a feature. Slowly but surely we begin to distinguish between the old and the new schools in the art of feature production. The old school stands for the expansion of the single reel merely as a matter of increasing footage. They make their sausages longer and bigger, but they do not change the materials out of which sausages are made. Hence the most serious defect of the ancient single reel remains in the feature product of the old school, i. e., monotony. Entirely ignoring the progressive change in the tastes and demands of the public, the old school still lives in the days of 1908 and 1909. In those days it seemed impossible that a motion picture would ever be hissed off the screen—the public was grateful for every inch of traveling celluloid. We all know that today the hissing of a film and its compulsory taking off in response to an unmistakable demand of the public is by no means unheard of. The old school loves the conventional and hates innovations. It is lazily happy in the old grind. It may at times seek to vary its time-worn method by taking an occasional plunge into the ultra-sensational, oscillating between the cast-iron forms of the melodrama and the horrors of the freak drama.

In speaking of the new school it is well to note that the freak drama has had altogether too many followers. There has been an obvious overproduction of freak dramas, in which some of the more reputable producers have taken their share. There have been the yellow film dramas closely following the ideas of the yellow press, exploiting every morbid sensation dished out by the yellow sheets and other press agents of the underworld. In this malodorous field the new-comers and strangers to the industry have predominated, but they have had an occasional rival whose entrance into this sort of drama occasioned general pain and surprise. When we speak of the new school in the art of producing features we allude to neither of these undesirable varieties of films. These features present no school of art, but only a misguided form of enterprise.

The new school which we have in mind is the school that is aiming at improvements both in the purely dramatic end and in the technical end. The new school is developing a screen style, which emphatically differentiates it from both the old school and the speaking stage. The new school brings into artistic prominence the individuality of the screen. It studies the unique advantages of the screen and is making new discoveries every day. It explores with unceasing effort the possibilities of the camera and is amply rewarded when after a thousand experiments it adds some new power and some new beauty to the art of kinematography. This new school is dividing itself into two distinct and separate branches—the school of adaptation and the school of originality. The school of adaptation, having abundant materials and fine interpreters in the popular plays and the popular players of today and yesterday, is at the present time in the ascendant and we have every right to look to this school for scores upon scores of new successes. Popular plays and popular players in films may almost be said to hold the center of the film stage at this time. These popular plays and popular players have been exceedingly fortunate in their alliances with old film experts who were old-time wizards of the screen. They selected the filmable plays and avoided the unfilmable. Adaptations from novels and classic fiction generally were, as a rule, filmed by experts and therefore lost nothing in the process of filming. It is plain, however, that the adaptation must after a while pass its meridian and decline. It will always be with us, but it will cease to be the dominant factor which it is today.

What will take its place? What film productions may justly claim to be the promise of the future? The answer is plain enough to all who care to watch. The future belongs to the film play which is strictly original and which is designed firstly and exclusively for presentation on the screen. The hardest workers and the closest students agree that the possibilities of the screen are far indeed from being exhausted. New lines, new departures, new discoveries are revealing themselves constantly. The screen affords limitless opportunities to the realist, to the student of emotions, to the dramatist, to the photographer and the camera man and above all, to the student of condensation. By virtue of its direct and vivid appeal the screen is capable of revealing a maximum of action and emotion in a minimum of time. We have only touched the edges of the psychology of the screen. In adaptations we come to the screen with a thought and a scheme that has passed through another medium and the second reflection is not always as sharp and as clear as the first. In the original film play we disregard all other mediums of expression.

It is an undeniable fact that the most powerful film play ever made gains its advantage mainly through its exclusive screen appeal. In this play the triumph of the screen is so plain and evident that I have taken it as an illustration of my point. What spoken drama or what printed page can describe to us the early dawn on the marshy shores of the sea with the fidelity which is possible to the screen? What can depict the sweet intimacies of the children's nursery with such appealing tenderness as the screen? In the portrayal of the early dawn we see the faint amber of the sky and fresh dewy green of the landscape and the slowly receding haze upon the water. The author has finely calculated the moment when he wants to visualize this gem of realism before our eyes. He gives us an atmosphere which nothing else can give or even colorably imitate.

Instances might be multiplied showing the wonders of the new school. The camera of the new school has mastered the science of perspective and faithfully obeys the call of the director, whose artistic genius tells him what to show at close range and what to show dimly in the distance. The powers of description possessed by the camera have been wonderfully developed by the new school.

"The Dishonored Medal"

A Thrilling Story of Algeria, Produced by the Reliance-Majestic Company Under the Direction of Christy Cabanne.

RETRIBUTION is the motif of this stirring photoplay, a four-part production by the players of the Reliance-Majestic Company now at Los Angeles, and done under the direction of W. Christy Cabanne, assisted by a notable cast. Algiers is the locale and the time might be, for the most part, the present, for the story has to do with events associated with the French occupation of that country and the continual conflict between the soldiers of that nation and the Arabs that is waged to this day.

The story begins with that old tale of man's lust and woman's trust and ends as it should with the punishment of the guilty, only it happens, as it always happens in such stories, that the innocent must suffer with the guilty, that justice according to Occidental rules shall be meted out.

Scene from "The Dishonored Medal" (Reliance).

Director Cabanne is to be congratulated on his successful simulation of the manners and customs of the Orient. The locality chosen for the exterior scenes might easily be mistaken for the mountainous region of Algeria and his Arabs are sufficiently characteristic to be types from that mysterious country. Brown men of the hill country, all of them, turbaned and sandaled and solemn, eyes alight with the fires of hatred for the foreigner because of the injustice he has dealt out to them. Yet, it is but the artistry of "make-up" in which not the least detail is lacking to destroy the illusion, and we look upon the scenes as they flash before us and almost believe that we are witnessing a real tragedy, fought to a finish, in the mountains of Algeria.

Scene from "The Dishonored Medal" (Reliance).

The story has to do with Lieutenant DuBois, of the French Legion, the duty of which is to preserve peace among the natives of Algeria. His military duties are not so arduous but that he finds time to make love to a very beautiful native girl, Zora, and in this diversion he succeeds in winning the girl's affection. There is a native lover, but he is cast off for the brave lieutenant and, following the Arab custom, the girl believes herself to be the wife of the soldier. The Arab lover kills himself for grief.

Soon after this DuBois is ordered to a distant post, but before he leaves he bestows upon the little Arab girl who has solaced his lonely hours, the coveted cross of the Legion of Honor of France, worn only by those who are brave, and then he goes away, telling the girl nothing of his plans, hoping thus to put her out of his life completely. But a child is born to Zora, and she becomes possessed of but one idea — to find the father of her child. She sets out and wanders far without success, finally accepting refuge with the old sheik, Achmed, who took her into his household and made her one of his family. But Zora's troubles were not to end thus. Coveted by another Arab, she is stolen from Achmed's house and hidden in a cave. Achmed goes to her rescue, and as the old sheik is about to take her from the cave her abductor fires a pistol at the sheik in an attempt to kill him. Zora attempts to prevent this tragedy and receives the bullet in her own breast. Achmed carries the dying girl to his house and her last act is to place the medal of the Legion of Honor about the neck of her infant son.

Achmed promises to raise the boy and he keeps his word, for, twenty years after we are shown a fine young Arab, known as El Rabb, wearing the medal of the Legion about his neck. Achmed's own son, Bel Kahn, and El Rabb are about of an age and are pledged as brothers. They fall in love with the same girl, Anitra, who eventually chooses Bel Kahn for her husband. El Rabb is hard hit, but he is loyal and accepts the verdict.

While these things are transpiring Lieutenant DuBois has become a general and is stationed near the village of which El Rabb and Bel Kahn are members. Oppression of the foreigners has made the natives rebellious, but old Achmed has prevailed upon them to be peaceful. DuBois sees Anitra, the betrothed of Bel Kahn, and covets her for his own, compelling her to go to his tent. When the natives learn of this outrage their fury knows no bounds; they fairly fly to arms and the strife is on. Terrified by the result of his action, General DuBois leads his soldiers against the Arabs and his command is almost annihilated, but reinforcements arrive in time to save him, and the Arabs are finally defeated.

The brothers have escaped the slaughter and manage to find their way to DuBois' tent so that, when he returns to possess himself of the victim bought at so dear a price, he meets El Rabb and Bel Kahn. El Rabb plunges a dagger into DuBois' breast and Bel Kahn escapes with his bride. As DuBois sinks upon his couch he spies the medal of the Legion on the Arab's breast and soon realizes that retribution has been dealt to him by the hand of his own son. He dies and El Rabb thinks of escape; but he returns to the side of the dead, tears the medal from his breast, tramples it under foot and calmly awaits the death that will be accorded him by the soldiers.

Events from the uprising of the natives follow swiftly. The attack of the Arabs and the defense of the soldiers is full of thrills and leaves little to be desired in the way of realism. There are times when the desperation of the commanding officer seems a bit exaggerated, but then he was in a desperate situation, though officers are expected to keep cool under such conditions. The extremely exposed position of the battery of field guns might be questioned by military men, but it presents a brave spectacle in the picture. The approach of the lancers and their wild dash upon the Arabs, who are thus quickly dispersed, adds a new element of interest to the already realistic battle which is thrilling enough for the most blasé motion picture fan.

The principals in the cast of this picture are: Lieutenant DuBois, George Gebhard; Zora, Mirian Cooper; El Rabb, Raoul A. Walsh; Bel Kahn, Frank Bennett; Anitra, Mabel Van Buren; Sheik Achmed, Dark Cloud.

PLAUT TO TRAVEL.

I. S. Plaut, of the I. S. P. Company, left Thursday, April 30, on a flying visit to Boston, in the interests of his several features. Although the I. S. P. Company has been doing business but a comparatively short time, it is now well known to the state rights buyers, and its offices are often crowded. Its features have been taking well. The company is now in the market for new features, and with this end in view Mr. Plaut will probably leave about the 16th of this month on an extended trip abroad, taking in London, Norway, France and Germany. It is also open for the purchase of negatives in this country.

GEBHART JOINS RAMO.

George Gebhart, for a long time a member of the Pathe force of producers, and more recently with the Reliance company, has joined the Ramo company of players and will direct productions for that concern. Mr. Gebhart has been working in pictures for several years and is well and favorably known.

BOX OFFICE ATTRACTION'S EXHIBITION DAY.

To comply with the expressed wishes of exhibitors, the features of the Box Office Attraction Company will be shown to them on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday mornings at 10:30 o'clock, at their two little theaters, fifth floor, No. 130 West 46th Street. The Box Office Attraction Company releases four features of three and four reels every week.

"Anne Boleyn" (Eclipse-Kleine).

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

AN imposing historical photodrama in three parts, under the title "Anne Boleyn," has been produced by Eclipse and is scheduled to be released as a special feature by the General Film Company on May 7.

Max Pemberton wrote the scenario, and he has kept close to the historical narrative in the main facts. He has succeeded in weaving an absorbing, romantic story around the second queen of Henry VIII, so strong in vindication of her innocence and so adverse to the merciless monarch that a view of these films forces the spectator to take the side of the ill-fated Anne, with a feeling of bitter animosity toward her royal mate. The introduction of the spirit of Herne the hunter in the story seems rather uncanny; but some of the scenes are laid at Windsor, and it is not too great a stretch of the imagination to suppose that the country side at the time teemed with legends about the famous deer killer, who had hunted them under pain of death in Windsor forest itself and was hanged on a great oak about two centuries before.

Many fine, stately interiors are revealed in these pictures. It is a subject that calls for the surroundings suited to royalty, and the production meets the requirements well. Several outdoor scenes are exceptionally beautiful, those in Windsor forest particularly. The costumes are also in keeping with Court etiquette at the time.

Great praise is due Eclipse for the assignment of the characters in the cast—with one exception. Miss Laura Cowie, of His Majesty's Theater, London, appears in the titular role. It is really a delight to see this graceful, attractive actress in moving pictures. She is brilliant both in her conception and interpretation of Anne Boleyn's character. The capricious and the ambitious aspect is distinctly shown; but just as Anne's real character was at its best during her imprisonment in the Tower of London, and at its noblest height on her way to the headsman's block, so Miss Cowie's talented impersonation reveals it. The shrinking of the tender-hearted woman from the dread ordeal, and the noble bearing of the queen when the end is reached hold one with the spell of pity and of admiration. Miss Cowie's court curtsy is a poem in the art of polite genuflection.

Henry VIII is reflected in the person of M. Albert Decoeur, of the Sarah Bernhardt Theater, Paris. At first sight, M. Decoeur may appear a little lean in his underpinnings, for the great Tudor king; but a little reflection will bring the reminder that Henry was still, comparatively, a young, virile man when he took unto himself his second wife. Free leash to his passions and appetite aged him rapidly within the next ten years or so, until he gained Falstaffian proportions of body and a state of mind that convinced him he was a close second to the Deity. M. Decoeur presents him, therefore, pretty accurately in physique. In dignity, in unbending arbitrary policy, in amours and in unscrupulous heartlessness to gain his ends, M. Decoeur's Henry VIII will make a strong appeal to the student of history and to others not so well informed. That final scene, in which the king and Jane Seymour, surrounded by the gay members of his court, await the sound of the signal gun that announces the beheading of Anne Boleyn, is a tragedy set in a background of smiles and pleasure. As one views it, a sigh of thankfulness is raised that the world has grown better.

The part of sweet, girlish Jane Seymour is inaptly cast. She was not much over sixteen years of age when her fresh young beauty attracted the lustful eye of Henry. The part has been assigned to a lady who looks much older than Anne Boleyn, and almost as old as Queen Catharine. Even with such physical disadvantages, the lady in question sustains the part with commendable art.

Queen Catharine, the evil Earl of Suffolk, the gentle, poetic Sir Thomas Wyatt, the court jester, the keeper of the Tower of London, and other roles are ably impersonated.

In all the big scenes the producer has massed his subjects with fine effect, and the action has an easy flow and timeliness.

Good photography, marked in many scenes by fine definition, stamps the films throughout.

As the story runs, the opening scene shows the handsome young courtier, Sir Thomas Wyatt, reading some of his verses to Queen Catharine, with Anne Boleyn, a lady-in-waiting, an interested listener. Sir Thomas has succumbed to the charms of Anne, and it is really to her that he is reading his verses and not to Catharine.

Henry VIII had heard much about the beauty and wit of Anne Boleyn and he pays a visit to the queen at Greenwich; presumably so, for in heart he has come to see and judge Anne for himself. He learns that Sir Thomas and Anne are often together, and, his jealousy aroused, he instructs his jester to watch them. The latter discovers that the young people are deeply in love and so informs his royal master.

Henry has now set his heart on possessing Anne and loads her with rare and costly jewels. But Anne still keeps her trysts with Sir Thomas, and the king coming upon them at one of these becomes furious, and banishes Sir Thomas from the court. Then the king presses more vigorously the annullment of his marriage to Catharine, and secures it. Soon afterward Anne Boleyn becomes Queen of England.

For two years Anne is happy amid the splendors of the court. Then Jane Seymour appears on the scene and Henry falls before her girlish charms. To rid himself of Anne he summons the Earl of Suffolk to form a plan that will compromise her. Suffolk writes a letter to Sir Thomas, signed by Anne, bidding him come to her. The forgery is not detected by Sir Thomas, who comes at once, with the bearer of the note, to see her. The messenger conducts him to Anne's apartments and locks the doors leading from them. Henry is notified, and proceeds at once to entrap Anne and her lover.

Anne, who suspects a plot just after reading the note which had brought Sir Thomas to her, urged the latter to fly at once. The doors were found locked and Anne knew that she was doomed. The king knocked at the door a moment afterward, and Anne concealed Sir Thomas in an alcove screened by curtains. Then she opened the door.

A few months afterward she was beheaded in the Tower and Jane Seymour became Queen of England.

"The Marriage of Psyche and Cupid"

Two Parts. Pathe.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

IN THIS beautiful film, a two-part Pathé, Psyche and Cupid were evidently married by the Board of Censorship. In all art, and especially in sculpture and painting, these two mythological figures have, from time immemorial, been considered legitimate subjects for studies in the nude, and many an exhibitor might be frightened by the title. He may compose himself at once—whatever Psyche and Cupid do in this fine feature is done with a lively anticipation of the wishes of the censors, no matter who and where they may be.

Scene from "The Marriage of Psyche and Cupid" (Pathe).

With one exception, the mythological traditions are followed with great fidelity, and the atmosphere of art is present from the beginning. The parts of Psyche and Cupid are taken by dancers of international repute who do full justice to the mythological tale, and the same may be said of Venus herself. The Court of Venus was very prettily conceived, indeed the settings of the story may be said to be one succession of exquisitely beautiful scenes, in which Nature unites with Art in perfect harmony. The visit of Psyche to Proserpine, the queen of the underworld, was likewise prettily conceived and prettily carried out. The acting was in perfect accord with the settings, and the whole feature is of that fine quality which has characterized the Pathé versions of mythological stories from the very beginnings of the industry.

The tale of Psyche and Cupid is one of those immortal classics that have survived the centuries and have found a place in the literature of every language. Few stories are more familiar to theatergoers of all classes.

While every part of the feature has the merit of quality, I think the last scene, showing the apotheosis of Psyche who is made immortal and becomes a member of the Olympian Court, is surpassingly beautiful.

The introduction of Ethiopians into a mythological story as well known as this is an anachronism which cannot escape attention.

"Petrof the Vassal"

A Bit of Pathos from Russian Life Adapted from Turgenieff's Story "Bread of Others."

FEATURES IDEAL has released a three-reel Savoia production, entitled "Petrof the Vassal," in which there is a strong appeal to the sympathetic side of human nature. The picture is an adaptation of Ivan Turgenieff's celebrated novel "Bread of Others," calculated to illustrate the utter humiliation of the dependent, and the hopelessness of they who serve.

The novelist takes as his principal character Petrof Sementick, a Russian nobleman, who has become ruined financially and becomes, through what seems to be a happy chance, overseer of the house of Prince Dimitrieff, a nobleman of great power and vast wealth. Petrof is a man of the highest ideals, genteel in manner and cultivated in mind, but his master, the prince, is selfish and sordid and a dissipated roue as well. In these surroundings Petrof suffers great agony of soul, not only because of the brutal nature of his master, but from the taunts and ribaldry of his fellow servants, all of which he endures in silence.

In the Princess Sonia he finds a kindred spirit and the two are drawn closer together when the prince diverts himself with a popular actress, Tatiana Leontieff, of whom he becomes deeply enamored. While the prince is engaged in his affair Petrof and Princess Sonia fall deeply in love with each other. This attachment is strengthened when Sonia discovers the faithlessness of the prince and her intimacy with Petrof becomes very close.

Scene from "Petrof, the Vassal" (Savoia).

A climax comes in the affairs of all when the prince, taking exceptions to the attentions paid by another to Tatiana, challenges him to a duel and is killed in the encounter. When the body of the prince is brought home, Sonia feels that his death is in retribution for her infidelity and tells Petrof that henceforth all relations between them are at an end.

Years pass, the princess dies and her daughter, Olga, just wed, is about to come home with her husband. Petrof has grown old and servile, but he knows that the daughter is his own and his pride is sustained by that secret. At a banquet he is made the butt of the wits and becomes intoxicated with wine until when the flowers he has placed before the portrait of Sonia are thrown at him he is aroused and declares that he is the father of the new mistress of the household. For this serious charge he is compelled to leave the home that has sheltered him for so many years. The new master grants his pardon when Petrof renounces his confession. With a woman's understanding Olga bestows upon him a daughter's kiss and poor Petrof passes proudly on his way.

The story is heightened by many beautiful scenes and the excellent acting of the principals. Altogether the subject is one that should hold interest.

Off the Screen with James Cruze.

By Thornton Fisher.

BOOM! Boom! Boom! "Step this way ladies and gents. The big show's about to begin. Everybody! Come on! It's free! Free to all!" Boom! Boom! To the accompaniment of a leather-lunged barker's voice, a young man on a raised platform outside a small tent is vigorously whaling a huge base drum. The barker continues his barking and the drummer drums while a crowd of passers-by collect round the wildly gesticulating individual and listen with feigned curiosity to the extravagant description of an unparalleled performance about to be presented under the canvas. In the meantime the drummer has danced a few steps to the tune of a light song, while here and there a few of the gullible leave the crowd and enter the hay-laden atmosphere of the tent. As the hawker's irrestible appeal prevails and an audience has been secured, the young man on the platform, with a final flourish of his feet and a parting blow on the drum, leaps to the ground and disappears within. This is Billie Banks' Medicine Show, and the young man who has been capering about on the platform is Jimmie Cruze. Such was his professional debut as an actor.

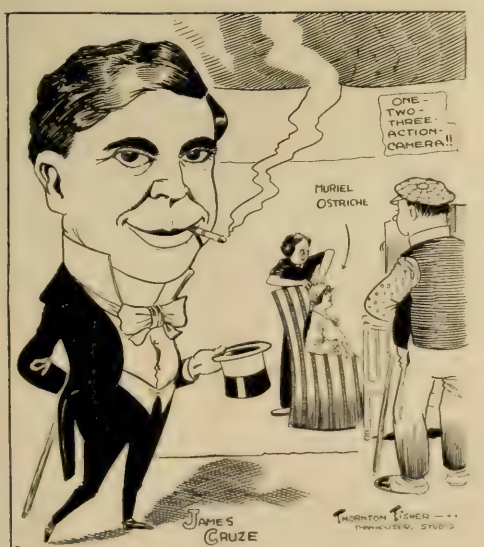
Incidentally he sold medicine between the acts. This unpropitious start occurred in California about sixteen years ago. To go back to the beginning, the present star of the Thanhouser Company was born in Ogden, Utah, where he witnessed his first theatrical performance. It thrilled the youngster with its realism. That show was "Uncle Tom's Cabin," and young Jimmie secretly yearned to become an actor, but the opportunity didn't bang on his door—at least, so you could notice it—and he kicked around the old home town leading a normal boy's life.

Then the Spanish-American war broke out and young Cruze went to the Coast, where he tried to land a meal ticket as a general helper on board the transports. His opportunity came at this time to star in Billie Banks' Medicine Show. It cannot be said that Jimmie was unprepared for his new job. He had taken a course at a dramatic school and was ready to tackle anything that resembled three meals a day in the profession of his fancy. And here we find him beating the big base drum before mentioned.



Aspiring to achieve recognition in a regular company, Cruze, with a side partner, resolved to communicate with a theatrical organization in Boise City, Idaho. While waiting for developments Jimmie's friend received a notice to report to a theatrical company in Southern California, leaving James alone with nothing more tangible than a healthy appetite.

One bright day a message was received notifying Cruze's friend to join the company at Boise City. This was Jimmie's first cue, and answering the note himself, he accepted the job. As a financial success the company proved to be a flivver. The manager, figuring the cost of sending Jimmie home, decided it would be far cheaper to keep him, and James lingered awhile with the show. By this time he was a full-fleged, honest-to-goodness actor, and had mastered the art of tremulous whispering to the soft strains of "The Flower Song."

Next we find the young thespian collecting a company of his own for tour. He led the organization from town to town, playing one-night engagements without regard to booking, for two years. If the troupe arrived in town Wednesday they played that day; however, when a washout occurred on the line or the cars left the track, and the belated company reached its destination Friday, the town was played Friday.

Then came a period of acting with the large productions, including Shakespeare and stock. With the ripening experience of the years he progressed in his profession, and was ready when the click of the camera called him from the stage to the studio, where the big fellow has honestly won the admiration of thousands of movie fans throughout the world.

I called to see him the other day at the Thanhouser studio in New Rochelle. Outside the glass enclosure I encountered a crowd of supers waiting for—well, just waiting for something to turn up. I was rescued by Bertram Adler, who, by the way, is the first person and usually the last you see at the studio, and undoubtedly the busiest. He scurried around and located friend Cruze. The Thanhouser star hove to and after the usual preliminary greetings we repaired to his apartment close to the studio, where he made up and incidentally lunched at the same time. All movie heroes are expected to he handsome, and Jimmie Cruze qualifies. Physically he is a big man. His face is strong. A pair of large brown eyes—you will declare they are black at times—gaze steadily at you as he speaks. The head is splendidly molded and is covered with a luxuriant mass of dark hair. He easily measures six feet, and possesses a pair of broad shoulders, which are very useful at times in his heroic parts. Between bites he fastened his collar and attached his tie, and when his servant had brought on the final course of the lunch, he was ready to return to the studio for a big scene in the "Million Dollar Mystery," in which he is starring.

In the studio things were moving rapidly. The scene-shifters were receiving hurried instructions from the directors, men of all trades were engaged in the various duties of the moment, actors and actresses waiting for their scenes or taking final advice from the big chief, indicating that something unusual was on the schedule. Soon the chattering ceased, and the voice of the director called everyone for the big scene. Order was pulled out of chaos. Everything was set. "One, two, three—action—camera!" says the director, and Jimmie Cruze made his entrance into the picture. A few moments and it was finished. I had seen the Thanhouser star play his part and prepared to leave. "Good-by," said he, as I turned around and saw his big figure in evening dress disappear from view. But the last man we observed was Bertram Adler, here, there and everywhere.

"A SAFE GUIDE."

Frederickton, N. B., April 23, 1914.

The Moving Picture World,
New York City.

Dear Sirs: Enclosed please find money order for $3.50. Kindly send me The Moving Picture World for one year. Would say that I consider The World the very best magazine of its kind printed today, especially the section devoted to "Comments on the Films," which are very broad-minded and helpful to the exhibitor as in many instances a person is very likely to boost a feature that has flashy advance paper, whereas the "Comment Column" is a safe guide.

We are running General Film service, about thirty-day releases. Our admission price is ten cents and our seating capacity about 400, with business good. Wishing the World all the luck it highly merits, I beg to remain

A COMEDY of common sense is what I shall have to call "A Foolish Agreement." By a delightful psychological process we are led by this comedy to realize how human pretense of morality is more or less a matter of tradition, flub-dub and balderdash, and any theme that calls our attention to the fact that we are a lot of amusing hypocrites is one of high value. In all theatrical decorative schemes, on the curtain, or among the ornate carving of the proscenium arch we see the marks of comedy and tragedy as separate entities, but they are much closer together in real life, intimate friends, in fact.

Scene from "A Foolish Agreement" (Edison).

The story introduces a burglar at his regular occupation, attending strictly to business, in a parlor where there happens to be a wall safe. He is surprised by a party of three dress suits, just come in from a late party, with three young men in them. These mere idlers are about to turn the hard-working burglar over to the police, but Barry O'Moore decides to give him a chance, and he explains this unprecedented act to his friends in a manner not immediately set forth, though it is revealed as the story develops. The three young men then enter into an agreement, which results in each placing two hundred dollars cash in the safe. A combination of the safe is made known to all three, and they agree to leave the money there for a year. If any one of the three removes it meanwhile because of stringent circumstances, it must rest entirely with his own conscience.

Now, coincident with this arrangement, comes a financial crisis in which the local bank is obliged to suspend payment, and the three men are all depositors in the institution. One of the parties to the agreement meets with a sudden reverse of fortune in the stock market, which five hundred dollars will set right. Another needs about that amount to save his mother from the consequences of serious illness, and the third loses a valise containing five hundred dollars pay-roll. All three, under the pressure of circumstances, abandon that stand which is easy to maintain ordinarily, and each one attempts to take the six hundred dollars deposited.

The conclusion seems obvious, and it is so, so far as the purpose is concerned, but there is a surprise in store, which need not be named here. The purpose of this play is humanizing. It helps us to chuckle, like Rabelais, over the eternal fraudulence of man. We are humbugs, we men, and, unless we are afflicted with too much cranial ivory, we know it. We know that our morality is a veneer, and that it will peel off in the strong heat of life's burning emergencies. Comedies of this kind are of the best; they strike the great notes sounded by Cervantes and Moliere.

On the lines of farce, "Tango in Tuckerville" deals with a phase of human weakness in a gentle and easy way that will keep moving-picture fans bubbling with merriment. It is, for all its farcical tendency, a criticism of our foibles, and deserves praise for its constancy in human satire, as well as for its definite message. So far as characterization is concerned, it is as clear and sparkling as spring water, a piece of finished craftsmanship.

Three dainty and delightful "lady manicurists" arrive in Tuckerville from New York City, and there is a quiet laugh here for those who live in the city. They draw all the men into their shop to the indignation of the members of the Tuckerville Sewing Circle. A little boy at the Sewing Circle finds that he can see all that occurs in the manicure shop through its window by means of a telescope, and the women of the Sewing Society take a peep, with the result of shocking revelations about the men. Those very same men moralize at home about economy of dress and low-heeled shoes, but they flock to the creatures of dainty French lingerie and tango slippers with true masculine inconstancy and inconsistency.

In retaliation, the indignant wives of these false men start a tango class, in which no man over twenty-five is admitted. The manicurists open a "Turkey-Trot Temple" to which no woman over twenty-five is admitted, and the merry war goes on to a final and inevitable reconciliation, which consists of organizing an entirely new social club for dancing, whose by-laws state positively that husbands must dance with their wives only.

This is a light frame-work of comedy, but there is a vast amount of amusing material in its construction, and the splendid cast makes it possible to bring out all that Mr. Seay's keen sense of humor has devised.

ESSANAY WILL NOT BREAK WITH GENERAL FILM.

George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, wishes the Moving Picture World to advise the trade that there is "positively" no truth in the statement in a certain amusement paper last week regrding his company's relations with the General Film Company. "All regular and future releases of the Essanay Company will continue to go through the General Film," says Mr. Spoor, "as our connection with that company has always been most satisfactory to ourselves."

"The Master Mind"

Strong Production by Lasky of Daniel H. Carter's Play, In Five Parts, With Edmund Breese in the Leading Role.

WHILE the expression of intense passion involves the infraction of some article of the moral code, and while much of literature and drama that is enduring is written around or depicts some such infraction, it does not follow that the criminal should be glorified or that his devious ways should be made much of. It is permitted, to preserve the continuity of the story or to explain the motive of subsequent acts of the characters of the story, that a criminal act may be portrayed or suggested; but that the career of a criminal in all its sordid particulars should be made the subject of either story, drama or motion picture does not make for the uplift in either form of human expression and, in pictures, it is calculated to raise a storm of protest among those to whom crime, per se, has no allurements.

There is a great need for pictures of intense dramatic quality; pictures that deal with elementary human passion, but this does not mean that only in the "underworld" is human life to be found in its elementary form. It is not meant that by this that human obliquity should come to us only in sugar-coated or dress-coated portions, but that it should, if not avoidable, be incidental to and not the purpose of the production.

"The Master Mind," as a literary composition, is open to the criticism that it gilds crime, that it glorifies the criminal and that it is devoid of a compensating moral lesson. It goes further than that in showing the triumph of a master criminal over a worthy representative of the people, who has properly and successfully performed his duty. In this respect it is not a wholesome subject to be presented to the youth of the land.

As to the manner in which the subject has been handled by the Lasky players, there is much to be said on both sides. A strong cast and able direction has produced a well connected story with sufficient interest to hold the attention through the five reels; there are thrills and "punches"—literally, punches—and, when once the real story is revealed, there is a strong element of suspense that holds the attention spellbound to the very last scene.

A word about the story: It opens upon the Southern home of the Allens. In revenge for dismissal a servant kidnaps little Richard Allen and afterward brings him up as a thief. Years after this child, grown to manhood, is known among thieves as "The Master Mind," the leader of a gang of malefactors against whom the police are strangely impotent. This leader associates with good citizens in exclusive clubs, which position enables him to carry out some daring projects in the line of loot. With him are associated a number of clever crooks whose efforts he directs. His abode is cleverly concealed and guarded and he is an adept in the art of disguise.

In the course of events he meets his brother, Henry Allen, and the two become reunited, but in the course of what appear to be a common liason, Henry kills a rival and is convicted of murder and executed. From that time the Master Mind abandons loot and lives for revenge. Discovering that one of his female accomplices, a clever pickpocket and a very handsome young woman, has attracted the attentions of the district attorney responsible for the conviction of his brother, the Master Mind determines to strike his victim through her. He gives her an education and then sets her up in an establishment of apparent affluence, the other members of which are crooks. By this means he entangles the district attorney who is now seeking election to the office of governor. The girl marries the unsuspecting district attorney, a rather unusual proceeding, but which proves to be his salvation, for the Master Mind relents through his love for his dupe and fails to claim his last ounce of flesh.

Notwithstanding the seriously objectionable features of this production, it is not without many pleasing points. There is a clever introduction of the cast, novel in the extreme; the photography is better than the average, but might be improved in spots. Clever manipulation of disguises by which the Master Mind foils the police affords a laugh now and again. Opportunities to heighten the interest of certain scenes by light manipulation were neglected in many instances and not fully exercised in others. Now and then the costuming did not fully agree with the period, but these minor details do not materially detract from the production. It is safe to say that Lasky's "The Master Mind" will draw big patronage where it is permitted to be shown; it is the sort of picture that seems to draw, but we wish Lasky might have chosen a different subject since all those that have heretofore borne his mark have been beyond reproach.

COHEN & PEARLMAN OPEN NEW HOUSE.

A moving picture theater, known as the Favorite, was recently opened at 533 Eighth Avenue, New York City. Messrs. Cohen & Pearlman are the proprietors and Mr. Leon is the manager. Pictures are projected by two Simplex machines upon a screen made of vellum. The exterior is beautifully illuminated by hundreds of incandescent globes, and the blaze can be seen for blocks around. The appointments, according to information from the theater, are of the first order. The manager always gives his patrons a diversified and interesting entertainment, with a result that the house has been playing to capacity business since the opening.

Stanley Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa.

Said to be Most Beautiful Picture Theater In the Quaker City—Has Seating Accommodations For 1,700 Persons.

WITH innovations of an entirely different character, and amid a brilliant array of lighting, the Stanley Theater, Philadelphia's newest, opened informally on Saturday night, April 25, with an exhibition to invited guests. The first opening was greeted by those who attended with visible expressions of surprise, and no one was reluctant in acclaiming the Stanley the most beautiful theater devoted to permanent motion pictures in that city. The architecture of the interior and exterior is a commendable feature, and the structure was designed by W. H. Hoffman Company, which claims this as the 197th motion picture house for which they have drawn the plans. The theater stands upon a site 70 by 170 feet, and is of steel and concrete, finished in terra cotta blocks and firebricks. The chairs are leather covered and were furnished by Heywood Brothers and Wakefield Company, of Philadelphia. The seating capacity is 1,700, and all seats in the house are reserved.

The stage is constructed after the order of a French drawing room and is closed in with velour curtains. All the draperies and rugs, together with the crimson red carpet on the aisles and stairs, were furnished by a Philadelphia department store. Beyond the velour curtain is a pure white French curtain in silk that forms a covering for the picture screen, which is of pure white zinc. When the projection surface is lifted, the eye is greeted by a large French window exposing, with the aid of electrical appliances, a scene of the Alps in Switzerland. It represents a distant view of a valley with its inevitable village and a peak of the Alps extending far into the clouds. It is fittingly designated "Morning, Noon and Night." The scene will be exhibited for an indefinite length of time, probably because of the fact that its beauty cannot be replaced in a short time. This view was displayed between the reels of a three-part picture of "The Sea Wolf."

The projecting booth is claimed to be the most up-to-date in Philadelphia. It is eight by twelve feet, lined with terra cotta. The two projectors are 6a Power machines. There is also a Kliegl spot lamp. Reels are rewound in a separate room adjoining the booth. In the ceiling of the booth is a 26-inch ventilator. The stage was constructed in detail under the direction of Jules Breban, who was in charge of B. F. Keith's Allegheny Theater. Mr. Breban has also officiated at the opening of other big houses in Philadelphia, and was originally with Lubin.

At the opening were forty-two representatives from the Keith offices of New York, and other members of the moving picture field of New York. Practically all the exchanges in Philadelphia were represented. Invitations were sent to prominent business and professional men in that city, and the house for this occasion was crowded to the doors. At the entrance was an immense horseshoe of flowers and ribbons presented by Alexander Boyd, manager of the Regent Theater, several doors up the street from the Stanley. This served to beautify the entrance and was generally commented upon.

Adding a social aspect to the theater is a promenade on the mezzanine that includes a reception room for the ladies and a smoking room for gentlemen. The opening feature was "The Sea Wolf," a story written by Jack London. Pictures of this particular kind, if obtainable, will be featured continually by the management, and they sertainly will be received by the public with enthusiasm, according to the indications expressed by the audience at the opening of the Stanley.

Another very novel feature is the Stanley Town Topics, a reel of local topical views. Pictures will be taken right on the streets of Philadelphia, of Philadelphians and will be exhibited within the next twenty-four hours, if possible. The first of these series was taken on the morning of the exhibition and was exhibited the same evening. Immediately after the picture is shown in the evening it will be destroyed. The topics will be changed daily while the large features will be changed weekly. "The Sea Wolf" was a three-part picture and was interspersed by other motion picture diversions.

Motion Pictures in Central America

Notes From the Diary of a Director.

WE CLIP the following from the diary of a motion picture director who has recently returned from Central America, and who kept notes of things specially for THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD. The director's name is Joseph Delmont, who made a feature film in Central America for a European concern.

"Santiago de Cuba.—This city is an interesting and lively place, but the outskirts are very dirty. There are three large and two small motion picture theaters in Santiago, and all of them are doing a good business. The Cubans are very fond of bloody stories. The knife is liked more than the revolver and a realistic fight with knives is sure to draw the crowds. Love stories are not popular, unless they are accompanied by horrors. Almost three-fourths of the program consists of French films. Films of an historic character dealing with incidents in the history of Latin nations are well liked. The screens are commonly dirty and covered with stains, while the projection is very poor, but the managers get the money and that is all they care for.

"Kingston, Jamaica.—'The Rose Gardens' is the largest motion picture theater in Kingston. It is an open-air place and gives a good show. The admission ranges from six pence to one shilling and sixpence. The performance begins at 7 o'clock in the morning and lasts until near midnight. Programs are all American. The audience violently disapproved of the picture, 'The Redemption of Bill.' A 'Bunny' film elicited tremendous applause until, in the course of the action, Bunny ran away from a dog. At once the favor of the audience went to the dog, and when the owner of the dog appeared on the screen he shared the applause of the audience with the dog.

"Colon, Panama.—There are quite a number of picture houses in Colon. The two largest are the Broadway Theater and the Garden Theater. The patrons like the blood-and-thunder films. Keystone comedies, no matter how old, are always sure to fill the house. Business is booming in Colon and two new theaters will be opened in the near future. The Broadway Theater, which is always well patronized, is owned and managed by a Chinaman. In Cristobal, the American colony of Colon, there is a theater which changes its program twice a week. These shows are managed by the Y. M. C. A. Throughout the Canal Zone the Y. M. C. A. arrange weekly exhibitions, notably in Gatun, Pedro Miguel, Culebra, Empire and Balboa. Panama City has a large number of picture houses and all are doing a good business.

"In Port Lima, Costa Rica, is one motion picture house, but it is of the most primitive description.

"San Jose, the captal of Costa Rica, can be reached on the Costa Rica Railroad after a journey of six hours. It is a wonderful journey full of opportunities to see the glorious scenery of the tropics, but the pleasure is somewhat marred by the burning of soft coal used by the Costa Rica Railroad to the exclusion of any other coal. Though San Jose has fully thirty thousand inhabitants, there are but two houses in the city where they show motion pictures. These motion picture houses are poorly patronized, and it seems hard to rouse any enthusiasm among the people. The country of Costa Rica abounds in beautiful women, with faces literally created for the camera. I offer this tip freely to my brother directors."

ANOTHER LUBIN WRITER.

Lawrence McCloskey, editor of the Lubin scenario department, has added another good writer to his staff, Harry E. Chandlee, who has distinguished himself in the field of literary endeavor. Mr. Chandlee has been a valued contributor to the Washington Times, the Pittsburgh Post, Technical World, and was editor of the Automobile Age. He has also written many scientific essays, especially for the Pearson and other magazines. Submitting two photoplay scripts to the Lubin Manufacturing Company, the editor realized the value of his work and added him to the scenario staff. Chandlee had before made his mark with photo stories, freely accepted by other film companies, but will now give all of his attention to the Lubin Company.

New License Regulations

Amendment to New York City Motion Picture Ordinance Deserves Attention of Exhibitors—Legislature Also Active.

LEGISLATION emanating from Albany and the Board of Aldermen in New York City is just now bringing about a mild revolution in the matter of issuing licenses to conduct places of amusement in the metropolis.

An act consolidating the various city departments which have heretofore issued licenses for the conduct of businesses which the city supervises has been passed by the Legislature and goes into effect June 1. An amendment to the present city ordinance which controls the moving picture business at the present time has also been passed and is to become effective June 30.

As explained by Commissioner of Licenses George C. Bell, who is a party in interest, the underlying principle of all of the new legislation is to systematize the business of issuing city licenses, to make the men who have this city business in charge more efficient in their service to the public, and to centralize all discretionary powers among those dealing with the license question in such a way that complaints which have been heard in the past to the effect that favoritism had been shown shall be as nearly eliminated as is possible.

The new state law has a provision which establishes one central bureau for the licensing of all manners of business from which the city derives a revenue. Insofar as the new act concerns the amusement business, this statement may be illustrated by noting that under the new law the police department, which heretofore has licensed theaters playing anything other than motion pictures, will have no licensing powers, licenses for all manners of amusements coming from the newly created bureau, with a Commissioner of Licenses at its head.

The amendment to the existing motion picture ordinance in the City of New York, for the present at least, will be the only thing which will affect the interests of motion picture people, and it seems apparent that the changes which have been made, while they provide for a stricter control of the business, must result in real benefit to those who control picture shows in New York City and take themselves and their business seriously.

Licenses to operate moving picture theaters in Greater New York have, for some time, emanated from the Mayor's Bureau of Licenses at No. 57 Centre Street, in charge of J. Rosenthal. Licenses for the operation of other businesses, such as poolrooms, dance halls, etc., are also issued here, but a special department under the supervision of E. F. Culleton, who is to be found on the second floor of the building, takes care of the motion picture business—and of nothing else.

Commissioner of Licenses Bell says that the new laws which have been passed will not affect the procedure to be followed in issuing licenses—that is, not for the present, at least. Applications for licenses, whether they come from Manhattan, the Bronx, or any of the other boroughs of Greater New York, must be made to the office at No. 57 Centre Street, as heretofore. New plans which have been made to take care of the necessary inspections of moving picture theaters, involving the more efficient use of inspectors through having them work in closer harmony with the central license bureau, are expected to greatly facilitate the issuing of the licenses.

New York exhibitors quite generally understand what they are required to do in order to secure a license for a new theater. Building requirements, etc., and formal application blanks are to be had at the Centre Street license office. After this application blank has been properly filled out, the Centre Street office sends out men to pass upon the site which has been selected for the proposed theater. If the site is found satisfactory, the applicant is so notified and is then directed to submit three sets of architect's plans for the proposed house. These plans are sent to the Centre Street office and, by the men in charge there, to the various city departments, including the Fire Department, the Bureau of Buildings, Department of Water Supply, Gas & Electricity, and Department of Health for their approval before the work of construction is begun. After the plans have been approved, permission to construct the theater is granted and, when the work of construction has been completed and the Centre Street office notified, an inspection of the house by the various departments is made. The motion picture ordinance provides that such inspections must be made by the various departments within ten days after they have been requested and further sets forth that in the event of the failure of any of these city departments, excepting the Fire Department, to file the report of such inspections within the prescribed time the Bureau of Licenses may disregard said department and, in its discretion, may issue a license.

The most important provision of the amendment to the city ordinance, which goes into effect June 30, fixes June 30 of each year as the time for the expiration of all licenses granted to motion picture theaters. Under the original ordinance licenses were granted for the period of a year, expiring twelve months after the date of their issue. This meant that licenses were expiring and being renewed practically every day in the year, burdening the department with a volume of work which could have been a lot more effectively and expeditiously done if handled at some given period of the year and systematized accordingly. With the amendment in force the only licenses, with their attendant inspections, etc., with which the department will have to deal will be licenses for new motion picture theaters, renewals being made during the month of June of each year.

It is claimed that many of the abuses which have been complained of in connection with the conduct of motion picture theaters in Greater New York and have directed the attention of the city and state legislators to the business from time to time have resulted from the promiscuous issuing of what are known as temporary licenses. Because of this fact, it has been announced by the Bureau of Licenses that after July 1 of the current year no more temporary licenses will be issued. This means that the exhibitor who has been able to secure a temporary license to conduct his business while certain requirements of the department, as regards fire prevention, sanitation, etc., were being complied with will, after July 1, be compelled to either have his house in such shape that the license issued him shall be a permanent one, relieving him from all future annoyance, or to close up until changes in construction or equipment ordered by the city have been made.

Commissioner Bell, who is the head of the present Bureau of Licenses, the scope of which the new city and state regulations are intended to broaden and who is likely to continue as the head of the newly created Bureau of Licenses, says that changes which are being made are all intended to make things easier for the citizens of Greater New York who find it necessary to secure city licenses for any kind of business and that a number of details of the conduct of the bureau now being formulated are being framed with this thought in view. He says that it is very likely that, within a few months, branch offices of the bureau will be opened in at least a couple of the several boroughs of New York at which applications for motion picture licenses may be made and handled in the same expeditious manner which is now the rule at the main office in Centre Street.

The past ten days have been particularly busy ones for the Centre Street office, for the reason that many theaters which have hitherto been licensed by the Police Department because they played both motion pictures and vaudeville, have been compelled to turn their attention to motion pictures alone because of the stringent regulations enacted by the city. Licenses for these houses, as well as for the houses where motion pictures alone have been the rule for the past year, are now being issued in Centre Street and the capacity of the working force there is being greatly taxed.

PRAISE FROM AUSTRALIA.

The Audley Pictures,
Petersham, Sydney, New South Wales,
Australia, February 2, 1914.

Editor Moving Picture World.

Dear Sir: I cannot too highly praise your excellent journal, The Moving Picture World, which I obtain regularly from your Sydney agents, Messrs. Gordon & Gotch.

A reader of over two years, I have always been impressed by your high ideals—the uplift of the motion picture is ever the keynote of the splendid articles contributed by your staff.

To the "Extended Reviews" and "Comments on the Films" I am much indebted for information that has been, and is, of the utmost value to me. You are doing a grand work for the exhibitor and for the whole business.

The high standards and clean principles of The Moving Picture World make it an instrument for doing incalculable good—of which you can be justly proud. With best wishes, I am,

Yours truly,
CLAYTON C. REID.

"NO COMBINATION" SAYS ALL STAR.

Regarding the publication of a story to the effect that a combination of feature companies was contemplated, embracing the All Star, Lasky and Famous Players, the first named company denies that there is any truth in any part of the story. It declares that the rumor, if any, was unfounded, that it will continue the same selling plan as heretofore and that its buyers are to be the same as in the past.

"The Magic Note"

A Touching Three-Part Drama by the Ambrosio Company.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS feature, "The Magic Note," is one of the good Ambrosios. It is in three parts and tells a story which has some flashes of the sensational, but the sensational is, as in every good picture it ought to be, entirely subordinated to the plot. The plot is strong and simple, well conceived, cleverly developed and carried to a logical and satisfactory climax.

A very attractive-looking young woman, modest and full of affection for an aged invalid mother, is in love with a young man who admires her musical talents. He freely gives of his savings to develop these talents. His hopes are fully realized. The manager of a great theater engages the young woman under most favorable conditions. The lover is in the employ of a banker whose confidence he enjoys in full measure. He is sent to collect a large sum of cash, and on his way back to the bank he is seized by robbers who steal his money and drop him into a sewer, from which there seems no possible escape. After terrible nights in the sewer, the clerk at last reaches an opening, but the shock and the suffering have unhinged his reason. The actor plays his part with great skill, showing how the loss of his reason comes gradually, beginning with an unnatural apathy and ending in violence. While the police are searching for the clerk who has so suddenly vanished, the latter has been placed in a lunatic asylum where he has been entered on the register as "unknown." In the meantime his sweetheart has attained to great fame in the operatic world. Though her ambitions have been realized, she is worried over the fate of her lover. One of her persistent admirers displays a gold snuff-box which she had given to her lover. While she is pondering over this clue, she is invited to sing for the inmates of the asylum where her lover is confined. She sings the song, "Know'st Thou the Land," which she had often sung with her sweetheart in the happy past. When he hears his sweetheart's voice the clouds of darkness roll away; he recognizes her and his reason is fully restored, but his memory is still weak. The sight of the golden box revives his memory, the police are notified, the robber, who is posing as a rich man of leisure, is invited to pay another visit to the singer and is there confronted by the man he had attempted to murder. The rest may easily be imagined.

Settings are all fine, the photography of the best Ambrosio standard, and the acting and the personality of the artists are unusually pleasing.

WILL SPECIALIZE IN JEWISH FILMS.

The Variety Feature Film Corporation is the latest arrival in the feature business. The above concern will make a specialty of selling and renting big features of renowned Jewish plays and promises to give to their customers besides elegant features the most complete line of advertising matter. Charles Penser, who is well known in the film business, will be the general manager of the above concern and will be pleased to see his friends at Fitzgerald Building, 1482 Broadway.

"A Meddler With Fate"

2 Parts. Pathe.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS picture portrays the folly of a wife who thought to profit by arousing her husband's jealousy, produced by Pathé in two parts. The affair goes much further than the wife intended, and while she is violently flirting on a bench in the garden some small members of the family take a snapshot of the situation. The negative of the picture falls into the hands of the husband through a strange accident. He is very angry and decides to develop the picture. At the last moment, however, he concluded to let the wife do the developing herself. He absents himself from the house and leaves a note informing the wife that he has an interesting negative in the developing room, and asking her to develop it for him. The wife, unaware of the situation, starts to develop the plate when, to her horror, she sees the evidence of her own guilt. She is conscience-stricken and pleads for forgiveness when the husband returns. The husband is adamant, and the woman rushes away with the avowed intention of committing suicide. The husband now relents and runs after her, and, though the picture does not clearly indicate the end of the story, we may indulge the hope, from what we see, that the pair become reconciled for the sake of the child.

"THE MASTER OF DEATH."

Four Reels. I. S. Plaut Co.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THE atmosphere of this film-play is emphatically foreign. The idea which dominates the play is foreign, the acting accentuates the foreign looks of the play. Settings and costumes are very foreign, too. An officer in the Germany army is persecuted by his superior for resenting an affront offered to his mother. He loses his temper and "insults" the superior officer, for which he is duly dismissed from the army. The disgrace involves the resignation of his father, also an officer in the army.

The dismissed officer comes to America to try his fortune here, but he fails, and is just about to commit suicide when an inventor happens to see him. He rescues the would-be suicide and explains to him that he has invented a sort of "Leap of Death" apparatus. He is not sure whether it will work, and he offers the ex-officer a chance to try it. If he breaks his neck the invention is impossible and if he survives the machine is all right and he is sure of good returns. The experiment is made and the ex-officer makes the leap of death in quite a satisfactory manner. He gets an engagement with a circus which features the "Leap of Death."

He returns to Berlin where he visits his mother and his former sweetheart. Unwilling to shock their aristocratic sensibilities by the admission that he is a circus performer he lies to them about being the agent for a Brooklyn shoe factory. The former sweetheart, now a married woman, convicts him of lying and shows him his picture in the paper as "Herrero, the Master of Death." In spite of this contretemps, the young woman declares herself willing to elope with him. He gets his trunks ready and awaits the coming of the old flame. The latter arrives at the scheduled time, but, after a rapturous kiss or two, announces that she has changed her mind and simply will not elope. She is very nice about it all and tries to cheer the former officer, but he remains inconsolable and decides to end it all by deliberately making a misstep when he starts on his leap of death. He is duly killed and the play ends with one of those long-drawn-out death scenes which seem to be so popular in Germany.

Photoplay at Christening

Candler Theater, in New York City, Costing $750,000, is Opened With Kleine's "Antony and Cleopatra."

At least "three-quarters of a million dollars' worth of theater" was added to New York City's holdings Thursday evening, May 7, when the Candler, in West 42d Street, a few doors west of Broadway, was formally opened.

It is significant, too, that the Candler Theater, although promoted as a home for any kind of attraction, whether it be the biggest Broadway musical show or the most modest form of entertainment, has been opened with a photoplay production and is to offer its exceptional comforts and conveniences to motion picture devotees for many weeks to come.

The Candler has been promoted and is controlled by George Kleine, the well known feature photoplay impresario; Sam Harris, of the theatrical producing film of Cohan & Harris, and Sol Bloom, also widely known in the legitimate branch of the show business. Plans prepared by Architect Thomas W. Lamb, of New York City, were accepted and work of construction begun about six months ago.

In these days of spectacular expenditure in the motion picture field it requires something more than the mere mention that the new Candler represents an investment of fully $750,000 to establish the fact that the new house is in no sense a "movie theater." In every respect the Candler is the equal if not the superior of any house in Greater New York City now playing so-called legitimate or musical attractions. The patented Kleine screen on which "Antony and Cleopatra," the spectacular photoplay production chosen as the opening attraction, is shown masks a stage which is 88 feet wide and 33 feet deep, with a proscenium opening 40 by 25 feet. Grids and a rigging loft big enough to handle practically any production at present playing in New York have been provided and the equipment is the most modern of its kind, special labor-saving devices of a kind of which the theater owner of a year ago knew absolutely nothing being features of the equipment. For the use of the flesh and blood performers who will some day speak to New York audiences from the Candler stage, fifteen splendidly equipped dressing rooms have been provided.

The Thursday evening audience who participated in the formal opening were free in the expression of their opinion that the Candler is one of the prettiest and coziest theaters in New York. Entrance is from 42d Street, through a lobby which, while adequate for all purposes, is very modest in its pretensions. Passing through the lobby one enters a spacious foyer and beyond this is a reception hall and promenade through which one reaches the main auditorium.

The theater has a seating capacity of approximately 1,200 on its main floor and single balcony. The balcony is of the cantilever construction, accounting for the very noticeable absence of posts and pillars. Fire exits greatly in excess of the number and volume required by law have been provided and a special heating and ventilating system of a type not often used in theaters has been installed. The ventilating system provides water filtered air for the consumption of the patrons of the theater and is so constructed that the temperature of the air can be either raised or lowered to any desired degree at will.

The Candler's interior decorative and constructive scheme is of the Italian Rennaissance and it is the prefect care for detail in following out the general scheme which has made the theater the gem of beauty which was disclosed to view on Thursday evening. A rich ivory gray is the base tone in the color scheme and upon this base have been used simple lining and panels in Roman gold and old rose. Pretty relief work adorns the ceiling and the proscenium arch and notable bits of decorative art included are large mural paintings on the rear wall of the house and in a circular ceiling panel. Drawn work tapestries, the newest thing in the way of materials for interior decoration—and particularly expensive—have been used throughout the auditorium. Worthy of special mention are two panels of this drawn work above the balcony boxes on either side. With lights behind these panels glimmering through, the drawn work provides a striking effect.

Another unusual effect has been secured through careful attention to the little detail of selecting the chairs for the house. Roomy and comfortable to an exceptional degree, these chairs match the predominating tone of the entire interior scheme, in color. The upholstering is in tapestry, of the rough, hand-woven effect, the color shades contrasting prettily with the color of the framework and in the centers of the back cushions of the chairs are designs in still other colors, no two designs in the house being exactly alike. The novelty of this plan can only be appreciated when one stands on the stage of the theater when the house is empty and sees the peculiar harmony of the scheme.

The orchestra pit provided is large enough to accommodate fully thirty-five musicians. For the attraction at hand an orchestra of twelve pieces under the direction of Prof. Herman Popper has been engaged. Prof. Popper is a thorough musician, hailing from Vienna, and is widely known in theatrical circles around New York City. To supplement the orchestra music there is to be installed a $40,000 pipe organ.

The special equipment for photoplays includes a modernly constructed booth sufficiently large to accommodate three projecting machines and three operators. The booth is situated at the rear of the balcony and the throw to the picture screen is about seventy feet.

With George Kleine as one of the promoters and lessees of the theater, the Candler is to be the New York home of a number of the big photoplay productions with which the Kleine name has been identified in the past and is to be connected in the future. The deep personal interest which Mr. Kleine is taking in the Candler is shown by incidents which have had to do with the choice of the opening attraction. "Antony and Cleopatra" is conceded to be one of the finest pictures which has ever been made and Mr. Kleine has done everything possible to give it an appeal not to be approached by anything else of this nature at present before the public. The picture was shown at Lew Fields' American Music Hall, in Chicago, for a number of weeks, to big business, and during the Chicago engagement Mr. Kleine had written for it a special musical score which is the work of one of the ablest composers in the West. The success of "Antony and Cleopatra" in Chicago made a number of New York house managers anxious to secure the attraction for the East, but Mr. Kleine firmly refused to book the photoplay in New York, despite all flattering offers, keeping it to open the Candler. The photoplay's historically correct story is told in three acts, comprising eight parts.

The new house has started its career under the business management of Budd Robb. Fred Landmann is treasurer and the publicity work is to be under the direction of Edwin W. Dunn, widely known through his long association with the firm of Cohan & Harris, and John W. Black. J. R. Gibbs and Edwin Fitzgerald, two veteran Kleine employees, will have charge of the picture booth. The policy calls for two performances daily, including Sundays, with admission prices of twenty-five and fifty cents for everything excepting the box seats which will sell for $1.

Besides the theater proper, the new building which Messrs. Kleine, Harris and Bloom have constructed, will provide quarters for the general Eastern and New York offices of the Kleine-Cines company, which were formerly located in the Longacre Building at 42d Street and Broadway. "Billy" Raynor and his associates, who look after the Kleine interests in the East, are already comfortably housed on the second floor. Offices on the remaining four floors of the building are to be rented to desirable tenants.

F. P. A. TAKES A TURN AT THE MOVIES.

Franklin P. Adams, newspaper paragrapher of the New York Tribune, recently took a turn at the movies. He seemed to enjoy the experience, though he protested that moving pictures bored him to distraction. This sketch by Briggs, the cartoonist of the Tribune, who chaperoned F. P. A. on his stunt—part of the Mutual Girl series.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN

LAST summer while passing through Brattleboro, Vermont, I visited the home of Mr. Haskell, superintendent of the pipe organ factory in that city. Among other things Mr. Haskell called my attention to a large clock which he had overhauled and installed with a beautiful chime. "That chime," said Mr. Maskell, "came from your town—Chicago, and was made by J. C. Deagan. Do you know him?" I replied that I had met J. C. Deagan and that he made good chimes and bells. "Well, I don't know him," said Mr. Haskell, "but I'd like to; this is the best chime I could find."

I know the above has no direct bearing on music for the picture, but it does tend to show that the J. C. Deagan goods have an established reputation among those outside of the picture business. J. C. Deagan made bells, chimes, xylophones, etc., long before moving pictures attained a form of popular amusement. Almost with the advent of the first moving picture theater J. C. Deagan recognized its potentiality as a market for his wares and turned his attention to the invention and perfection of novelties for the picture theater, and to catering to that trade. His electric bells as so well known as to need no comment. They (as well as his chimes) are played from an electric keyboard, which may be placed in the orchestra or any other convenient place, while the bells can be hung in the orchestra, placed on the stage, strung around the ceiling or hung in the lobby outside where they may be used as a novel method of calling the attention of the passer-by. The chimes are especially effective for this. By the way, Mr. Deagan always refers to these as "The Tubular Cathedral Chimes," and I suppose he will call me up to "call me down" when he learns I have spoken of them as "chimes" merely. But the particular thing I wanted to mention is an instrument he calls the "Electric Unaphone," and now that I have got to it I scarcely know what to say.

It is one of those things which does not lend itself readily to description, but must be heard to be appreciated. It is played in the same manner as the electric bells—that is, from a keyboard, but the tone is different and seems to partake more of the quality of a reed instrument or the vox humana stop of a pipe organ. When I visited the Deagan factory some time ago I was somewhat impressed to find it a pretentious five-story fireproof affair, and J. C. requested me to extend an invitation to you all to call and see him when visiting Chicago, and when he shows you all those xylophones, marimbaphones, orchestra bells, organ chimes, cathedral chimes, swiss bells and other things whose names I have forgotten I'll bet you will be impressed, too.

An Admirer.

From Watertown, Wisconsin, William J. Weber writes as follows:

> It is a great pleasure for me to read the articles in THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD about music for the picture, and I am always disappointed when they are left out. I am playing at the Majestic Theater in this city for the last eight years. It strikes me funny when I read the different opinions about music for pictures. I should think that anyone possessing a little knowledge of music would be able to play a picture correctly. It seems easy to know one cannot play a funeral march for a comedy or a ragtime for a death scene. I don't want to impose on your time—just give my opinion as I guess that is what you like to hear. For my picture music I use The Etude, published by Theo. Presser, Philadelphia, Penn. It gives a good repertoire of music in all grades. Another work I am using is George Rosey's folio of operatic favorites, a good edition and easy to play. I want to let you know that I am glad every time I see a page in THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD about music for the picture.

I am glad you like the page, though I must confess to a bit of negligence toward it lately, myself. However, I promise to do better from now on. It may strike you funny that so many opinions exist among so many people, but it would "strike me funnier" if we all thought alike. Of course, no thinking person would use the funeral march and rag in the scenes you speak of (though many unthinking people do things as bad), but aside from that, many disagree as to what really is an appropriate accompaniment for pictures. No one is imposing on my time when he gives his opinion on anything bearing on music for the picture. Conflicting opinions usually bring argument, and argument breeds thinking. By the way, you must have been saving the Etude for the entire eight years if you find your whole musical library in that and the folio of operatic selections. Every note in the scale of human emotion is touched in the pictures and your musical library must be wide enough in scope to suggest them all, to a degree, at least. A careful player can give many degrees of light, shade and forms of expression to the same piece of music, and by this means follow the different moods depicted on the screen, but it is wise to have a little of every kind on your shelves; that is, unless you do a great deal of improvising. I grant you that much good music is to be found in the publications mentioned, but is it enough?

The Linden Photodome at 63rd and Halsted Streets, though eight miles from the business center of Chicago, is giving shows which will compare favorably with downtown picture houses, and is superior to some of them. Frank Clifford, the manager, is also a first-class operator—in fact, he was promoted from the booth to the office at the Linden—and he knows what good projection is. He takes a trick occasionally even now, just to keep his hand in.

The Linden has a first-class, four-piece orchestra, under the direction of Thomas Johnson, and a good pipe-organ. Though Mr. Johnson's orchestra sometimes plays an overture, operatic selection or medley to avoid monotony, they prefer to work to the pictures—sometimes in detail, sometimes selecting numbers with a view to their general application. This, by the way, is about the only way in which an orchestra can work to the pictures. One reel, at least, is always reserved for the organ. The house uses Universal service and is generous to its patrons in the way of feature pictures. Mr. Johnson gave me his musical program for "The Sea Wolf," which I append, hoping it may be of value to some one.

"The Sea Wolf."

FIRST REEL.

1. "The Interrupted Rendezvous" (by G. Goublier) until fog scene.
2. Allegro from "Poet and Peasant" overture until hero left alone in water.
3. Chorus to "Billowy Sea" (by Earl K. Smith) once, then
4. "Miami" (Van Alstyne) until mate is being buried; then
5. Plaintive until end of reel.

SECOND REEL.

6. "Sailors' Song (by Stephen Heller).
7. "Poor Relations" (Theo. Bendix). When new hand comes down:
8. Barcarrolled (or sea music).
9. "Venetian Boat Song" (Mendelssohn). Pain in eyes.
10. Plaintive until end of reel.

THIRD REEL.

11. (This reel was accompanied on the organ by improvisations. Action calls for agitato and mysterious music mostly, for struggles, combats, etc. No music was recorded.)

FOURTH REEL.

12. "Garden of Dreams" (by H. J. Lincoln).
13. "Rose Leaves" (G. W. Ashleigh). This number was given an agitato effect; played until title: "A Dirty Cook."
14. "Paid in Full Waltzes" (Peters) until struggle with shark.
15. Hurry until he is on deck. Then
16. Back to same waltz until end of reel; continue waltz through change of reels.

FIFTH REEL.

(Continue waltz until Sea Wolf follows girl to room.)

16. Agitato; at attack of blindness:
17. Plaintive; then repeat agitato until girl and man leave boat, when landed.
18. "Lamento" (by Gabriel-Marie) until end of reel.

SIXTH REEL.

(Played on the Organ.)

19. "Humeresque" (by Dvorak).

20. "Narcissus" (by Chaminade).
21. Un Peu d'Amoure (by Lao Silesu).

SEVENTH REEL.

22. Play hurry until placed in bed.
23. "Fi Fi" (Novelette by Florence McPherson) until he sets bed on fire.
24. Agitato. After fire:
25. "Vanity Fair" (S. Wallenstein) until burial scene.
26. Plaintive until after burial.
27. "You and I and Cupid" (Kahn & LeBoy) until end of reel.

New Foto Play Folio.

I wish to acknowledge the receipt of a new edition of moving picture music from the house of Leo Feist, bearing the above title. This music comprises thirty numbers printed on heavy cardboard. The pages are separate and are of the standard concert size—9½ by 11 inches. Some of the numbers—such as "Apple Blossoms" and "Zallah" are well-known favorites from the Feist catalog, though they have been given a special arrangement for this edition. All the numbers, however, will be found useful in playing to the pictures.

Teaching Music for the Picture.

The National School of Motion Picture Operating conducted by Claude F. Smith in Chicago has added a department of music as a side issue. Mrs. C. F. Smith is an accomplished pianist with considerable experience in playing for pictures. She has opened a studio in the same suite with Mr. S., where she teaches the aspirant how to follow the picture with musical accompaniment, supplementing her course of instruction with practical work before the screen. The pictures before which her pupils practice are, of course, those projected by Mr. Smith or his pupils in the demonstrating department. This is the only practical method of teaching playing to the pictures which has come to my notice. At least its possibilities appear very attractive to me, and I shall watch its progress with much interest.

FAMOUS PLAYERS COMPANY RETURNS FROM LOS ANGELES.

One of the most distinguished motion picture companies that ever crossed the continent returned last week from the Los Angeles studio of the Famous Players Film Company to New York. Included in the party were Mary Pickford, fresh from her triumph in "Tess of the Storm Country"; Edwin S. Porter, techincal director of the Famous Players, whose marvelous camera effects contributed greatly toward the beauty and interest of "Hearts Adrift" and "Tess," the two Pickford subjects produced on the coast; Hugh Ford, the prominent "legitimate" producer, who recently effected an alliance with the Famous Players whereby he will collaborate with Mr. Porter on a series of big, spectacular productions; Carlyle Blackwell, who recently left the Kalem Company to associate himself with the Famous Players; Richard Garrick, former director of the Universal Film Company, who joned the Famous Players in Los Angeles and portrayed the role of Ben Letts in "Tess of the Storm Country"; Harry Lockwood, noted film player, who enacted the role of Frederick Graves, the theological student, in the same production, and a host of lesser celebrities connected with the Pacific Coast studios of the Famous Players.

UNIVERSAL MAKES IMPORTANT CHANGES IN PROGRAM.

With the definite purpose of strengthening and improving its weekly program of film releases, the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, will, beginning Monday, June 1, institute additions and changes in brands. The usual Monday Power's brand will be replaced by a Sterling comedy, featuring children principally. Mr. Ford Sterling will not be featured in this release, but will have his place in the releases of Thursday.

The Monday "Sterling" brand comedy will feature a company of the most clever children players in the business. Heading this company will be Billy Jacobs, a youngster of twenty-nine months, who stands in a class by himself. Formerly with the Keystone, where he created a tremendous reputation he is a natural little comedian with all the tricks of the trade up his sleeve. Ford Sterling has trained him and has, in the past, used him to play side by side with him. Robert Thornby will direct these comedies, which will be a big feature of the "U" program.

The Saturday Frontier release will be changed to Sunday and will continue as a Sunday release thereafter, while the Frontier release of Thursday will give way to the Sterling brand.

Sunday's regular Crystal comedy release will be dropped from the program. The Thursday release of the Crystal will continue as usual.

While the cutting down of the Crystal and the Frontier to one release a week will be directly due to the addition of the two Sterling releases, the Universal also expects to bring about a material improvement in the artistic quality of Crystal and Frontier pictures by giving them the opportunity they have been seeking to concentrate on the one release a week. The changes to be made will adjust the Universal program to a basis of twenty-eight reels per week.

New Lasky Picture Stars.

WHAT promises to be one of the greatest conclaves of stars in the history of the motion picture industry will be that which will meet the public at the exhibition booths of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, at the Exposition Convention at Dayton, Ohio, in July. Among those who will be present as guests of Mr. Lasky are:

Max Figman.

Max Figman and Lolita Robinson, who will appear in "The Man on the Box"; Robert Edeson, who will make his first screen appearance in the filmization of Stewart Edward White's thrilling story of the northwest, "The Call of the North"; Edmund Breese, who has recently completed the "Master Mind" in pictures, and Thomas Ross, who plays in "The Only Son," and H. B. Warner, who is now appearing in the "Ghost Breaker" for the Lasky people.

In addition to the above mentioned celebrities, Edward Abeles and Jesse L. Lasky will make a pilgrimage to Dayton for the convention, as will Mr. Goldfish and Cecil B. De Mille.

Lolita Robinson, who in private life is Mrs. Max Figman, will make her appearance in the "Man on the Box" with Mr. Figman, and will probably become the permanent leading woman for the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company.

Mr. Breese's first screen effort, the "Master Mind," will reach the public on May 11th, and the "Only Son," with Thomas W. Ross, will follow immediately after, after which will come "The Virginian," with Dustin Farnum, and "The Call of the North," with Mr. Edeson.

Lolita Robinson.

Mr. Goldfish, executive head of the Lasky organization, left for Los Angeles last Monday, for a two weeks' visit to the Lasky Studios at Hollywood, Cal.

The appearance of Mr. Figman and Miss Robinson on the screen will be awaited with some anticipation. Mr. Figman is a master of dramatic expression and Miss Robinson has many times proved a true foil. "The Call of the North" is a powerful subject and should prove a splendid vehicle for his introduction to motion picture audiences. The Lasky forces will be materially strengthened by this acquisition and the subject is certain to be interesting.

At the Sign of the Flaming Arcs

By George Blaisdell.

THE Sumner Theater and Roof Garden, at the corner of Sumner Avenue and Quincy Street, Brooklyn, was opened to the public on the evening of Saturday, May 2. In spite of the fact that the house seats one thousand persons, many were turned away. The owners and operators of the Sumner are the Sumner-Quincy Amusement Company. Julieen Loeb is president and treasurer, Frank E. Clarke secretary, and R. W. Chambers assistant to Mr. Loeb. The theater covers a plot 100 by 125 feet. Admission prices are 10 and 15 cents. There is an unobstructed view of the screen from every seat. The aisles and space at the back are covered with green carpet. The lower trim is in mahogany. The arrangement of the stage and the decorating were by Lee-Lash. An orchestra is supplemented by an organ and Yerkes bells. Two Simplex machines project the pictures. The program is changed four times a week, and very shortly, after the community gets accustomed to the deviaton from the daily change, this will be reduced to three. The service will be confined to no one division of the film industry. The program for the first two nights included "French Fox Trappers," Animated Weekly, Ford Sterling in "Love and Vengeance" and the five-part "The Daughters of Men." Seven reels, however, will be the regular thing. Much attention will be given to advertising the Sumner's offerings, for the present at least an ad being carried in the borough papers. There also will be billboard and window announcements. The roof garden will be a novelty. It is intended to open this part of the house about June 10. There will be 1,100 seats. The projection booth is arranged for two machines. Four exterior exits lead to two fire-escape stairs and there are two interior exits. The Sumner is a worthy addition to the picture theaters of Brooklyn. Manager Loeb has had exhibiting experience. Prior to opening the Sumner he was treasurer of the Regent, the palatial Harlem house.

The Animated Weekly's picture of the Atlantic battleship fleet at sea is of the sort that bores deep under the skin. It thrills. Uncle Sam will never have occasion to resort to the draft to obtain sailors for his ships while such scenes are being thrown on the screen. Not even the brush of a Reuterdahl can here approach the camera.

Met Jim Kirkwood at the Screen Club on the day following his arrival from the Pacific Coast with the Famous Players. "Did Broadway look good to me?" said the new director of the Twenty-sixth Street aggregation. "Why, I wanted to kiss every policeman I met." He was on the Coast three months. The New York players remaining in California are counting the days to their return, Mr. Kirkwood says.

"Neptune's Daughter," the seven-reel Universal feature showing at the Globe Theater, is going strong. The house is sold out every night. This, too, when the "regular" attractions are closing down. It is the Globe's first experience with the screen, as it is also Annette Kellermann's, but the debut of house and player should be a very satisfactory one to each—and flattering to Producer Brenon.

At the Strand Theater at 8:30 on the evening of the first Saturday in May there was a good-sized line in front of the box office paying orchestra prices for standing room. We just conldn't see that standing-up stuff, and crossed the White Way to the New York to get a look at the much-heralded "Sealed Orders" of the De Luxe. With the exception of one or two instances where the scenario has to be helped over the fence it is a great picture.

Heard it said the other day that the present show at the Vitagraph Theater is playing to more money than did its predecessor. For an all-around program it is one that would be hard to beat.

Professor Charles William Wallace, of the University of Nebraska, has been richly rewarded for his ten years' search of the Public Records office in London. In this time the professor, aided by Mrs. Wallace, has examined approximately three million documents. According to a dispatch in the New York Times the Shakespearean scholar has found seven papers which "reveal Shakespeare as an eminent man in his own day." Most of the documents examined were in original bundles and had never been opened since the day they were filed. Professor Wallace found hundreds of records bearing on the Shakespearean theater and drama period. The historical work now in preparation by this remover of three centuries of dust ought to go far to dispel the doubts of the few as it will be bound to confirm the convictions of the millions. If we may believe what we read in "Is Shakespeare Dead," Mark Twain went to his grave a doubter. The strong-opinioned humorist was as bitter in his attack on the Shakespeare of Stratford as he was strong in his praise of Joan of Arc; as bitter as was Shakespeare's time-serving assault on the Maid. The which latter unconsciously may have influenced the American to attempt to prove by the meagre documentary evidence available that the great works ascribed to Shakespeare could not have been written by the slimly educated youngster of that name who went from Stratford into London. Twain overlooked the fact that he himself at the age of eleven years was jerked out of a country school and put on a box at a printer's case—where he stuck for ten years.

There are no readers of books who will await the publication of the result of Professor Wallace's researches with more interest than will the players.

The work of Producer George Terwilliger in Lubin's "The Daughters of Men" is worthy of a skilled veteran. It is a strong production in all departments.

A story came out of the Pathe studio recently telling of the severe injury of Francis Carlyle and Pearl White while enacting a scene for Eclectic's "The Perils of Pauline." Unfortunately for the parties named in what some sceptics may have assumed was an everyday press agent's yarn, it was a real and unexpected accident—a genuine peril. The writer was shown a strip of negative on Monday which had to be cut out of the picture by reason of the entrance of one of the stage hands. Mr. Carlyle is shown picking up Miss White, bound hand and foot and gagged. He starts up a flight of stairs with Miss White over his shoulder. As he reaches the seventh or eighth step he treads on a broken brick, loses his balance and falls, turning as he does so. It is a brutal tumble. The wonder is that the necks of both were not broken. No blame can attach to the stagehand for rushing into the picture, for plainly there was need of instant attention. It just happened the two were supposed to be the only ones in the building, so the presence of the third person could not be accounted for. The situation would have made a real thriller if it could have been used. It is said Miss White is making books with herself as to whether she survives the "Pauline" series. Her fellow-players give her credit for the possession of sand in large blocks. Why would not this dozen feet of film make a most interesting bit for Pathe's Weekly.

It was several days before Mr. Carlyle and Miss White were able to retake the scene.

The biggest celebrity in the parade of the Boston suffragists the first Saturday in May is described as "a rather stout, good-natured looking woman, wearing eyeglasses and a perpetually cheerful smile." It was Mrs. George Bernard Shaw, wife of the great dramatist. Now how do you figure this out? Here is a woman honored by women—and women suffragists, too, bless you—not necessarily on account of anything she has herself accomplished but simply because she is the wife of a man—a mere man, as the aforesaid suffs sometimes, and perhaps with provocation, denominate him. All of which would seem to prove that a woman is a woman first and a suffragist afterward.

A party of players were standing at the bar of the Screen Club just after the first showing of "Neptune's Daughter." The discussion turned to Katherine Lee, the charming four or five year old who so splendidly played Angela, the sister of Annette. "Too bad she couldn't have been carried into the picture three or four reels more," remarked one of the group.

"Oh, here," spoke up Bill Welsh, the dignified Father Neptune, the portrayal of which was a strong factor in the picture, "be reasonable, man. Wouldn't you give the rest of us a chance? Don't you know she hogged the whole show every minute she was on the screen?"

PURCHASES THEATER.

The Orpheum Theater, of Haverhill, Mass., was recently purchased by the Orpheum Theater Company, Inc., of Louis B. Mayer. The Orpheum Theater Company consists of Harry I. Wasserman, president and general manager; B. H. Ludwig, vice-president, and G. M. Rosen, treasurer. The Orpheum company is also the owner of the Eagle Theater, Roxbury, Mass.

Suggestions for Parks

Park Manager Says Moving Pictures are the Ideal Summer Park Attraction—All Other Devices Losing Interest.

THE following suggestions are taken from the report to the general manager of a large electric railway company, submitted by their park superintendent. As the conditions confronting this company in making their suburban park attractive and popular and consequently profitable must be similar to those in a large number of localities throughout the country, their publication at this time may enable many to arrive at a wise solution of a serious and vexatious problem. The report follows:

"Believing the time has come when our band has ceased to be an attraction for our park, I submit the following suggestions and arguments for a change: Last season we paid about $3,000 for free music, and each season previous thereto, about $4,700 to $5,000. In former seasons we had seven of more concerts per week; last year we had four. At the time I recommended four I thought that with only two week-day concerts the public would appreciate them enough to attend them but, as a rule, there were as few people around the band stand last season as when we had seven concerts. Only the Sunday and holiday music was attractive to enough people to warrant the expense.

"I suggest now that we discontinue the band concerts entirely and put the money for a season or two into our theater. This theater building is now worthless, because we cannot keep it cool enough for the comfort of our patrons, and it it otherwise unfit for a summer theater. The investment in the building should be turned to account and a modification of its original purpose is the easiest and cheapest solution. If it is used for any other purpose, not only must the sides and front be taken out, but a new floor must be built in it. I propose that archways be cut in the sides of the house, the front taken out, porches built on both sides and the front one extended to the street line; that these side porches be screened with pearl cloth, and our ice cream and soda water tables be placed thereon. In this way, people would go to the tables and order refreshments in order to have a place where they could listen to the music and see the pictures of the theater through the arches. Others, who do not care for refreshments, but want the music and pictures, can purchase tickets and take seats in the house at 5 cents each. The changes in the building, as suggested, may cost $2,200, but the depreciation will be slight and no future changes are likely to be needed except the lengthening of both building and porches if the plan becomes sufficiently popular. I hope that it will, to such an extent that the building will eventually become a large open air theater, for vaudeville, stock and light operas. Something of this sort is needed to keep the interest of the local people alive. A weekly change of program, for which they will pay the cost at least. Whatever success we had last year in making our operating expenses and our revenues meet was due to the increased outside business, because our local patronage is steadily falling away. Everything we have is old and out of favor with local people, except those who dance.

For music, I would install a semi-automatic instrument, in order that an unskilled person may operate the instrument in the daytime at a small expense, thus permitting us to employ a real artist for evenings and Sundays.

If, at any time after one season, it is desired to change the music to an orchestra, the semi-automatic can always pay its way at the dance pavilion by permitting us to lay off the dance orchestra on the duller nights, thus saving from $10 to $12 per night. By the use of the semi-automatic, we can have music whenever we have a picnic or daytime party; if we have an orchestra, the expense will be too much for more than five or six concerts per week. An automatic or any instrument played by one person can be used to play effects for motion pictures, but two or more persons cannot change their music quickly enough and keep together. With the semi-automatic, a very large number of sound effects can be had to put life into the pictures.

The motion picture business is on the boom now, with every prospect of the boom continuing indefinitely, as better machinery for projecting the pictures, better subjects for films and increased comfort for patrons is developing rapidly. A screen is now made by means of which we can give pictures in the daytime, with the sides and front out of our building, as well as in a darkened house formerly. This can be still more improved by installing a rotary transformer (35 amp. capacity) to change the A. C. to D. C., giving a steady, white light, with practically no flicker. I am thoroughly convinced that the combination of an open air theater, good music and refreshments will prove immensely popular.

We cannot afford a band, which fact no one disputes, I believe, and its elimination will displease but a very few people. We could even afford to run the motion pictures entirely free of cost rather than to pay a band.

But the large fact of the whole matter is this: We are doing nothing for local people who don't dance. They have tired of the scenic railway, the little games don't interest them; they can only sit at the dance pavilion and watch the dancers and listen to the music. This gets us no money; it leaves all the park aside from the dancing pavilion, deserted most evenings and steadily decreases our business.

A few words more in regard to the semi-automatic instrument, at any time we feel the need of a greater volume of music than the instrument provides, we can add a few pieces of orchestra music to it and get a splendid effect for Sundays and special occasions; when there are few people in the park (week-day afternoons) we can decrease the expense, but we can always have music. We could also run the motion pictures free in the afternoons, to induce women and children to patronize the park in the daytime, with very little additional expense over running them evenings only, except, of course, Sundays and holidays.

Ethel Clayton

MORE than anything else Ethel Clayton has the rare quality of distinction both as a woman and an actress. Her's is a finished, brilliant personality, the reflection of cultured tastes and firm convictions. She adds to the Lubin photoplays a charm, a dignity, a refinement not often encountered outside the drawing-room.

Miss Clayton joined the Lubin studio with a long record of stage successes to her credit, and in adapting her gifts to the demands of the screen she had the advantage of that facility of technique only acquired through experience. Besides several stock engagements Miss Clayton has played opposite Emmett Corrigan, Wallace Eddinger, with Edwin Stevens in "The Devil," and in the productions of "The Country Boy" and "The Brute," all within five years. From the outset Miss Clayton has been successful, yet she modestly declares that her greatest ambition today is "to be a good actress."

Ethel Clayton.

Among the seventy-five photoplay roles Miss Clayton has created she naturally has her favorites, but of them all, she prefers, and it is expected she will exceed herself as Shirley Rossmore in the forthcoming Lubin release of Charles Klein's famous play, "The Lion and the Mouse."

Like all picture players, Miss Clayton has had her share of those moments when she did not know what would happen next, but few outside those concerned in the scene are aware of what is really the narrowest escape from instant death yet recorded in a studio. It occurred in the scene in "When the Earth Trembled," which represents the crumbling of the walls of a house as the earthquake strikes the city. A mistaken signal brought a crash, followed by the collapse of one side of the room as Miss Clayton leaned against it. The actress was stunned and nearly buried in debris, but with remarkable presence of mind she continued the scene, knowing that it had been built at the cost of many hundreds of dollars and weeks of labor. With two children in her arms she tottered across the room only to encounter a swaying chandelier. Suddenly it dropped, striking her squarely in the face. Miss Clayton screamed with pain but nerved herself to the utmost and made her scheduled exit. Outside, she fainted. Whatever reward there is in such daring hazards Miss Clayton finds whenever she goes into a theater where the film is being projected and hears in the darkened auditorium men and women gasp and shriek. It gives her a curious sense of having been killed and yet seeing how it all happened.

Miss Clayton is consistently reticent. She is affable, cordial—but she discourages interviews and asks not to be quoted. What is known of her comes from her associates and they, in turn, comply with the star's wishes regarding personal information. She feels that with her constant appearances before the public there can be little else to make known.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

An intimate friend of "Man About Town" requested him, recently, to make a candid statement of the relation of so-called "extras" to the actual production of motion pictures, with particular reference to the possible future for such who may be barred from companies by reason of lack of professional experience, but are qualified in other respects. In making the request, the friend stated: "I am interested in a young woman of unquestioned respectability and social standing who has attained more than ordinary success in that kind of amateur theatrical work which may be classed as semi-professional. Reverses in the financial affairs of her family make it necessary that she take up some means of employment in keeping with her standing in society and personal ability. An excellent opportunity has been offered her in the literary field, but some of her friends (whom I believe to be well-meaning, but not thoroughly informed) are urging her to take up photoplay work in some prominent studio. Some of them have almost impressed her with the belief that with her standing in society and ability as an advanced amateur actress she has an opportunity to become in the photoplay field what Ethel Barrymore became on the stage. What is your advice?"

"Man About Town" must decline to advise a plan of action in the case stated, but will frankly outline the chances of success attending the so-called "extra" work in photoplays. "Extras" is a comparatively recently coined term in connection with the work of making motion pictures. It is only a few years that the producing companies have maintained stock companies, and many of them are without "stock" today. The studios had at hand a certain number of people qualified to fill the main roles of productions and, as the scope of production was far less then than it is today, the "extra" problem never presented itself. Most of the productions at that time were but one reel in length and details as to correct reproductions did not receive the same attention they do now. If it became necessary for the sake of making some effort towards realism to show a cheering or a howling mob the clerks and mechanics in the employ of the concerns were drafted for the purpose.

As the day of the photoplay drew near and the business of the concerns engaged in the production of the pictures made it necessary that the clerks and mechanics should remain at their posts the producers were obliged to look about for people to take the places of those employees. So-called amateur people, residents of the studio neighborhood and loiterers about the places were next recruited, as well as friends of the producers and players only too willing to see themselves in motion pictures; and, for a time, everything in the mob line moved along with satisfaction.

But as the cry for realism and perfection in details increased the producers say that most of the material used for the mob scenes was too crude. Then the drag net was thrown out for people who knew something about acting to give real color to the auxiliary assemblages. Professional people resented the overtures. Their pride would not permit them to appear in a motion picture, regardless of the degree of importance attached to the work. They looked upon professionals then engaged in it as common buffoons, or discredited and worn-out members of an illustrious profession.

Then followed the formation of stock companies and the steady advancement in public recognition of the members, with a corresponding increase in their pay, steady work all the year round and a gradual building up of a most promising future. Directors then commenced to correspond with agencies in terms to the effect that they needed a certain number of people at fair compensation to "fill in." They had a stock company to cover the cast, the directors would tell the agents, but needed people with a fair knowledge of stage craft to lead and mingle with the mob and give the work some good professional color. "I just need some competent extras," the directors said.

That was how the term "extra" was coined. The significance attached to it today was not that given then. Professionals who persuaded themselves to sacrifice some of their professional pride to enter upon the work made it known that they did so with the hope that it would lead to stock, and stock work in studios was beginning to look pretty good to them. Many motion picture stars of today started as extras, and many extras will no doubt follow them with the same amount of success. But now it is not a question of supply; it is one of demand. The condition of the latter is such that even professionals find opportunity for extra work scarce, notwithstanding the companies are now giving them the preference for that line of work, as well as stock.

Many very promising people of undoubted ability are today importuning producing companies for a "try out," some of them offering gratuitous services for a certain period so that they may either win stock recognition from the company giving them the opportunity, or get a screen diploma that will help them to it with some other company.

But you cannot get a quart and a pint into a bottle that has capacity for but a quart. That is the situation in a nutshell, and with the amount of professional talent at hand for any part of the game a company may wish to fill the non-professional stands a slim chance for recognition.

It is quite true that many of the most noted people in photoplay work never saw a stage, or studio, until they engaged in mob work. It is also true some of the same people were rank actors when upon the stage with many of the most talented but unsuccessful applicants. It is also quite true that Miss Successful was only a wall-flower in a drawing room scene, or Mr. Goodplay first made his appearance as a water carrier. But it is also true that such comparisons serve as a boost to the successful players and in no way advance the interests of the belated applicants. If the success attained by the fortunate players is not due to hard, steady, conscientious and recognizable work, then their value to the respective producing companies lies in the peculiar personal type. Any type requirement, by the way, is one of the great barricades to admission into the ranks. No matter what the personal charms or artistic ability of an applicant may be, the question of type may be the bar, and the next applicant with much less pretentions may be taken on and become a most valued member of a stock company.

There are scores of motion picture players of undoubted ability floating about today, willing to accept almost any offer from a producing company. They have been released by companies with whom they made no little success, but in time it was found they were not the type.

This must not be taken as a declaration that there is a standard type for motion picture work. What may not be a type in the eyes of one producing company may be the exact personality that some other company is seeking. This is one of the hopes to which those without the fold, whether or not they be professionals, may cling; but the applicant combining experience and personality has others not so fortunate handicapped.

If "Man About Town" were to advise a friend as to choice of taking or retaining a position of respectable employment at a fair salary as against embarking in extra motion picture work he would most emphatically recommend the former. In doing so he might turn the friend from a most successful career, but the percentage on the side of success is so small, and the opportunities so limited, that he could not make any other recommendation. Caution is advised against the rather heartless statements that motion picture producers are unable to get enough people for their work. Susceptible young men and women are warned against the claims of friends that by reason of influence or dealings with producers they have power to create those they favor into photoplayers. Such claims almost invariably result in weeks of fruitless effort, with but a pittance in return; and a dark vision of time wasted, opportunities in other fields gone, and blasted ambition as the final result. It has often been said that half the world does not know how the other half exists, and part of the other half constitutes the people known as extras.

LYDA BORELLI JOINS KLEINE-CINES.

Lyda Borelli, who is considered one of the most widely known actresses in Europe, has joined the Kleine-Cines Company, where she will be featured in a number of coming subjects, big and little. Miss Borelli i sa woman of rare beauty and great histrionic powers. She is twenty-two years old, an accomplished dancer and by far the most "Americanized" type of actress in Europe.

Doings at Los Angeles.

"BULL" DURHAM, one-time mound favorite for the New York Giants, will preside in the same position at Sunday's game here, on the 26th, when his Keystone team will meet the Big U aggregation. Baseball fans here are highly interested in the Movie League, and the attendance will probably be large. There will be a war between the Reliance and Majestic teams at Long Beach, while up at Santa Barbara, the Americans and Universal Ranchers will fight.

It has been reported here that word reached San Diego of the capture, by Mexicans, at Mazatlan, of two American sea-going launches, one of which was loaded with moving picture makers from San Francisco. No definite details have been received, and the movie men are not known.

Next Monday, the 27th, the United States Film Company starts operations in San Diego. Hal Clements, who directed the Kalem company at Santa Monica, and who was for some time identified with Solax, has gone south to direct a company of players. The new firm will release through Warner's.

Closely following the death of William Warner Kirby, the actor-trainer, who died of blood poisoning caused by his being mauled by a lioness, the beast was shot, at the order of the officials of the Universal Company. The unfortunate happening will no doubt serve as a sinister example in future handling of these dangerous felines.

Easterners who frequently read of filmers being held up by big rains must not think that it rains here all the time. Not for a minute. Last Sunday was a forerunner of summer. Everyone wore straws and white shoes, but on Monday it was cloudy, and on Tuesday the heavens opened and a fine rain helped along the crops of the farmers. If it did not rain they would not get the money for the wheat, and the exhibitors would be minus some nickels. Then on Wednesday it was cloudy and the day after every film worker was toiling again. So much for our climate—just a mere half holiday to give the cutters and scenarioists a chance to catch up.

One good diversion the photoplayers of this locality have is the good fellowship dinner on Wednesday evening when the elite of the studios fare forth to partake of a feast, and to enjoy a good smoke and chat. Last week the spread was that of a kingly kind. Max Asher was the mystifying toast general, and he carried off the honors with a comedy night of fun. Max is of German descent, and every member, in honor of the toaster's nativity, wore chin "viskers" and amputated derby hats. The gathering looked like a horseshoe table of a thousand twins. Everyone looked the same, and the thousand and three laughs that were made filled the diners with delight. Not satisfied with good jokes, musical numbers and other entertainment, the comical Asher borrowed a pair of tangoers who performed some wonderfully clever dances, to the great admiration of the assemblage.

Tom Santchi, of Selig fame, has been awarded his prize. He is now telling Kathlyn Williams what to do in a big feature drama out at the Zoo.

Hugh A. Saxon, who has been a newspaper editor, actor and general business man, has become identified with Keystone, and is acting as assistant manager. By the way, this studio is about the busiest place in the city, and this week the whole stage area was filled with various comedians, all hard at work on Keystones.

Another motorist has been added to the fold. Wallace Reid has invested in a "40" of racy lines, which he will pilot himself. He traded in a smaller machine, and is now as happy as a cup winner.

Out at the Loftus Features Studio in Hollywood, a new stage is being added to the already large area. This place is on the move. They have a lemon tree outside the window, from which they pick lemons and make lemonade inside the bungalow office. Some speed to California producers. Yes, and down at the Balboa place, E. D. Horkheimer steps out the back door of the bungalow office and picks radishes and lettuce with which to make noon salad.

David M. Hartford, who has been known on the stage as a great director, and who has been producing for Zodiac, has left that company.

Here's something that might interest a few exhibitors: The Rosemary Theater, on the pier at Ocean Park, run by the Raymond Amusement Company, has probably the only ventilating system of its kind anywhere. The building is on a pier, under which the surf is always rushing. A strong breeze is ever blowing. Small registers allow the breezes to blow, up through the floor, the cool refreshing salt air, which thoroughly ventilates the playhouse. There is nothing to worry about. The system cares for itself.

Phillips Smalley was shot in the arm and was laid up in bed for two days last week. He is all right now, but says that the bullet stung.

Milton H. Fahrney, who has directed many plays for the Albuquerque Company here, has closed with that concern and will take a brief rest before opening with another company.

Jessalyn Van Trump, of Mutual fame, is sick with an eye trouble that keeps her shut up in a dark room. She hopes to be out again soon.

Blazoned on billboards is the announcement of the opening of the old and famous Auditorium "Theater Beautiful," as a down-to-the-second moving picture house, by W. H. Clune. May 4th, the initial bill will be offered the public. This playhouse has for years been the home of grand opera, great musical events and all highbrow entertainments. The passing of the place is regarded as only one more step in the progress of the life picture. It is one of the largest theaters here, the building itself being ten stories tall, with a court for light in the middle of the structure.

Dolly Larkin, who was seen in Lubin films, has joined the Frontier, as has Florine Garland, who was in vaudeville.

Many new small theaters for photo-films have been started here, and more are to be built. In and around this city, building of this kind is most always going on. Business is good everywhere, and all exhibitors are well satisfied, so it seems.

Besides the film folk who work at Santa Monica, there are nearly a hundred players from Los Angeles who live at that beach resort. Swimming is the order of the day down there, and everyone enjoys it immensely.

The Bosworth Company, headed by the man whose name graces the films, leaves next week for the north—San Francisco, Seattle, Victoria and Ketchican, Canada—to do some more exteriors for "Odyssey of the North." There will be fifteen in the party and they expect to be gone some time.

A visit to the new General Film Company's offices, occupying the entire fourth floor of the Loewin Building, was very interesting. Everyone was most cordial and every nook and corner of the elegant headquarters was thrown open for inspection. The new place is large and airy, and every person who works there wears a smile of satisfaction. The vault is a feature of the new location, having a capacity of over 5,000 reels. This large space will suffice for some time to come.

The Selig outfit from Prescott, Ariz., arrived here this week. Tom Mix is here and is already busy with a big picture. The whole camp was moved on the train—animals, camping outfits, coaches, and everything.

Charles Bennett, who was with Vitagraph some time ago, but who quit work and rested for a month, has joined the Keystoners, and is busy doing funny characters with Marie Dressler and Mack Sennett.

Actually 1,000 extras were used recently in a big Broncho picture, "The Wrath of the Gods," portraying the volcanic eruptions in Japan. Most of the employees were Japanese people. The picture was very spectacular, being staged on the beach near the Santa Monica camp.

CLARKE IRVINE.

JIM CORBETT TO APPEAR IN BLACHÉ FEATURES.

Frequent mysterious visits of James J. Corbett to the Blaché studios at Fort Lee, New Jersey, have resulted in an arrangement whereby the ex-champion heavyweight fighter of the world is to appear in several big film productions to be launched in the near future.

Mr. Blaché will stage the dramas in collaboration with Mr. Corbett and "Gentleman Jim" will be surrounded by a cast composed of a carefully selected group of artists including several members of the companies who appeared in the original stage presentations of the different Corbett plays.

The new half-million dollar company recently formed by Herbert Blaché for the producing of special features under the name of the U. S. Amusement Corporation, will control the Corbett photodramas in addition to several other well known Broadway successes shortly to be announced.

Foreign Trade Notes

PARIS LETTER.

(Special Correspondence to THE WORLD.)

CONSTERNATION reigns in the French moving picture world on account of the fact that the Counsel of State has upheld the right of censorship exercised by certain mayors of France with regard to moving picture theaters. The Counsel of State's action officially gives every mayor the power to be a film censor. There are thirty-six thousand mayors in the country, and if each one thinks fit to use his power of censorship what the public will see at the movies will depend on the views of thirty-six thousand film censors. There is to be a great protest on the part of exhibitors, renters and manufacturers. It should be mentioned that the censorship, as regards the stage, literature and the press, was abolished in 1902.

Among the candidates for the post of director of the state subsidized Theater Odeon is Gabriel Kaiser, proprietor of the Cinerama cinema and founder of the Gab Ka Cinema on the Boulevard des Italiens. In a letter to the Minister of Public Instruction, Gabriel Kaiser says that his proposition is to give a three-hour show. Two hours of moving pictures with music and singing and one hour of stage plays. The program will be changed fifty-two times during the year. The ambitious director states that he will forego the subsidy and staff and give the entire profits to the state. For generosity at least, this offer will surely become historic.

That novelty attraction, Life Targets, which has been on sale in France for some time, is now to be seen at the Gaumont Place Hippodrome. The apparatus is installed in the attractions hall and draws big crowds during the intermissions. Curiously enough, Leon Gaumont was one of the first men to be offered the rights of the invention in France and at the time he refused to handle the proposition.

Raymond Sprecher, representative of the M. P. Sales Agency, made an important announcement last week to the effect that henceforth all films handled by the M. P. Sales Company will be rented direct to exhibitors on the district rights plan. Shopmen hiring from Sprecher will be assured of getting only exclusive films for their neighborhood.

Walter de Marney, the explorer, is presenting a fine series of hunt pictures at the Anglo-American Cinema rue de Clichy. These pictures show lion, leopard, hippopotamus, crocodile, rhinoceros, hyena and zebra hunts, as well as highly interesting and instructive views of native life in the Belgian Congo. Not the least attractive pictures in the show are those showing the native dances. The expedition on which the films were taken traveled six thousand kilometres, from the Congo to Zanzibar, and the total expense amounted to something like $200,000. Many well-known Parisians have seen the pictures, including the Duc de Morny—a well-known hunter of big game.

Messrs. de Marney, Boivin and Mandement, directors of the Anglo-American Cinema, have purchased from B. B. Pictures, Limited, of London, the rights for France, of Alfred West's pictures, "Our Navy," and these films were shown in Paris for the first time during the visit of the King and Queen of England.

As a special topical attraction, the Pathé Journal Theater screened "l'Entente Cordiale," a film which was made some years ago by Max Linder and the late Harry Fragson.

The Northern Company's picture, Atlantis, has made good here. It was featured at many picture theaters, including the Gaumont Palace Hippodrome.

Max Linder, in collaboration with Max Aghion, has written a vaudeville revue for the Gaité Rochechouart. Among the moving pictures are those of a chase through the streets of Paris and a duel between two women. The latter episode is first acted most realistically on the stage, then the compere announces that "it was only for the cinema," whereupon the hall is plunged into darkness and in response to the query, "Are you ready?" a voice from the operating box at the rear of the hall shouts "Yes!" and the identical scene is shown on the screen. The whole of the clever show bristles with allusions to the movies and Max Linder.

Official statistics just issued show that Paris picture theaters took, in entrances, over a million and a half dollars during 1913.

Doctor Major Billet, of the Val de Grace Military Hospital School, is making use of moving pictures of surgical operations for instructing students. All the pictures were especially taken by the Gaumont Company, who placed an operator and the necessary apparatus at the doctor's disposal. Doctor Major Billet says: "The results obtained have exceeded my expectations in spite of the fact that we only have half of the films we would like to have. The pupils view our collections twice. The first occasion, at the time of the professor's classes, and the second time at the conference which precedes the practical work in the operating theater.

Sarah Bernhardt has been telling a press representative that during her American tour of "The Lady of the Camelias," her company was followed by a moving picture show, featuring the same play in film. Sometimes posters and halls of the two enterprises were next to each other—"Nevertheless," said the great actress, "both buildings were packed, only at one the price was from fifteen to twenty sous, while at the other people paid fifteen or twenty francs."

Madame Bernhardt says she acts for the camera as on the stage. She considers the cinemetograph wonderful for natural scenes, but that reproductions of plays cannot be successfully done. All the same, she implied, in the interview, that she was disappointed at not being asked to play in several pieces in which she has made famous successes. Madam Bernhardt believes in artistes for the movies and artistes for the stage, and that the sooner all photoplayers begin to specialize, the better for the screen.

Edmond Rostand's celebrated plays are to be presented as photoplays at the Chatelet Theater this summer. Henry Hertz, manager of the Porte Saint Martin Theater, and sole owner of the film rights of Rostand's work has arranged with Director Fontaines, of the Chatelet, to show a series of films, including "l'Aiglon" at the Chatelet Theater during June, July and August. The principal stars of the Comedie Française will appear in these films. Incidentally, it may be remarked that this is the first serious attempt here to present important films in a fitting manner.

James Downie, of the Universal Company, is highly enthusiastic over King Baggot's Paris masterpiece, "Absinthe," and a big sale is anticipated.

Pierre Decourcelle, one of the presidents of the S. C. A. G. L., acted as expert in a lawsuit brought by Leon Sazie, author of "Zigomar," against the manufacturers of moving pictures bearing the same title. Plaintiff claimed that the producers had infringed upon his rights by filming a Zigomar adventure, of which he was not the author and that the writer of the scenario had not read his serial. M. Decourcelle reported that, in his opinion, the film differed from the romance, but, he added, that the additional scenes conceived by the producer were not more or less daring than those of Leon Sazie's imagination, and, in fact, the moving picture man had displayed great ingenuity. The Third Tribunal Chamber decreed that the defendants had infringed regarding Zigomar, but that they had not published an absurd film. The author was awarded $1,200 damages, and the producers were forbidden to publish the film in question under penalty of $100 for each breach.

BRITISH NOTES.

(Special Correspondence to THE WORLD.)

THE observations of a recent Consular report from Washington upon the adaptation of moving pictures to commerce make interesting reading. A word of commendation is given to a Hull engineering firm upon their enterprise in erecting in their works a private theater for the exhibition of films illustrating the firm's products, an expedient stated to be more convenient than showing customers around their works. But this is not an isolated instance. For several months an important firm of real estate agents have exhibited to prospective buyers, moving pictures of large landed estates they have had for disposal, and the economy effected this way by obviating perhaps a series of visits with clients to the north of Scotland, can be readily appreciated, especially by the vendor. Another application comes from a Tyneside shipyard where moving picture films of cargo boats were recently dispatched to the East Indies for the benefit of a firm that did not think it worth while to send a representative to England to inspect the vessels.

The second International Kinematograph Exhibition has been definitely fixed to open August 29, for two weeks, at Olympia, London. E. Schofield, of 22 Great Portland Street, London, W., is again the secretary and will receive applications for exhibits from foreign manufacturers.

British exhibitors, renters and manufacturers' associations, have joined up with the Society of Authors for the purpose of forming a joint board to protect their allied interests in matters of copyright.

The Cunard Film Company, a comparatively new British organization, has recruited the services of W. Livingstone, a producer with more than a few American successes to his credit.

The process of renovating films is resolving itself into a distinct department of the moving picture industry. A company is now working in London which does nothing else but treat films with a special varnish claimed to prolong their strength for six months more than the ordinary time. Another operation for eliminating rainstorm has been introduced from Germany. An old or scratched film is taken and the gelatine side polished by means of a disc of leather or fabric rapidly revolving. The emulsion side is treated in the usual way with benzine or methylated spirit. Films revived this way cannot be distinguished from new.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

House Organs.

NO form of advertising seems to have proven so generally successful as the house organ of the theater or circuit. It is the most direct as well as the most effective, when properly conducted, but in spite of the fact that there are several hundred House organs, there are few that really merit praise.

Three years ago, when this department was first started, there were no house organs of any consequence. Now there are many that return an even greater percentage of profit on the investment than direct newspaper advertising. They are, of themselves, newspapers, and as such are eagerly read. On the other hand there are too many that are written with a paste brush. The pen is mightier than the sword, but the paste brush is a very bad third, and it is scarcely possible to work up much enthusiasm with all second-hand stuff. A certain percentage of reprint is not only allowable but necessary, but it should not all be reprint, because then it has no direct local application. Many of those who want to get out a good publication are unable to do so because they cannot write good stuff. They clip from this paper and the house organ of the service they take and let it go at that. It seldom occurs to them that they might hire a man and when the thought does come it is generally dismissed on the proposition that it would cost too much money.

Does it?

It is not what a program costs, but what it brings, that really counts. Suppose a manager pays $9.50 for a thousand programs. The issue is so dead that few read it and a still smaller percentage of the circulation is favorably impressed. Does the investment of $9.50 show a profit or a loss? Perhaps thirty patrons have been brought to the house which can be either $1.50 or $3 according to the price of admission. This is not a profit. It merely reduces the loss by that sum.

Now suppose that some newspaper man is paid ten dollars to take charge of the sheet. He gets a better typographical display, he makes the sheet look more like something worth while, and he soon gets the trick of writing the sort of stuff that attracts and holds patrons. He brings the cost of the sheet up to $29.50. He brings $40 worth of business. There is now a profit of $10.50 instead of a loss. More than this, there is a tendency to hold the patronage already gained, to confirm the regulars in their fandom.

But perhaps the house cannot afford to make this investment. Look at it in another way. Now you have something to sell to the outsider. You can go to the local merchant, show him that you can give him a certain circulation in the precise locality in which he most desires circulation. You may have tried this before. You took your program and went around with it and asked for advertisements. The merchants looked it over and declined to come in. In the most casual inspection of the sheet they could see that it held no interest for the reader. They could not get interested. They argued that others would not be interested. Even the corner grocer can tell a bad egg from a good one.

But Be Careful.

But mind you, not every newspaper man can turn out the right sort of a sheet. It is not the fact that he is a newspaper man that counts. The chances are in favor of the newspaper man getting the best results because he is used to writing for the public, but it may be that some one in the neighborhood, some dyed-in-the-wool fan, can write better for other fans than the newspaper writer. There has been more than one instance of the pianist, the operator or even an usher getting out a better sheet than a trained writer who does not take the trouble to study his house. On the other hand there is grave danger of getting the tone of the publication too cheap.

There is a pretty definite scheme of values, and this schedule runs about as follows:

Your patron.
Your house.
Your program.
Your players.
Pictures in general.

Your patron is the most important for it is the patron, regular or prospective, whom you want to reach. Get matter that interests your patron. This does not mean a lot of stuff about John Jones visiting Sam Smith, or the fact that Bill Brown is seen with suspicious frequency in the vicinity of Miss Sally Sprague and Green, the jeweler, carries a fine line of engagement rings.

Instead make your patron feel that you value his presence, that you want to cater to his wants, desire to make him feel at home, will be glad to receive suggestions. Make your patron feel that he is of more importance than the coin he hands in at the box office. Don't slop over, but in all issues have one or more tactfully worded paragraphs that suggest that you realise that were it not for the patronage you would not be able to run a house.

Then talk about your house. Modestly brag about it. Tell what you have done and what you hope to do. Play up the good points of your house. Don't run the same paragraphs over and over again, think up new stuff to say and if you run out of ideas, paint the front of the house again and talk about that. Hustle to give the impression that you are always hard at work doing something for Kind Patron, but don't tell about the pipe organ you are going to put in next month unless you've ordered one. Stick to facts that can be proven.

As to the program, you want to tell them just what you are going to have and when you are going to have it. Don't say you are going to have a great three-reel production on Friday. If that's all you know, how do you know it is going to be great. Instead tell them you shall have "Wiped Off the Earth" on Friday and quote from the trade press to show how great the story is. Then if the reel does not come up to expectation you can blame the papers, but you'll be fatter and happier if you get a good idea of what it is you are going to show before you advertise it.

Tell all you can about the program, but tell it briefly and not to the exclusion of anything else, and do not feel that the publication of the synopsis is all you need. It's about the last thing you need. Tell what it is about but leave enough mystery to make the film interesting when it comes along. The best way to handle the program is to take one or more pages of the sheet for the program by days. Write one to six or eight lines about each feature and if you have a split-reel use both titles. If you have features, write a paragraph to go elsewhere in the issue about that one particular reel and mention at that time the day and date.

Next to the film, the players in those films are the most important. If you have no Famous Players service, use an occasional line about Miss Pickford, but do not give her a page and ignore the people who play on your screen. Don't give several pages to Licensed plays and players if you use Universal service, nor spread stories about the Universal if you run the Mutual program. To some this may seem unnecessary advice, but the programs that come in day by day prove that some such caution is needed. We get programs that mention one program on the program page and are filled with the talk of other plays and players for the rest of the issue. If you run Licensed stuff, Miss Hawley or Miss Young or any of these are ten times as important as Miss Sweet, Miss Cunard or anyone on the Independent side, and the reverse holds good. Make your people interested in the players you offer and not in the players that they can find down the street.

And last of all speak of pictures in general, in the progress of the business, in new uses found for film, in uplift movements followed and all that sort of thing. Prove that pictures are not merely the attractions of a five or ten cent show, but that the exhibition end, while the largest, is but a single phase of a many sided business, and your patrons will regard pictures with greater respect.

Appearance.

And be careful of your layout and general make up. Type too large or too small for a page is awkward. Head type out of proportion to the body type looks rotten. Five and six columns for straight reading matter are hard to follow, but an advertisement in a cramped space loses its effect. Any good printer can tell you what is what. Follow his advice and then check that up by sending several issues in to this department. Give time and thought to your publication, for this is as much a part of yourself as a clean collar or a fresh shave. You would not go three years without a haircut, but you'll let a program go out that looks worse than the Hairy Wonder because it has been thrown together with never a thought of the general effect. If you must buy display type to get a distinctive sheet, buy type. If you need a heading cut, have one drawn. And do all this yourself. Don't expect your printer, however good he may be, to do your thinking for you. Think with him. Talk things over with him. Try new combinations until you have it right and then stick to what seems to be the best.

Perhaps More Full Face.

The program of the Roseville (Newark, N. J.), Scenario, is a clean looking little sheet, for Salo Ansbach does things in clean-cut fashion. One unusual feature is the "running in" of the program for the day. That is to say, there is not a fresh paragraph for each subject on the day's bill, but only one paragraph for each day. It would perhaps be better to play up the various titles in a small full face, using upper and lower case, instead of setting them in all capitals. Another good scheme would be to date the days. At present the program looks something like this:

MONDAY—"SOPHIE PICKS A DEAD ONE." Special Feature in two parts, is one of those excruciatingly funny Western Comedies, featuring Margaret Joslyn and Victor Potel of Snakeville. "THE HUNTED ANIMAL" is the second of "THE MAN WHO DISAPPEARED SERIES," by Richard Washburn Child, featuring Marc MacDermott and produced by the Edison Co. in collaboration with The Popular Magazine.

It would look better and be more informative if done in this way:

MONDAY
April 27.

Sophie Picks a Dead One. Special feature in two parts; one of those excruciatingly funny Essanay Western Comedies, featuring Margaret Joslyn and Victor Potel. The Hunted Animal, the second of "The Man Who Disappeared" series, by Richard Washburne Child. Featuring Marc McDermott, and produced by the Edison Company in collaboration with The Popular Magazine.

This will play the matter up better and not add materially to the cost. We like Mr. Ansbach's idea of a calendar on the back page giving the full details of the series and feature stories offered by the house. It tells the audience what to expect and when to expect it.

The front page is especially well done. There is no extra heavy type, but the lines stand out in proper relation to each other and there is no bit of information lacking.

Colored Covers.

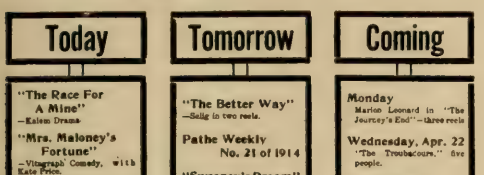
Hennegan and Company are issuing a second set of their offset color covers for programs 6½ by 9¼, the proper size to take the usual six by nine page. The covers are printed on sound stock and, being produced by the million, they can be sold at a small cost considering the character of the work. The program is unprinted save for the color design and a color frame on the back, with plenty of space for the house printing. There are four designs in the series. They sell for from $4 a thousand to $81.25 in 25,000 lots. Even if they are too costly for your regular advertising, they are just the thing for souvenir booklets or special advertising of any sort.

A Problem.

Here is a letter from G. B. Richardson, Palestine, Texas:

> Have been trying for a long time to get up one form for our newspaper ad, and stick to it. Enclosed is my last idea of a form for our regular newspaper ad, and am sending it to you for your criticism and advice. This is a three column, three inch ad, and it gives the program for to-day, to-morrow, and a column for the coming features, but can the form be changed and made better? I am under the impression that this same form can be made into a neat little ad by making a few changes in it, but just what change it needs I am at a loss to know. Seems that some change could be made where I have the 5 and 10 cents, and on the other side where have "The Photo Playhouse Ahead."

And here is his advertisement:



Surely!

The first impression this advertisement gives is that there is too much six-point rule. It is too black. It is not a homogeneous advertisement and it is not quite three advertisements. This is what we would do:

In the first place we would have a special design made for the line, The Best Theater, either a heavy script or some clear but individual and distinctive letter: something that could be used not only in the advertisement, but on all the house printing, on the house sign and wherever else the name of the house was to be used. A single sketch of the design should be used for cuts of various sizes, but for the advertisement one should be made about the size of the line as it stands.

We would put this cut at the top of the advertisement instead of at the bottom. We would take all that six point rule and use it to make a box around the entire advertisement. Now, below the name of the house, we would make three boxes, using brass rule something like the American Type Founders' 1233, which is a three-point double line. To avoid the broken corners, since the boxes are to be always the same size, it might be well to have them brazed. Each box should be 13 ems wide and about 17 ems deep outside measurement. The words, "Today," "Tomorrow" and "Coming" should be set in eighteen point inside the box and cut off from the rest of that box by a six-em dash not thicker than one point.

In the upper corners the matter now appearing below can be run in and with this arrangement there should be space for a six-point italic line along the bottom to carry any special emphasis.

If Mr. Richardson tries this, we would like to see how it comes out, because we think it will make rather a neat advertisement and become a sort of trade mark for the house.

Keeps Off Competition.

H. E. Brown, of the Photoplay Theater, Fairport Harbor, Ohio, believes in keeping out competition by giving so good a show that any would-be intruder will realize the foolishness of trying to come in and make a fight. That's the way to do it. If you are so fortunate as to have a town all to yourself, run so good a show that when the opposition does come along it cannot get your patrons by giving and maintaining a better program, and the best time to fight opposition is before it gets there. The stunt of running six months' stuff merely because the patron must take that or nothing is a short-sighted policy. In line with this policy Mr. Brown runs a house program "not only to get the business, but to create new business," as he puts it. He writes:

> I get the copy of our program for the week on Saturday morning. I have to prepare the copy of the "Weekly" by three o'clock that afternoon. The night man does the composing in the printery, and leaves the proofs at a drug store for me and I get them at eleven o'clock as I come from the theater. Monday morning the forms are put together and the papers are delivered to me Tuesday forenoon; folded and distributed Tuesday afternoon. Generally I go with the boys and see that it is done "to the dot." People invariably are glad to get these, many times coming to the door and receiving them by hand. Handbills are seldom looked at.

"Going with the boys" is about the only way to see that the distribution is properly done, particularly now that the baseball season is on. We would like the program better if it carried some general stuff. It is a small four-pager that gives as many of the synopses for the week as possible, and little else. It should have the program laid out by days, or as much of it as is certain, and there should be at least one page, if not two, for general matter; paragraphs about the house, the players and pictures in general that will interest the patron and clinch fandom. The general matter will make for more general interest and cause the paper to be even more widely read. The paper is neatly gotten up and we believe that a printer who can do such good straight work will be able to show how to make the sheet look even better.

It would be better, too, not to give the full synopsis, but to rouse the interest and then leave the outcome uncertain. There is no use in producers striving to maintain suspense if this suspense is lost, because the spectator knows in advance just what the outcome of every picture will be.

Ladies Only.

The Princess Theater, Wheeling, West Virginia, just opened, announces in a souvenir booklet that at the matinee seven rows of the best seats are reserved for the exclusive use of the ladies. This should make an appeal if for no other reason than to show the gentler sex that their patronage is especially desired. In addition the booklet says:

> Our advertising will not be misleading in any respect, and we want the public to realize that any statement we make regarding our entertainments can be implicitly relied upon.
> We want to make the Princess your favorite place of amusement, and to do so, we insure to you safety, comfort, courteous treatment and first-class pictures, accompanied by good music, and at a reasonable admission charge.

That's a pretty good business creed, particularly that portion about misleading advertising.

Another new idea the booklet offers is the free ticket for the opening. Instead of offering a free ticket for the opening performance, it is announced that each person who attends any performance the first three days will be given a ticket good at any time after the third day. This gets them back, and getting them back is one of the important things either to a new house or an old one.

The book is a nice production written without bombast, but presenting every feature of the house in its best light.

In Repertoire.

Raymond Pawley, of the Lyric Theater, Asbury Park, New Jersey, as well as the Famous Players Exchange, of this city, sends in a program of the Lyric which he thinks is the first effort to present one actress for an entire week in a repertoire of plays. It was a Mary Pickford week with five multiples in use and cast precisely as repertoire is used, the same play being shown both at matinee and night of the same day only twice.

Mr. Pawley apologizes for the size of the type used, saying that the printer used a larger face than he had asked for. We are of the opinion that the printer is on the right side. The pages are by no means overcrowded and an all round good job has been done.

Cuts are used on the front and back pages with the bill for the week across the inner pages and the hours of performance and the prices, about all the information needed.

The vital fact is that Mr. Pawley did not overload the program in an effort to get the five synopses and a lot of other stuff in. He tells enough, but just enough. Advertising is not a game to see how many thousand words you can get into a given space. A lot of advertisers do not realize this.

Going Along.

George A. Bleich, in sending in his first program, said the second would be better. Having said it, he made good, which is a way he has, but we think that he needs some more "house stuff." He gives most of his space to the coming films. We hold to the theory that it is as much to the benefit of the house to talk about the house as the attractions. Mr. Bleich writes so convincingly that we want to get stuff to cut out of his program to put in here. Take this, for example:

> If there is a photoplay theater anywhere that projects a better, clearer, or steadier picture than this one, or is better managed, maintains a larger or more talented orchestra, is kept more sanitary, or affords its patrons better satisfaction, I will thank you to let me know where that house is located. I want to see it.
> GEO. A. BLEICH, Prop.

That gives the idea that Mr. Bleich is doing the best he can and will do better if better can be found, but this should be built up on. Mr. Bleich can as well afford to talk about the Empress Theater, Owensboro, Kentucky, that is going to be in Owensboro for some years to come, as to give half a page to a six-reel feature that will be in town only one day. Of course the town knows about the Empress, but keep on telling them, point out the various excellencies.

Just because a house does not smell bad, it does not necessarily follow that a patron will realize that it is because a couple of hundred dollars have been invested in an exhaust fan. He would notice an odor if there was one, just as he will realize any other discomfort, but he is not likely to notice the absence of discomfort. Tell him why he is comfortable and he will appreciate his comfort the more.

A number of portrait and scene cuts help to make the pages attractive, but the paper on which the program is printed is so good that fifty or sixty screen cuts should not be used. We think that the Empress Herald is going to develop into one of the best.

Not Just That.

The Cameraphone Theater's bulletin in the issue for 347 Fifth Avenue, gives a list of music to be played through the week with a descriptive line. A late issue announces "Reverie—Moszkowsky—Will sober you up." Evidently it means that the selection will induce solemn thoughts and not what it seems to say at first glance to say.

A Bit Careless.

The Shawmut Theater, Roxbury, Massachusetts, used Louis Reeves Harrison's able story in this paper in advertising "Judith of Bethulia." Evidently the story was clipped from the paper and sent over to the printer without preparation, for twice during the story appears in eighteen-point bold type the words "Scene from 'Judith of Bethulia' (Biograph)." The highly intelligent printer not only set the captions for the two cuts which illustrated the article (and which were not reproduced in the advertisement), but set them in big black type. We have our own idea of a printer who will make a break like that, but we would suggest to the Shawmut a little more care in the preparation of copy.

It is pretty poor printing all the way through; not at all up to this house's former mark. The copy reads well, but the display is very poor.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

At the Inquest.

EVIDENTLY some of the Inquesters have automobiles, for there was a rather scanty gathering around the table at Keene's Chop House Monday, April 27. Not more than thirty sat in at one of the best meetings of the season. Monte Katterjohn, who had promised to arrange to have the next meeting in the Universal projection rooms, was not there, so that festival is off for the season. E. M. Wickes, who complained at the last meeting that Monte talked too much (though he was not willing to talk himself), was also absent.

With four half-reel comedies as a text, the Coroner pointed out that even the most foolish had a real plot, enlarging on a late letter from the Keystone editor. It was a matter of surprise to some that Melies' Knockabout Kelly has a plot, but it was shown that there was a definite start and finish, and therefore was a plot, shadowy in the extreme, but none the less a real plot.

It was agreed that the newly born child is getting a bit worn out as a heart interest theme, particularly when the hour-old youngster has a full head of hair and possibly a couple of teeth. The same reel that featured this precocious youngster also gave some marked examples of action too quickly following, such as a departure from a southern home and the immediate arrival at a New England parsonage. It was pointed out that this was probably the fault of slovenly editing of the film, but it served as a horrible example of what should be avoided.

It was also demonstrated that a fiction story that should go into three reels was mystifying when shown only in two.

It was urged on the Inquesters that they give their imaginations plenty of exercise and one of the speakers declared that he might think of forty or fifty ideas before getting something to write about and that the idea rejected today might be the one developed tomorrow, or next week or six months afterward, the ideas being brought up constantly, each time gaining form, until they are ready to be made into photoplays.

Mention was also made of the fact that an idea, in itself not yet available, might be made to yield other ideas and Dr. Stockton told of his script, not yet sold, which had yielded nine salable ideas.

During the discussion Dr. Reed and John William Kellette decided that they would not go to Mexico just yet, and this important point having been settled, adjournment was had, but not before Miss Davis had denied that she was not the frivolous-minded person the Coroner accused her of being, even if she had won a dollar on a half-interest in a baseball pool.

There will be inquests on May 11 and 25. The latter will be the final meeting of the season.

Teachers and Experts.

An expert is a man who knows all about a certain subject. A teacher is one who can impart knowledge to others. Experts are not always teachers. Because a man has been a successful photoplay actor or writer or editor, it does not necessarily follow that he is also a good teacher.

Munch on this fact for a while before you sign contracts.

Keystone Comedy.

Here is a letter from Craig Hutchinson, editor for Keystone, who says precisely what we have been saying right along. Listen to him:

> Am taking the liberty of writing you regarding plots for Keystone, which you can pass along to your proteges if you like.
> Frankly, Keystone has purchased very few outside scripts, not because they did not want to, but because we have had such difficulty in finding stories which coincided with Keystone's peculiar style. Most writers make the mistake of submitting a series of humorous incidents in the belief that they have a plot. This error is doubtless conceived by the rapidity in which Keystone comedies travel on the screen, and which causes observers to overlook the situations in following the by play.
>
> True, we are accused of not having much of a story in our pictures, but I think you will find that when the mass of comedy business is scraped away, and the bare plot left exposed, a genuine situation is sticking around in it somewhere. This, however, is usually so skillfully and humorously covered by Mack Sennett's directing, that a careless observer is inclined to overlook it.
> It is for this reason that we find so few scripts to suit us, and might add further that the stronger dramatic situation we can get hold of, the better comedy can be made of it. The old axiom, "It's only a step from the sublime to the ridiculous" holds good nowhere any stronger than in a Keystone comedy, and simply because the most powerful dramatic situation twisted slightly, yields the richest comedy.

If everyone knew what a plot was, there would be little use in running this department, for there would remain only the purely technical side. A plot starts to get somewhere and it does, and how it gets there is the story. If it has no place to go to, there would be no story. Suppose that you went down to the race track. The starter lines up four crack horses and gets them going. Now suppose that one goes the right way of the track, another the wrong way, a third heads across the infield and the fourth jumps the fence and starts down the road. Would that sort of a "race" interest you? You want to see the four horses start for the finish line and get there and you want the horse you most particularly fancy to get there first.

In the same way you cannot get interested in a story that starts for nowhere and never gets there. If incident were all, there would be no need of scripts. They could make a couple of miles of chase and chop it into the proper lengths. The reason why editors ask for plots is that they need stories told in comedy action and they want you to help think up ideas. A story is a complete series of incidents having a start, a middle action and a finish and if there is no finish the story is not complete. Even in the very early days of photoplay the chase stuff had a plot. Take the old story wherein a ball was knocked out of a scene. It rolls through several hundred feet of action, with the entire cast chasing after it and knocking over apple carts and men carrying plaster statues and then someone catches the ball.

There the knocking of the ball out of the scene is the start, the chase the middle action and the capture of the ball the finish, for all of the middle action has led toward the capture of the ball. All of the happenings have led to that end, and the story cannot be ended until the ball is captured, giving the happy ending; or something happens that makes it utterly impossible to capture the ball then or at some subsequent time, in which case the story has (technically) an unhappy ending.

There is little to the plot of the ball story, but it has all of the marks of a complete plot and if the action was cut off with the ball still rolling you would be just as dissatisfied, in a way, as though you had seen a tense drama that did not work to a definite conclusion.

Here is another way of looking at a plot. The start of the story asks a question. The climax answers it. Take the brief outline of a detective story:

Here is the criminal.
Here is the detective.
Does the detective capture the criminal or suffer defeat, and how?

The "how" is the story proper. The question and answer together form the plot.

Jim and George love May.
Which gets her, and how?

Always there is the "how" that is the essential part of the story. If you have no "how" you have no story.

It's easy to tell what a story is. What an interesting story is is a more complex problem, but at least you have no excuse for writing merely a series of incidents, nor yet for not seeing that Keystones have plots.

Get a Seal.

It seems that seals are going to be the fashion. We've been using a seal ever since we started in to write. It is not one of those things you can lick and stick on the first page of a script. It is not all gold leaf and embossing. It is our name and address printed in six-point gothic type in the middle of each sheet of paper. It is the only seal we have ever used on either short stories, magazine articles, newspaper stuff or photoplays and it is the only seal we shall use from now until the time our executor sells our typewriter.

That seal is the guarantee that we are trying to deliver the goods; that we are not going to rush into print or a lawyer's office every ten days or two weeks; that we shall make a noise like a sane person and that we shall expect to be paid.

And somehow that seal has proven itself sufficient for twenty-three years, and we are going to keep on using that and only that. Why not try the same sort of seal for yourself? You'll need no other if you deal only with reputable concerns.

Detail.

Someone points out that Mrs. Breuil in her Tap! Tap! Tap! uses two scene markings for the same scene, and says it with the air of one who catches greatness napping.

As we have said before, accuracy is essential, but so long as the scene is clearly indicated it does not matter whether or not the precise wording is used each time the scene is mentioned. "Library in Jones' house," and "Jones' library," mean precisely the same thing, and if it is the only library shown it is sufficient to say library.

It is worrying over these little finicalities that hold some writers back. Detail is excellent and very necessary, but it does not rise superior to plot and sometimes an excess of care in these small points detracts from the thought that should be given the evolution of plot into interesting scenes.

Few of the really big writers observe the nicety of phrasing that a certain type of amateur seems to regard as a necessity, and it seldom happens that these technique purists ever get beyond technique. Precision is one thing and fussiness is another.

Rejections.

A correspondent writes very interestingly on rejections and suggests that since editors are supposed to be able to tell that a script is poor from the way the stamps are affixed, that they use this inspirational method of first reading by rejecting the stuff that from the envelope would seem to be unfit.

This is one way of looking at it, but we do not think it will find favor with most writers and certainly not with many editors. Most editors are careful and painstaking and are looking for people to help along. The envelope with two cents due or with three cents instead of four affixed or any of the other earmarks of the tyro probably does contain work of no value, but now and then the hopelessly impossible script may suggest that the writer has vivid though crude imagination and the editor, even though he rejects the story, may go to some pains to tell the writer what he lacks and suggest means of bettering the product.

Lots of beginners probably will refuse to believe it, but the average editor is far more anxious to purchase a script than to reject it, but he wants to have in what he buys at least the germ of an original plot. If he reads a thousand plays briefly and marks one man who gives promise, he feels that he has accomplished something. It doesn't seem that way when scripts keep coming back and coming back, but always remember that at the other end of the line is a patient man or woman eagerly looking for the first signs of merit in your work, and keep on plugging.

Work.

If we had anything to do with the lawgiving we would make it a capital offense to try and sell a photoplay until at least twenty-five had been written. If we were to start to draft this law after reading some of the letters we get, we would make it fifty or even a hundred practise scripts. We "dashed off" a script yesterday in forty-three minutes; a half-reel, but a fully developed idea. Back of that forty-three minute performance lies years of hard work, actual years of twenty-four hour days spent at the typewriter pounding out work some of which we knew would never sell. And we did not time the writing period because we wanted to see how quickly we could write one, but we noted the time when we started to see if there was time to write a play before keeping an appointment and at the end to see if the time had been exceeded.

The script that you write today is going to help you out of a hole perhaps ten years from now. It is the only thing that is going to help you to last that ten years. You cannot learn to write scripts through inhalation or sub-cutaneous injection, nor yet by reading a book or taking a school course or having friends tell you what a fine story you have written. The only way you can ever become expert in any line from chopping wood to writing novels is through experience and practise for practise alone can bring perfection.

Every day brings letters that start "I have written a script but as yet have not succeeded in selling it." "I have written eight scripts in the past year, but none of them have sold." "I have sent my story to nine companies but all have returned it. The Gump, the Wump and the Stump companies said it lacked strength. Can you suggest a possible market for it?" There cannot be any possible market for any man who has written one script or even eight. No athlete would row one mile or even eight in a racing shell and then compete for the diamond sculls. No athlete would run a hundred yards once or a dozen times and then try for the Olympic team. No vocalist would take eight singing lessons and apply for a position in grand opera, but writers do one script or eight or ten and wonder why it is they do not sell. Perhaps it is not to be wondered at when even bell boys offer school courses, but common sense should show the foolishness of expecting to win success in anything without the practise that is essential in any line of endeavor. Even the man who wants to get a job as conductor on a street car has to serve an apprenticeship and learn the ropes, and yet would-be authors speak about "my" script as though one effort entitled them to the crown.

Write a hundred different ideas and then if you have not found success you've got a right to ask why and someone will help you to find the answer, but you've got to do better than eight or ten before you can even begin to wonder.

Photoplay writing is the exercise of the imagination plus some knowledge of technique. The emphasis is to be placed on the word "exercise."

Read It All.

Julian Louis Lamothe in commenting on a certain matter writes:

> Should you ask why I, a photoplaywright, read the Advertising for Exhibitors department, I'll come back and say there is hardly a line in the whole paper that I do not read and digest. Even Brother Richardson's department is subject to close scrutiny, although most of it is as Sanskrit to me.

And this is doubly welcome coming right after three readers had written in to know why the paper had nothing to say about the Edison fire and the fate of the scripts being held there, although the issue complained of had a full account by Louis Reeves Harrison, but on another page. For that matter we'll bet that some purchasers of the paper do not even read the Harrison editorial articles although Mr. Harrison's weekly articles are of the utmost importance to the author. If you read only two pages out of the average hundred and fifty that this paper contains, you are cheating yourself woefully. Read it all. Every page carries a lesson.

Leaders.

The other day a big two-reel dramatic production wound up in a roar of laughter merely because of a leader. In the next to the last scene we had a vivid situation in which the hero, whose father has been killed by the villain, jabs the viallain in the stomach with his own sabre, a tidy little scene that the censors passed only because the actual murder was hidden by a desk. At once flashes a leader "Forgiven and reinstated &c." There used to be a song called "The pardon came too late," but this pardon came entirely too early and turned tragedy into broad farce. Consider your leaders with respect to the scene before as well as after the announcement and you'll be less apt to make a similar break.

The Last Look.

Just before you put your script into an envelope to send out, read it through one more time. Then ask yourself: "How would this look to me were it not mine, but something I saw on the screen?"

Lots of times you'll save eight or twelve cents; perhaps more.

That First Idea.

Write yourself a letter and tell yourself; give yourself positive assurance, that the first form in which your story comes to you is not necessarily the best.

Suppose that you have a scene at a county fair. Now county fairs get ripe only in the fall and this may be the early spring, and, anyway, it may be that the director will not like a county fair idea, knowing that all the people will make faces at the camera and try and get into the picture instead of acting as people at a county fair naturally would act. Must the story take place at a county fair and nowhere else? Nine times out of ten the story can be switched to use a small cast, and the tenth time you can generally do the same thing and perhaps get a better effect.

Train yourself not even to think more than eight or ten people save by special request. It can be done.

Suppose that you have a man in a crowd who is going to throw a bomb. It is seldom that he must be in a crowd to throw a bomb. He can hide behind a tree or in a house. Lots of editors might take a story about a man in a house who would not take a story of a man in a crowd of three hundred persons, at a couple of dollars a person, and perhaps the story will gain strength through this isolation of incident.

Sticks to First Love.

Miss Maibelle Heikes Justice writes that though she has had some tempting offers from the East, it is her present intention to stick to the Western makers who gave her her first start. Miss Justice is now in Chicago, but writes that she hopes to get out of town for the hot weather and may come on to look over New York.

Help! Help!

And now a mail order magazine published in Chicago, is throwing in a sample script and a list of addresses with each yearly subscription at twenty-five cents a year. Here's a suggestion that some chewing gum manufacturer wrap his product in sample scripts.

No wonder the companies use their staff writers.

Quite So.

James Oliver Curwood expresses his opinion that a good photoplay does its maker greater good than a good story does a magazine. That's because there are still so few really good stories. As a sign of the times Mr. Curwood relates that he was sketching the idea of a magazine story to a manufacturer lately and was asked what the story would bring in fiction form. Being told four or five hundred dollars, he offered four hundred for the story in two-reel form—and got it. That is still the exception and not the rule, but what has been done can be done again.

Inquiries

NOTE—No inquiries can be replied to by mail. Look for your answer here. No question can be replied to that necessitates the handling of the manuscript. Always give your name and address. It will not be published. A list of addresses, to which photoplays should be sent, will be supplied on receipt of a STAMPED AND SELF ADDRESSED ENVELOPE. The request should be made to the paper direct and not to this department, nor to the Answers Man.

M. L. D.—It is not a highly important matter whether you use dashes or punctuation marks in writing action or say "leader" or "sub-title." If your plot is cleverly original and is written clearly and understandably, it will sell. Where two writers differ as to method, select the system that seems best to you and do not worry about the finicalities of form.

J. B.—Try Edison, Vitagraph or the Mutual, but it looks like an unpromising chance. Why not go and see Mr. Smith of Mutual, since you are so close to their place? It is the act of violence and the manner in which the act is performed as well as the motive, rather than the deed itself, that the censorships find objectionable. Do not lump your settings. Count your interior sets. They are the ones that give the trouble. Keep the synopsis within 200 words.

S. W.—Better get a copy of Technique. We prefer the word "leader" to "sub-title" and "on screen" to "insert," but this is a minor matter. See reply to M. L. D. above. "Fade" means precisely that. The picture fades from the screen. You tell your action so clearly that it tells the story and the director can tell what the expression of the player's face should be. There is a chance for a livelihood writing plays, but hold on to your present job until you have made $2,000 the first half of some year and $3,000 the second half. You will have to learn to express yourself better before you can even sell a few plays. Your letter is badly jumbled. Write your action in the same loose fashion and the director wont know whether the girl marries her sweetheart or the minister.

J. B.—We do not know the date of release of the first multiple. The change came so gradually from the four or five-part story released part by part that it would be pretty hard to locate. The change came sometime in the last four years. Does anyone know just when?

H. S.—The old copies you have give the Technique of the Photoplay in its serial form. Later this was slightly amplified and published in book form, giving place to the present Technique. It ran from July 22, 1911, to Sept. 9th. This department was started Dec. 16, 1911, and has run continuously since.

G. E. P.—Most of the special release companies have no use for scripts and make no arrangements to handle unsolicited manuscript sent in. A few companies do buy now and then, but this market is so uncertain that it is not recommended that submission be made to any company not having a known outlet for its film at regular periods. The New York Motion Picture Company has its main office in New York, but the scripts are all handled from Los Angeles, where the studios are.

G. B. A.—It was Miss McLoad and not Miss McCoy in "The Message of the Sun Dial."

R.—Mutual, Keystone, Crystal and some others purchase synopses. Most companies pay very little, five or ten dollars, but the prices have run as high as fifty.

J. J. S.—Neither of the writers mentioned will loan you an old script. You need to study some work on technique if you are still at the point where you ask if the synopsis amounts to much. It is what does or does not sell your play, that's all.

W. H.—Miss Vivian Prescott had the title role in "The Restless Woman." Robert Harron was the young man and Miss Irene Howley the girl in "The Elemental World." Harry D. Carey was the coward in "Judita of Bethulia."

W. L.—Your questions are too frivolous.

B. S.—"The Port of Missing Men" is a book title. "The Port of Missing Women" was used by Selig last November. The theme has been used several times, but will be used again if you have some real idea.

WM. E. M. F.—Al Garcia was Rant in "The Actor's Romance." Charles Clary was the right man in "Slipping Fingers." H. A. Livingston played the title in "Jean Bonsall." Thomas Chatterton was Paolo in "The Venetian Romance," the picture being made in Los Angeles.

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scrits.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

By mail postpaid. Add ten cents if registration is desired.

17 Madison Avenue - New York City

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until such articles have been demonstrated to a member of our staff. In case of apparatus pertaining to projection this means the editor of this department.

Question No. 32.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Permission to use the contributor's name must accompany each answer, otherwise only the name of the city will be used. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What is the difference between the synchronous motor and the induction motor? What is the difference between the differentially and the accumulatively-wound motor, and what is the difference in their windings? Illustrate by sketches. Tell what you know about the repulsion type of motor; the series motor. How may their speed be controlled electrically?

Roll of Honor.

The answers to question 26, taken as a whole, form a pretty weird collection, and if some of those who answered were to give their boss advice in accordance with their ideas expressed in the answer I am afraid the aforesaid boss would be "in" pretty bad. However, I honor these men for having at least made the attempt. They made a stagger at it, and it is a cinch that they will understand the answer when it comes out, and remember it, too, therefore they will be very largely the gainers. The Roll of Honor consists of W. S. James, Camden, New Jersey; Jos. H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; S. S. Holt, Marshalltown, Iowa; Seattle, Washington; L. B. Minges, Lestershire, New York; Harry T. Dobson, Toronto, Canada; Chicago, Illinois; Boston, Massachusetts; and Portland, Maine. The reply selected for publication is by L. S. Usher, Winnipeg, Canada. I have selected brother Usher's reply partly by reason of the excellence of his tabulation. I have not taken the time to check out his figures, but will leave that to our readers. I presume they are correct. The "On 110 Volt D. C. Service" column of the comparison table means taking current through rheostats, of course.

Answer to Question No. 26.

By L. S. Usher, Winnipeg, Canada.

The question:—

Suppose you have the following: Two projectors, each using 40 amperes, one spot using 12 amperes, and a dissolver using a total of 30 amperes; current 110 volt d.c. You are using resistance, and your employer inquires as to the advisability of installing a d.c. to d.c. economizer to replace the resistance (rheostats). What advice would you give him? Current, 9 cents per k.w. Suppose he proposed installing an engine and dynamo, total current consumption, including incandescents, being 85 amperes, with momentary excess when two projection arcs are burning at once, what, in detail, would your advice be?

The answer:

As to advising my employer concerning the installation of a d.c. to d.c. economizer I would first work out and submit to him a tabulated memorandum of the comparative operation of the two systems, viz: the d.c. economizer set, and 110 volt current through rheostat. This would show exactly the respective cost of operation, the waste of power, the rheostatic efficiency, etc. After having done this, a detailed explanation could be given concerning the various points of merit in each system.

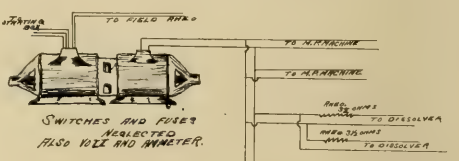
SERVICE COMPARISON TABLE.

	On 110 V. D.C. Service	On D.C. to D.C. Economizer
Watts taken from line for M. P. arc drawing 40 amps....	4,400	2,750
Watts taken from line for Dissolver at 30 amps.....	3,300	2,062
Watts taken from line for Spot Light at 12 amps.....	1,320	825
Total consumption in watts.....	9,020	5,637
Loss in watts, Line to Arc, Arc voltage 48.....	3,383	921
Efficiency	43%	80%
Operating cost for one hour with power at 9 cents per k.w. at total current.....	$0.81	$0.51
Operating cost for one M. P. machine for 10 hrs.....	$3.96	$2.47

I arrived at the figures in the table by assuming the d.c. to d.c. economizer to have 80 per cent. efficiency when supplying the amperage stated in the question. Approximate estimate of the operating cost would be figured for a day's run as follows: Say 40 amperes continuous for 10 hours, supplying both projection arcs alternately; dissolver used altogether for one hour at 30 amperes and spot light for one hour at 12 amperes, which would equal a continuous consumption of 40 amperes for a period of 12 hours each day. With current at 9 cents per k.w., the day's run would cost about $4.37, using 110 volt d.c. through rheostatic resistance as against $2.73 when using an economizer set. I would advise the installing of a 5¼ k.w. economizer. From motives of economy I would not suggest installing an economizer which would deliver the entire load if all the arcs were running simultaneously. It would be nice to have a machine of such capacity but I would consider 75 amperes as the maximum load at one time, and this amount would cover any reasonable combination the operator would wish to use, such as both m.p. machines, one machine and the dissolver, or dissolver and spot. Local conditions to some extent govern the matter of installing your own plant for the entire house. In some cities where lighting is fairly cheap, the service may be very bad, and present the faults of fluctuating voltage, frequent shut-downs, etc. In this case I should advise the putting in of an isolated plant, but with cheap city power the cost per k.w. of the house plant might be higher than the cost of the city service. For instance: power in Winnipeg is fairly good and very cheap. Current for lighting purposes costs 3½ cents per k.w., while power is supplied at 1 cent per k.w. (My dear boy, some of the managers who see that will, I fear, have heart failure.—Ed.) Gasoline on the other hand costs an average of 28 cents, and kerosene 25 cents per gallon. We have both a city plant and a company plant selling juice at the same price, therefore private generating plants, in this locality, are almost entirely out of the question. I cite this to show that local conditions would have much to do with the matter of giving advice regarding the installation of an isolated plant. I would size up the matter in this way. First the cost of current from the light plant, second the reliability of the service, and the loss one would experience in cutting the current down to arc voltage. I would then figure out how much per k.w. one could generate the power for with an isolated plant, and would thus see whether the resultant gain would compensate for the investment, and the added labor of operation, plus the depreciation of the plant. For a house plant to furnish current as per question 26, one would need a 7½ k.w., 70 volt generator, driven by a 14 h.p. engine, which would allow excess power for slight overloads. Of course, it would necessitate the changing of all 110 volt lamps and other apparatus. 70 volts is fairly efficient for lighting, and means much less waste at the projection arc. Arrangement could be made, of course, to switch in the city 110 volt service in case of emergency, this matter having been previously dealt with in the department.

As I said I have not checked up the brother's figures, but I did stop to figure out the cost of 40 amperes through a rheostat for 12 hours and I make it 110 × 40 = 4,400 watts × 12 = 52,800 watts, or, 52.8 k.w. × .09 = $4.75, so I do not know where he gets $4.37. However, any inaccuracies in brother Usher's figures will no doubt be promptly attended to by our readers. As a general proposition his reasoning is most excellent, and absolutely correct, I think, all the way through, except that with two projection arcs running there would be a maximum load of more than 75 amperes, though that would, of course, be only momentary. Nevertheless, brother Usher was in error in saying "maximum load." What he meant was that a generator of that capacity would serve all purposes, and it ought to do it, too.

Brother James, Camden, N. J., contributed a sketch showing the method of connecting a plant of this kind with an economizer.



In the matter of a gas engine for such a plant he advises an 11 h.p., 4 cycle, 2 or 4 cylinder gas engine, and a 6 k.w., 70 volt compound wound generator. I agree with brother James that this kind of a plant would be large enough.

Acetone Cement.

A. W. Hornby, Haileybury, Ontario, Canada, writes:

In March 28 issue, Joseph Liss, Chicago, asks for correct method of splicing a film with acetone. Acetone can be used alone for splicing, but it takes too long for it to dissolve the film, and longer still to dry. I make my own cement as follows: 4 ounces acetone, ½ ounce ether, 6 inches of old film, removing the emulsion and then cutting it into strips, before dissolving. We can boast of good projection up in this north country. But there is a certain individual who is offering his services at a lower wage, and trying to knock to pieces the good work the rest of us are doing. Also he is doing his best to form a union. What do you think of that sort of a fellow anyhow? No union for mine, if he is the material they are made of.

Many thanks for the film cement formula. It is rather queer that a man who is endeavoring to form a union would start proceedings by such a rank performance as that. But, be that as it may, the action of an individual cannot be considered as condemning an organization, nor can it be said that the union is made up of this kind of material—quite the reverse. If they form a union up there, brother, take my advice and get into it. If things are not run just to suit you, do your best to remedy whatever may be wrong, but don't stand outside and condemn the organization. Get right in and do your condemning on the floor at the meetings, and make it strong, too, if it is needed.

Comfortably Situated, Thank You.

On March 27th I called at the general office of the I. A. T. S. E., and it being a beautiful day, Miss Brenner, whom all those who have attended conventions know well, proceded to establish herself on the rear seat of my two-wheel Harley-Davidson go-devil, which she rode side-saddle fashion, and, believe me or not, she rode that way for a total of 87 miles, out on Long Island and back. And here is the joke. We had made something like 30 miles without stopping, and I thought Her Ladyship would be tired, so I remarked, "Here's a garage, shall we stop, get some 'gas' and rest a little?" The reply came quick and prompt, and I nearly fell off the wheel: "Stop! I should say not. I am very comfortably situated, thanks. Just keep traveling." All of which is proof positive that Miss Brenner simply hates that tandem seat—I don't think.

A New Reel.

Charles T. Duffey, Cambridge, Ohio, is the inventor of a new reel hub. He has just sent one of the reels to the department for examination. Undoubtedly the invention will be a popular one with operators. The invention consists of a means for raising the spring on the hub under which the end of the film is fastened. Its action is quite clearly shown in the illustration. A being a sectional view and B a shadow view of the device in place. There is a knob on either side. It is designed to do away with the annoyance of fishing around for the spring when one is in a hurry to thread up. There seems to be nothing much to get out of order, and as I before said the arrangement will be found to be very convenient for the operator.

A Book on Photometry.

The publishers have sent the department a copy of "Electrical Photometry and Illumination," by Herman Bohle, a 222 page book with 200 illustrations, and 35 tables. Price $3.50 net. This book was sent at my request as I have been looking for something of this kind which would be of value to the operator. And now I am rather up a stump. This work gives the details, illustrated, of a great many different photometers for measuring light. It also gives a large amount of valuable information on various subjects connected with illumination, but considerable of it is in a form which would be largely unintelligible to the average man. On the whole, however, I believe the student operator will be able to get value received, since a study of its pages cannot fail to give him a broader knowledge of illumination. Now, mind you gentlemen, I cannot consistently recommend this particular book to everybody, though at that I believe $3.50 invested in the work would be far wiser than expending an equal sum in many ways the average man does expend it. I am simply telling you that from a broad standpoint Mr. Bohle's book is a good one for the operator to have in his library. Anyone wishing this work can send me a money order for its price, and I will forward the same to the publishers.

Ammeters.

Again I must call the attention of operators and managers to the desirability, from any and every point of view, including that of economy, of installing the ammeter in their operating rooms. An operating room voltmeter is a convenience—a very great convenience, but an ammeter is a semi-necessity. I have said before, and I say again that a good voltmeter and ammeter placed right in front of the operator, where he will have a full view of the same at all times, will, or ought to, save their own price in a very short time, because the ammeter shows the operator at what point he can operate his arc with the least current consumption, and at the same time secure a maximum of light, whereas the voltmeter will allow him to check up the pressure on the feeders. By all means install an ammeter and voltmeter in the operating room. There are several companies who make reliable voltmeters and ammeters, and who sell them at a very reasonable figure. J. H. Hallberg handles them.

Something Else Again.

T. Y. Brownlow, Chewelam, Washington, writes:

I had been expectantly awaiting reply to question 19 as it exactly covered a trouble of mine. But there seems to be something lacking in Mr. James' reply. While making changes in wiring, etc., about six months ago, I gave the generator a very bad short by contact of the two wires without fuse protection, and the result was four black spots each extending over five commutator bars. From lack of knowledge I let it go, and the brushes flamed badly and cut the commutator quite noticeably. Realizing that all was not as it should be I tried new brushes, and discovered that one of the brush arms was loose on the frame. After tightening this it ran all right and have had no trouble since, though there is still a little sparking at the brushes, and the insulation between the bars appears to be a trifle high. But if a dub ought not try undercutting, which I do not believe I would care to do, what would you advise? Suppose the commutator bars should not test out, but should prove to be shorted. Then what? I have a 3 k.w. 110 volt generator pulled by a six h.p. hit and miss gasoline engine, but am going to trade the generator for one of about 60 volts.

There is not any "then what" to it brother Brownlow, because if your bars were shorted there would be sparking, and lots of it, in fact flaming, and you could not run your generator that way for any length of time. If, however, the bars were shorted, you would have to find the short and remedy it. I do not understand why a loose arm should make four black spots such as you describe, though it could and most likely would cause heavy sparking, which might, in time, set up other troubles. Moreover, as I understand you the trouble commenced immediately after the short circuit, which would indicate the breaking down of the insulation of some coil, but if that was the case the tightening of the arm would not remove the difficulty. As a matter of fact I cannot quite reconcile what you say with the indications your machine gave, therefore I don't know just what to tell you. If any of our readers can suggest the correct solution let them stand forth and be heard. As to undercutting: if the mica is high and you cannot send the armature in to have the mica undercut, you can grind it down by making a wooden block to fit a section of curve of the commutator, lining it with 00 sand paper, and grinding the commutator down by removing the brushes and running the generator while holding the block to the commutator. This will not undercut the mica, but it will bring it down to the commutator surface, and you can keep it there by repeating the operation when necessary.

A Bet.

New York City writes:

Kindly decide a bet as to the three-wire system. A claims that if one outside wire of the three-wire system carries 15 amperes and the other 18 amperes, the neutral carries 33. He claims this for the reason that in the theater where he is working the fuse block for the house lights is fused with a 30 ampere plug fuse for the neutral, and a 15 ampere plug fuse for both outside wires, and absolutely anything below 30 amperes will blow at the neutral. Therefore he claims that the neutral carries the combined amperage of the outside wires. B claims that the neutral carries the difference only, that is to say, if one outside wire carries 15 and the other 18 amperes the neutral would carry three, and if both outside wires carry 15 the neutral will carry nothing. We have decided to abide by your decision.

B is correct. And if under the conditions named a 30 ampere neutral fuse blows there is something wrong somewhere, though I could not say what it is without examining the plant. At a guess I should say that there is freak circuit somewhere, one end of which is connected to one of the outside wires back of the fuse block, and the other end connected to the neutral ahead of the block of the house lighting fuse block. This hardly seems possible, but it is the only explanation I think of at the moment. But be that as it may B is absolutely correct.

Double Spot.

Illinois orders a Handbook and complains of having trouble with a double spot when he moves his lamp house back. If he moves it up close to the machine he has a ghost. Is using 7½ and 8½ condensers with a Simplex machine, using a 6¾ lens on a 90 foot throw. Also he says his carbons do not burn right, but to a point like a pencil.

You say that when you pull the lamp house back you get a double spot. I would suggest that you study carbon setting in the Handbook pages 204 to 212 inclusive, and then try separating your condensers different distances apart. I would also suggest that you be sure that the condensers set parallel with each other. Your carbons are, I think, overloaded. Use larger carbons. I cannot give you further advice without definite information.

Yum, Yum. And the Some.

Brother J. R. Van, a traveling exhibitor sends the editor a package from Harrisville, N. Y. The aforesaid package contained two pounds of concentrated sap of maple—i.e. maple sugar. Now if there is anything the editor likes more than two pounds of maple sugar it is four pounds of maple sugar, therefore brother Van is duly and sincerely thanked for his contribution to the cause of projection.

Excellent for Operator's Library.

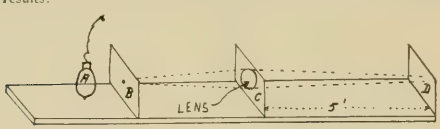
Theo. Audel & Company, 72 Fifth Avenue, New York City, have presented to this department for examination and review a set of six leather covered, limp bound, gilt edged books containing a total of 1,530 pages of text matter, the same being called "Hawkins' Electrical Guide." For the most part the text matter consists of questions and answers. I have very carefully examined this series of books, and, while their price is $6.00, I can heartily recommend them to the moving picture operator, and am prepared to say that he will get more than value received. They are as plain as the Swoope work, and very much more comprehensive. In fact they cover about every phase of the subjects the operator comes in contact with, except actual operating room appliances, and those are fully covered in the Handbook. The theory of the transformer is fully explained, as are also the various methods of connecting these instruments in multiple, series, etc. The care of motors and generators is fully dealt with, and in fact the series is, as I said, very comprehensive. The subjects covered are: First book: "Principles of Electricity," "Magnetism," "Induction," "Experiments," "Dynamos." Second book: "Construction of Dynamos," "Motors," "Armature Windings." Third book: "Management of Dynamos and Motors," "Instruments," "Testing." Fourth book: "Wiring and Distribution Systems," "Storage Batteries." Fifth book: "Alternating Currents and Alternations." Sixth book: "A. C. Motors," "Transformers," "Converters," "Rectifiers." Of the whole set there are none which could not be studied with profit, and I really believe that this series of books, in conjunction with the Handbook, will give the operator about everything he needs in the electrical end of his business, although it would not be a bad scheme to add to that "The Electric Motor and Its Practical Operation," by Burns. I believe that with those eight books in his library the operator will be exceedingly well equipped on the electrical end with a total expense of $10.50. You can pay for the Hawkin's book $1 down and $1 a week.

In closing let me say that this ends a search which has covered a long period of time. I have been looking for electrical books suitable for operators for four years, and at last I have found them. The drawings, photographs and illustrations as well as the text matter in all these books is such that it can be understood by any ordinary man. Now, gentlemen, there you are. You have asked for suitable books, and I have found them for you, and I will stake my reputation on your being satisfied when you get them. In addition to this the MOVING PICTURE WORLD will soon publish an excellent work on electricity by Mr. J. H. Hallberg.

Automatic Dowser.

Fred R. Klink, Canton, Ohio, sends in circular description of an automatic dowser and writes:

> I promised something interesting soon when I wrote last. Here it is. The circular needs no explanation, as it is gotten up with the idea of making everything perfectly clear. The dowser is at present only being made for the Power's Six-A and for all Edison models, but as soon as the new factory is ready we will try to take care of the rest of them. I see quite a bit in the department concerning the measurement of condensers. I have been operating ten years and the following is the method I have used with good results:



Take a board about 6½ feet long and arrange as shown in sketch. A is an incandescent light; B a piece of cardboard with a small hole in it; C the lens and D the screen. The lens is to set in the holder, flat side facing the light. Now move A and B backward or forward until the hole in B is focused on D, whereupon the measurement from B to C will be found to be the exact focal length of the lens. I have used this on lenses from 6½ to 9½ and find it right on the dot. I use the floor of the operating room with the wall for a screen, but a board is used in the sketch to make the idea clear. We have two Power's Six-A machines, and they are giving excellent service. And as to the projection, I would like to have you see it and then express an opinion. Exhibitors from all over the state have viewed it, and all have said the same thing, viz: "I wish we had a picture like that." But that does not stop us from trying to improve. Our throw is 95 feet and we use d. c. and all we want of it. We are not cut down on anything.

As regards the measurer, why I guess I won't comment, but leave it to department fans to try it out. Your saying that although your projection is high class that does not prevent you from trying to improve sounds good. As to the dowser it seems to be a simple contrivance. It is electrical in its operation and consists of two parts, viz: a safety shutter which is attached to the condenser hood, and a contact device which is connected to the frame of the machine in such a way that it is normally held up by the film, but when the film breaks the roller is released and, by a spring is rotated and makes electrical contact which pulls the dowser down and shuts off the light. There is also an arrangement for ringing a buzzer at the same time. I see no reason why the device should not be entirely practical and very effective.

Didn't Know.

William McGuire, Westerly, Rhode Island, orders a question booklet and says:

> Am running two Power's Six-A. The first one installed is in good running order, but I have trouble with the tension springs on the latest one. They snap when a one-hole patch goes by. Have tried tightening the springs, the gate, and have also loosened both but without result.

Well, really brother McGuire I do not feel I could give you any advice. If anyone has had a similar experience let him arise upward and be heard.

Oh! Any One Can Do It.

In a letter from a correspondent the following paragraph occurs:

> I was given $10.00 to set up the machines, but they would not pay a decent salary for an operator. Funny, isn't it? They said anyone can operate after things are fixed.

Yes, it is indeed strange, and almost past understanding. You would really suppose that a man with brains enough to even make a bluff at running a moving picture theater would at least be too smart to make such a remark as that. You would suppose he would be a good enough business man to understand that it is not good policy to entrust the projection, upon which depends to a very large extent the box office income, to an underpaid man, especially where "underpaid" usually spells, at least to some extent, incompetency.

Many times I have, in this department, made the statement that brains are necessary in an operating room; many times I have also called attention to the fact that you absolutely cannot buy brains for a song. When I use the word brains in this connection I mean, of course, the ability and willingness to reason from cause to effect and apply the result arrived at in excellence of result on the screen.

And now, just to show these anyone-can-do-it-managers how foolish their reasoning is, let me ask them how many cheap men they can get who thoroughly understand the difference in optical and financial economy as between a. c. through an economizer and a. c. through a motor generator set, the d. c. end of which operates at arc voltage? Let me also ask these "managers" how many cheap operators they can get who thoroughly understand the working principle of the projector shutter, and what type of shutter will come nearest to eliminating the objectionable flicker? Also what effect will the increase of screen brilliancy, or the change from one type of screen to another have upon flicker? And so I could go on propounding questions upon matters which are absolutely vital, not only to the individual theater, but, broadly speaking, to the business as a whole, at great length, and never once ask a single question which the average cheap operator can correctly and fully answer. And let me tell you, Mr. Manager, that those men who do not possess the knowledge and information necessary to answer these questions correctly, or who have not the necessary energy to learn these things are not going to put the best possible results on your screen. More than this he is very likely costing you fully as much in wasted electrical energy as the added salary necessary to secure a really high class operator would amount to.

In closing let me say that just as long as we have managers so crassly ignorant as to believe that "anyone can do it," just that long we will have the incompetent operator with us, because that kind of an employer is not in a position to check up the work of the operator, and the operator is therefore to a large extent in a position to do just exactly as he pleases.

Three-Wire System.

Joseph Gorman, Togus, Maine, says he has received his Handbook and is much pleased with it. He then propounds a question about the three-wire system, but the way he has it put I cannot quite understand the matter. Apparently he has a three-wire system, fused to 60 amperes. He is pulling 72 amperes and wants to know how he can take on 40 more. If the brother has a 60 ampere fuse in both outside wires and a 60 ampere on the neutral be can in effect pull 60 amperes between the neutral and one outside wire, and 60 between the neutral and the other outside wire. By this I mean that he can connect on 110 volt lamps or motors up to a load of 110 x 20 13200 watts, or 120 amperes at 110 volts. But he cannot actually pull 120 amperes; he can only pull 60, plus whatever overload the fuse will carry. But it is the wattage which counts. If he is connected to one side and is pulling 60 amperes, he is using $60 \times 110 = 6600$ watts which divided by 746 will give the h. p. consumed. Now if he is connected to the two outside wires and consumes an equal h. p., or wattage he would only consume one half the amperage, and if the load connected to the two outside wires pulled 60 amperes he would be consuming $60 \times 220 = 1320$, or double the horse power he used before when using an equal amperage. It must be remembered that the power consumed (watts) is the voltage times the amperage, and that the voltage between the neutral and either outside wire is just one half the voltage across the two outside wires. One thing that puzzles many operators is this: They say, well, each 16 c. p. incandescent lamp requires approximately ½ ampere. Now if you connect a 110 volt lamp from the neutral to one outside wire it requires ½ ampere of current. The action of the three-wire system is such that if you put another 16 c. p. lamp on the other side, the two lamps will burn in series on 220, and the neutral will carry nothing at all. Now since each lamp takes ¼ ampere, why don't the two consume one ampere?

Easy. It is simply because the two lamps use the same ½ ampere, only one of the lamps get a brand-new, first-hand ampere, while the other lamp gets a second-hand ampere which, while it has been used and has produced light in the first lamp, still is a perfectly good ¼ ampere, and not at all shop worn. The 220 volts drive this ½ ampere through the combined resistance of the filaments of the two lamps. Remember that voltage is consumed in overcoming resistance. With a 110 volt 16 c. p. lamp 110 volts are consumed in forcing the ½ ampere through the carbon, or, in other words, that pressure is sufficient to force ½ ampere through. Now when you put two of these lamps in series and double the pressure the effect is exactly the same in light and amperage consumption as though they were connected separately on 110 volts, but the difference is that the higher voltage is opposed to both lamps in series, hence the wattage consumption is the same. I would recommend that brother Gorman turn to page 40 of the Handbook and there study the action of the three-wire system.

Slide Making.

The department has just received from Tennant and Ward, New York City, a copy of a book "How To Make Lantern Slides," price 25 cents. This little book which is illustrated by diagrams and photographs contains 57 pages of text matter. It is a valuable treatise on slide making, and is unquestionably well worth a place in the library of any man interested in that subject. Operators who wish to make their own slides will find this book the "real goods."

Reading Amperage.

S. E. Shaw, Ithaca, New York, writes:

It has been suggested that an ammeter might be used to measure voltage across the lines, using lamps for resistance. This is a good method, provided the ammeter is reading accurately. True the resistance of lamps varies considerably, but if a number of them be used the effect is to counteract any difference in resistance in individual filaments. The following shows the results of a test, using lamps which were known to be as far as 40% from the standard.

Lamps.	Current.	Voltage Actual.	Voltage Computed.	Percent Error.
1	.4	117	88
2	.8	117	88	17.5
3	1.5	116	110
4	2.0	116	110
5	2.6	116	114.5
6	3.1	116	113.5	1.56
8	4.2	116	115.5
10	5.2	116	114.5
11	5.8	116	116
13	6.9	116	117

It will be seen that with only a few lamps the variation is large, but if over five are used it becomes quite small, the largest in this case being only 1.56%. This suggests a simple method of using an ammeter for reading both voltage and amperage. The ammeter might be cut out of the line and the lamp resistance thrown in series with it to obtain the voltage. A better way would be to find the amount of resistance required so that the scale division of the ammeter would give an even number of volts, and then make the resistance accurately out of resistance wire. It then acts on the principle of the multiplier used for this work. The reply to question 16 gives a formula for finding the necessary horsepower of an engine to drive a dynamo. Brother Wills uses 1.8181 as a factor. Where does he get this? Seven hundred and forty-six watts to the horsepower gives a factor of 1.34. Perhaps he is allowing for losses, but since these losses are unknown and will vary with different engines and generators, why this particular factor? In the same issue, March 7, friend Young describes a device designed to eliminate flicker. If I understand the matter correctly he is right. The tin cuts down the aperture of the lens and thus decreases the screen illumination. Flicker is dependent upon the frequency of the interruption of the light and intensity of the light; the greater the light the more noticeable the flicker. It disappears at an intensity of one meter candle, and a frequency of 25 cycles per second. This is perhaps a little higher intensity than is ordinarily found on a screen. Cutting down the aperture might cut out the flicker if the intensity is already at the critical point, and the machine is operating perfectly. Contrasty pictures show more flicker than soft ones. The Edison pictures are noticeable for their softness and the minimum flicker they produce. I suppose you have observed how much less flicker there is with tinted films, especially the blue ones. The efficiency of a dynamo is greatest at its maximum load, and not at small loads as was stated.

This is indeed a very interesting communication. I would like to comment at some length, but have such an enormous quantity of mail I cannot spare the space, except to say that brother Shaw's remarks concerning flicker are worthy of very serious attention by operators and producers. He has the correct dope, although he does not draw his conclusions correctly when he states that flicker eliminates at a stated screen brilliancy with machine at normal speed; that would depend upon the type of shutter. It might disappear at that particular critical point when using the ideal shutter, whereas with any less perfect shutter it would not.

Cleaning Film.

Touro Glucksmann, New Orleans, Louisiana, writes:

I should imagine the publication of the following would be of benefit to the department readers. Benzol C H N 21 19 2, which may be had at any drug store, is an excellent film cleaner. It dries quickly and does not injure the emulsion. Reels can be cleaned while examining and will dry while rewinding. Apply the benzol to a soft cloth and wipe the film with it to remove any grease, oil, dirt or other foreign substance, then wipe the film with a soft, dry cloth.

The above is subject to experiment. The editor does not vouch for the correctness, but it can easily be tried. Many thanks for the contribution of the idea. The "C H N 21 19 2" end of it is drug store Latin, I suppose.

Will He Succeed?

Vacaville, California, wants to know whether I would advise one gifted with average common sense to invest his money in a moving picture business in a small rural town. Also would one meet with any large amount of mechanical trouble with an up-to-date equipment? He says he is one of the many who was stung for $50 by a moving picture school in San Francisco, which guaranteed to furnish a job to those completing the course. Though perhaps at the present time openings are scarce the school gave assurance of the reverse, saying the San Francisco Union was about to be thrown out, and good men were needed to fill the vacancies. Mr. Woods, of the Market Street Theater, informs him, however, that the school managers are at present up before the Grand Jury.

All of which shows the lengths to which these swindlers—they are nothing else—will go. It was not highly creditable to Vacaville that he proposed filling one of the vacancies supposed to be created by "throwing out" the San Francisco Union. However, we will let that pass. He has been duly punished.

And now as to the business end. It would be impossible for me to offer an intelligent opinion as to whether an individual would succeed or fail without knowing the individual personally. Some men will start into business on a shoestring, in a place where it looks as if almost anybody would starve to death, and make a success of it; whereas, another man will start in with the finest kind of location and plenty of capital and make a dismal, drizzling failure. If you know anything about the amusement business and you have the necessary people to draw from, and have sense enough to understand that you have got to be honest with your patrons, and you are a reasonably good manager you can succeed, but you will have to buy considerable experience, and there is no other way in this wide world to get it except to buy it and pay for it. I have bought quite a bunch myself during the last twenty-five years. I do not think you would run into any serious mechanical difficulties—none you could not handle with such aid as would be available. To go deeply into this matter, and offer you detailed advice, would consume a great deal more space than I can possibly spare.

Cored Carbons vs. Solid.

Estes & Estes, Brooklyn, Michigan, write they have done a great deal of experimenting with carbons, and that, contrary to the instructions in the Handbook, they are using cored carbons both above and below. They claim they get a better result that way than with the solid, and ask if I still insist that they ought to use a solid below—d. c., of course.

Most emphatically no, of course not. It is results we are after, and if you can get better results with a cored carbon below than with a solid, the cored carbon is the thing for you. My own experience is to the contrary, but it is the result we are after and—there you are.

A Correction.

Eagle Pass, Texas, offers the following humble apology, which, due to his meekness of spirit, we promptly accept and file in our "apologies received" pigeonhole. He writes:

You are entirely correct as to the error in my rule of thumb stunt for lens measurement. Please accept apologies, and if I ever get that bad again, just smite me with your smiteiest smite. It was entirely due to carelessness. I should have said the equation containing the desired factor should always be below the line, so that when you cover up one factor you divide the remaining part of the equation into the factor above the line. Now let's try again.

D=the distance of lens to screen
A=width of aperture
E=e. f. of objective lens
S=width of picture on the screen

D and A always form one of the factors and S E the other, so if you want S or E those letters would be below the line, with D and A above, whereas if you want D or A the opposite condition would prevail. Then all you have to do is to cover up the letter representing the quantity you want, and what remains gives the desired result. For instance: supposing you want D; you would write $\frac{S\ E}{D\ A}$, cover up the D, whereupon we find that S×E÷A gives the desired result. On the other hand, if we wanted E we would have $\frac{D\ A}{S\ E}$; cover up E and we have D×A÷S for the answer.

I have not checked this matter over this time, but am proceeding on the assumption that it is correct. All is forguv, Eagle Pass, but don't do it again.

A Friend of Mine.

O. N. Williams, Lake City, Iowa, writes:

In October, 1910, friend Carleton, Grundy Center, Iowa, gave me a little send-off in the department on my ability to handle the Ozo-Carbide light. You invited me to come across with the dope on it, but somehow it seems I have never gotten to it, but will send it as soon as possible. It is the best gas light I ever saw, but it must be properly mixed and handled. I use an electric plant now, and have for the past four years. Am playing towns of 400 to 1,000 population, staying two weeks, changing every night. Nice front, flaming arc, piano, seats and a new "top," brown khaki outside and black inside. I certainly get the money.

I would like to have that dope on Carbide brother, and I am going to ask you to get busy. You can undoubtedly give information that would be of great value to gas users. It won't hurt you in the least, and may do others a lot of good; therefore, in the parlance of the street, "come across."

Operators Are you perfectly satisfied with the results you get on the screen?

THE SCHOOLING OF MARY ANN (Selig), April 28.—This is a picture play that has good qualities ingrafted in its plot, and human interest obtains. A good, little inocent country girl is imbued with ambitions above a rural life. She is favored through a rich uncle and sent to a female seminary where she has many adventures, but makes herself a favorite through her personality. The ending of this picture is highly gratifying. In all respects this offering is clean, well acted and photographed.

ANOTHER TALE (Lubin), April 28.—On the same reel with "The Tale of a Chicken." An animated cartoon of "Bugdom." Senseless.

A TALE OF A CHICKEN (Lubin), April 28.—A photoplay that should be captioned "A Tail of a Chicken." This is a burlesque on "Sherlock Holmes" and is intended to be "cute," evidently. If the cruel abuse of a speckled hen can be construed into comedy then this misnomer is funny. The actors are colored individuals.

THE DEADLIEST OF NATURE'S CELEBRITIES (Pathe), April 28.—An illustration of the gyrations of a cobra, which is both fascinating and disgusting to view.

A FEW MINUTES IN CALCUTTA, INDIA (Pathe), April 28.—This is on the same reel with "The Cobra" visualization and very interesting.

THE TOWN THAT LOOKS ON BISCAY BAY (Pathe), April 28.—On the same reel with the two above. It is a very interesting and educational offering.

THE MYSTERY OF THE SILVER SNARE (Edison), April 28.—The sixth of the series in the Chronicles of Cleek and one of the best as yet produced. The cast is made up of Ben Wilson, May Abbey, Robert Bower, Gertrude McCoy, etc., the leading Edison players. The plot is interesting and the picture has been carefully directed. All in all, it is a fine production.

YARN A-TANGLE (Essanay), April 28.—An out of the ordinary photoplay that is a dainty offering. Its unfolding of events in the lives of those concerned is pleasing in the extreme. As the yarn is untangled so the ultimate consummation weaves into a finale of love and understanding. A superior number to offer to audiences as a relief from tragedy, comedy and melodrama.

SETTING THE STYLE (Vitagraph), April 29.—This comedy photoplay exploits Mr. Bunny as a street cleaner and also a purveyor of fashions among the four hundred (unconsciously), on his part and that of his good wife (Josie Sadler). This is a good legitimate comedy. The direction has been manipulated artistically, as has the photography. This is a first-class number for any program.

THE PIRATES OF PEACOCK ALLEY (Selig), April 29.—A phantasamagorical creation that seems to have been evolved to consume as much film as possible. The theme is far from moral and its elevating qualities are homeopathic. The photography and scenic effects can be recommended.

A FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE (Edison), April 29.—A story of Alaska, where men are taken for what they are. What they have been is of little import. Antecedents cut a small figure when nerve and worth combine. The hero (Richard Neill) has sacrificed himself for his brother's sake. Eventually he wins out in an intense finale. This is a meritorious offering. Bliss Milford plays the heroine in an artistic manner.

CURING A HUSBAND (Essanay), April 29.—This is a very interesting photoplay of home life, the marring element of happiness being the addiction of the husband and father to strong drink. His wife pleads with him, but, being a club man, he imagines he cannot break away. After a strenuous night of it he becomes convinced of his egregiousness and swears off. Well-made and acted in every respect. Walter Berry, Baby Gerrity and Beverly Bain are the principals.

TONY, THE GREASER (Vitagraph), April 30.—A story with picturesque ranch settings, with George Cooper and Myrtle Gonzalez in the leading parts. The Mexican falls hopelessly in love with the girl, but she cannot marry him. He sacrifices his life later in defense of the ranch. This is a pleasing release.

PIE FOR SOPHIE (Essanay), April 30.—Victor Potel and his pal appear in this as a couple of entertaining tramps, who steal Sophie's pies. The close is very funny and the film is greatly helped by good photography.

DIFFERENCES BETWEEN TANGOS (Melies), April 30.—A half-reel dance number, showing French, American and English couples doing the tango, in costume. This is artistic and pleasing.

BATTY BILL, MONKEY AND PELICAN (Melies), April 30.—The eccentric character, Batty Bill, does some detective work, recovering the stolen necklace from the monkey and pelican. This contains some clever foolishness and proves enjoyable. On same reel with above.

THE SOUL OF THE DESERT (Biograph), April 30.—The splendid photography in this number is almost enough to insure its success. The story, however, is also strong and the main situation resembles Bret Harte's "Outcasts of Poker Flat." The desert setting is unusually good. It should have been made a little clearer who the people ejected from the house are. A strong offering.

STUNG (Kalem), May 1.—This comedy plot hinges on the bee sting cure for rheumatism, which is tried in an extremity. Then the cure for a bee sting is recommended by a physician—mud. They all get mud cure and forget they are rheumatic.

DIPPY'S DREAM (Kalem), May 1.—On the same reel with "Stung," and it is worse. Outlandish make-ups prevail and Dippy, an escaped lunatic, is used as a comedy factor.

THE GET-AWAY (Lubin), May 1.—The strongest feature of this business story is the suspense attending the chase after the girl and her father. Much of the action is rather vague, and the denouement comes in a letter, which tells of the girl's innocence. The story has swift movement, but is not strongly constructed in parts.

THE PLOT THAT FAILED (Selig), May 1.—On the same reel with "A Knight of Trouble." A farce comedy of the rough-and-tumble order that gains laughs.

A KNIGHT OF TROUBLE (Selig), May 1.—The trouble this knight didn't accumulate in a few minutes wouldn't be worth sweeping up. He loved the girl something awful and the only thing that saved him was the fact that the bull dog could not climb the ladder. Luck favored him and he won out. This is a fair comedy.

BUNCO BILL'S VISIT (Vitagraph), May 1.—This is a comedy that is funny in plot, but is made more than comical by the work of John Bunny and Flora Finch. Bunny is the owner of a farm, and it is some farm (chickens galore—regular chickens, at that). It isn't just clear why John's wife holds him up for his roll of mazuma, but she does. They accidentally capture Bunco Bill and increase the bank account $500, without much trouble.

MAREEA, THE HALF-BREED (Vitagraph), May 2.—To most people, "half-breed" suggests the west. For this reason, the title chosen for this picture is open to criticism, for Mareea is apparently of the foreign Latin persuasion and there are no scenes suggestive of the American wilds. The administration of a brand of justice which the average American will not regard as either possible or probable is another detracting feature — but without this false note there could have been no story and the climax which is at once intensely dramatic and wholesomely good may be held to justify the questionable premise. Throughout the two reels, Miss Anne Schaefer's ability as a character actress stands out in bold relief.

HER BIG SCOOP (Biograph), May 2.—A carefully-worked-out story in which the interest which never fails to attach to incidents in the lives of fond lovers, newspaper workers, detectives and present-day politicians is capitalized. Two big scenes in a modern newspaper office will prove particularly popular, although the chaos precipitated in the news room by the telephonic arrival of "her big scoop" is likely to draw a smile from "those in the know."

A SECRET CRIME (Kalem), May 2.—The struggles of a husband and wife against the madness of kleptomania which makes the mother, with plenty of money, an ordinary shoplifter and thief, and the unplanned prevention of a crime by a tiny daughter who chooses to write "Thou shalt not steal" on her little blackboard provide the plot. The story is unfolded in the most natural manner and the sentiment never approaches the maudlin or theatrical.

BRONCHO BILLY'S CLOSE CALL (Essanay), May 2.—Adroit touches have given this picture a lot of good, legitimate comedy which leavens the strong dramatic action. Billy's western pals are led to believe that their idol's home has been despoiled. The denouement comes when the supposed "despoiler" turns out to be the bride's brother. A western drama that will please any house.

HE NEVER FOUND OUT (Lubin), May 2.—Many audiences will find much to amuse them in this tale of the taming of an unreasonable and impossible husband by a mother-in-law who differs from the usual type in that she is both clever and pretty. The performers in the picture and the directors, however, will doubtless, confess, in theatrical parlance, that here is a splendid exhibition of "hoakum."

HER GRANDMOTHER'S WEDDING DRESS (Edison), May 2.—It is at least possible that Miss Bessie Learn, in building this photoplay story, had in mind the fact that the average "grandmother's wedding dress," although worn fifty or sixty years ago did not differ from the gowns of to-day. This fact has given it an added interest. The dramatic plot is well worked out.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL N. 19 (Selig), May 4. — War activities incident to the trouble in Mexico are given most prominence this week. Cadets at West Point are shown in drills and maneuvers and, for comparison, as representative of the Mexican Army, the cadets at the military academy at Chapultepec are pictured. Brig.-Gen. Funston and his command embarking from Galveston, Texas, provide another interesting bit. As usual, there is a little baseball, a little fashions for the women, and a couple of other incidents of general interest.

CUPID VERSUS MONEY (Vitagraph) May 4.—Norma Talmadge and Leo Delaney, showing a fine appreciation of the subtlety of the comedy situations, make this picture a particularly good one. Mary Drew (Miss Talmadge) marries Tom Hardy (Mr. Delaney) to comply with the provisions of her uncle's will, the agreement calling for a separation immediately after the wedding ceremony. Cupid steps in and routs Mammon, making the separation of the newlyweds impossible.

A WEEK-END AT HAPPYHURST (Edison), May 4.—The idea of this comedy is identical with that of the well-known Howson Lott cartoons in the Sunday paper, and inasmuch as these cartoons are invariably funny, the picture is a real scream. The incidents portrayed are of the kind which will get under the skin of most any person. Edward Boulden carries the burden of the comedy and does it exceptionally well.

THE SAVING PRESENCE (Biograph), May 4.—The influence of the I. W. W. agitation throughout the country and particularly their parades to churches, etc., demanding food and shelter, is quite evidently responsible for this picture. Workmen who have lost their positions through the closing of a mill invade the mill-owner's house and are only prevented from doing great damage by the presence in the same house of a workwoman and her infant child, to whom the mill-owner's wife has extended charitable aid. The sentiment is wholesome. The photography is excellent.

PERILS OF PAULINE (Eclectic), May 4.—This, the fourth episode in the whirlwind life of the strenuous screen lady who is being additionally introduced to the public through the medium of the daily newspapers, while it is exciting, is depicted in a way which might lead the confirmed follower of the serial to believe that material is already beginning to run short. The prominence given the business where the hero masquerades as a native cook is out of proportion. An explosion which wrecks a yacht at sea is one of the big scenes.

THE TATTOO MARK (Vitagraph), April 28.—Sally and Dan Brogan are the children of a brutal father who ill-treats them. Dan has his arm tattooed, the design being his and his sister's name in the shape of a cross. The father discovers that Dan has taken the money out of his sister's penny bank to have the tattooing done and unmercifully beats him with a strap. Dan runs away and gets mixed up with crooks who teach him to steal. Years later the strange design leads to the reunion of brother and sister. He sacrifices his life for her and aids in the capture of a gang of thieves. S. Rankin Drew, Ned Finley and Ada Gifford are in the leads. This two-reel picture is full of thrills. The acting, lighting and photography are excellent.

THE INVENTOR'S WIFE (Lubin), April 29.—A two-reel picture that is full of intensity and has been well directed. Arthur Johnson and Lottie Briscoe are the principals and both do excellent work. The action is a trifle slow at times and useless repetition in scenes seem prevalent, however, it is a most worthy and pretentious production in every detail. The members of the cast ably support the principals.

A PACK OF CARDS (Lubin), April 30.—A strong, two-reel story, written by May B. Havey. The settings are in the Canadian Northwest, and contain numerous snow scenes. There is good suspense in the quarrel scene between Pierre, the worthless husband, and Jean. The hero is suspected of the murder, but is later cleared by the girl's shrewdness. This is well constructed and entertaining.

THE STOLEN REMBRANDT (Kalem), April 29.—A two-reel photoplay that is full of wild and wonderful events that are on the edge-of-the-seat variety, but are scarcely convincing, from the fact that little human interest is concerned in the ultimate development of the story. The acting and photography are up to the standard.

IN ROYAL BONDAGE (Pathe), April 30.—An exceptionally pretty and appealing story of royal love and courtship in two reels. The young prince marries the gamekeeper's daughter, but upon his succession to the throne is forced to give up his wife and their child. This is beautifully pictured and contains a great deal of human interest. The close is very artistic and effective. A strong release.

SEEDS OF CHAOS (Essanay), May 1.—This story of a crooked business man who fastens his crime upon a young bookkeeper, is finely constructed. It reaches no very high plane of interest at any time, but the story gets hold of the observer at the start and pulls him along without cessation to the close. During her husband's incarceration the young wife nurses the sick man, whose heart is touched by her kindness. He appears at the trial scene and pleads guilty. Rapley Holmes gave a good representation of the leading character. The photography was a little dark at times.

FREDERICK THE GREAT (Edison), May 1.—This two-part picture production has been carefully and wonderfully produced, historically and authentically. The costuming is elaborate and the photography is splendid; vibration is scarcely perceptible upon the screen. The acting contains all the dignity of the period. Charles Sutton as Frederick William, Barry O'Moore as Frederick the Great, Robert Brower, Charles Grady, Richard Neill, John Sturgeon, Mary Fuller, Bliss Millford and all the others in the cast sustained the various parts adequately. This is a fine production.

THE ACCUSING EYE (Pathe), May 2.—Two reels, with scarcely a foot of film lost, are used in telling a dramatic story of the wrecking of five lives because of a love that is not requited. The successful suitor, who loses his position because of the jealousy of another who has been rebuffed and is subsequently driven insane by the death of his sweetheart and her father, escapes from a sanitarium and haunts his destroyer to the very death with "the accusing eye." Splendid acting on the part of all the important members of the cast make "the accusing eye" as real a thing to those who watch the picture as it must have been to the man in the imaginative story against whom it was so effectively directed. In their selection of scenery and the photography which they have turned out, the producers have approached the perfect.

THE ADVENTURES OF KATHLYN No. 10 (The Warrior Maid) (Selig), May 4.—A Joan of Arc idea in the story which sets forth Kathlyn's heroic help in establishing a republican form of government in a tyrant-ridden Oriental country. A group of ferocious-looking lions are used with splendid effect in the picture, the completed effort being a film in which there is a new thrill for almost every foot. As a part of an unfinished serial, this two-reeler ends with the heroine in a predicament exciting enough to draw nine people out of ten back to the same theater at a later day to see what happened to her.

THE MASTER ROGUE (Kalem), May 4.—George Melford adds new laurels to his crown in this splendidly presented two-reeler, playing two widely different characters in a manner which indicates his sterling ability as an actor. The two principal characters are an arrogant, lawless smuggler (the master rogue) and his pitifully helpless blind brother. Melford does them both and ably simulates the feelings of a blind man who has just been restored to sight and, later, enacts the frantic death struggle of the smuggler who has been mortally wounded by an explosion of gunpowder.

Independent

FICKLE MARY ANN (Royal), May 2.—This is on the same reel with "Snookum's Birthday." The merits of this issue might be faithfully construed as unlaughable comedy, although the actors work hard for results they don't seem to break through the screen.

SNOOKUM'S BIRTHDAY (Royal), May 2.—Evidently this is Snookum's first birthday and he does not seem to recognize the fact, anyhow, he doesn't seem elated over the many presents forced on him by his admiring relatives and friends, among which was a locket that disappeared. A general consensus prevailed that the baby had swallowed it. After strenuous efforts to obtain a physician someone discovered that the cat had got it. An amusing comedy.

THE CHEESE OF POLICE (Apollo), May 3.—One of Fred Mace's rough-house comedies in which Mace plays the part of a policeman. There is much fall down and turn over business by the burlesque force. Mr. De Gray and Miss Loveridge play prominent parts; not a bad comedy.

THE DIFFERENT MAN (Majestic), May 5.—A very strong dramatic offering which has been well photographed in all its beautiful scenes. It contains in its plot rather more than usual of intensity. The acting is finely done. Francelia Billington appears as the girl, Donald Crisp is the ranch foreman, and Ralph Lewis is the outlaw. This is an elegant production.

THE BROKEN BOTTLE (Reliance), May 6.—One of those heart interest pictures for which the Reliance Company is famous. Spottiswoode Aitken is at home in one of those pathetic parts which he so faithfully and naturally portrays. Mae Marsh as his daughter, does her usual good work. The plot is somewhat complicated and melodramatic, containing intense moments. H. W. Long and Jack Dillon as the two crooks, do good work. The incident concerning the broken bottle is a factor in working out the intensity of the offering.

THE CARD SHARPS (Domino), May 7.—This is a two-reel story with a strong plot, well developed, ending with a most satisfactory climax. Two men, notorious crooks, are discharged from prison. One decides to keep on the criminal path, while the other declares he will keep straight. The man with the resolve to lead a clean and honest life wins after a series of most interesting and thrilling adventures. Acting, photography and settings are entitled to great praise.

VASCO, THE VAMPIRE (Imp), May 7.—This is the first of a series of photoplays by George Edwards Hall, in which all of the participants are children. This number introduces seven-year-old Mattie Roubert and some clever assistants. The piece is a burlesque detective story. It has some laughable spots in it and holds the interest fairly well. The photography is not as clear in places as it might have been.

FORCED TO BE STYLISH (Princess), May 8.—The theme of this plot is conventional and has been used in farce, comedy and pictures over and over again. However, it has been well directed and proves quite amusing. An old-fashioned country aunt visits her city relatives, who force her to be stylish, she fights hard, but in the end she refuses to don her old-fashioned costumes, being satisfied she makes a better appearance in the new fangled things.

LOST: A UNION SUIT (Thanhouser), May 10.—Taking into consideration the camera man's work and the acting on the part of the entire cast, this is a creditable photoplay. While the plot as worked out is humorous, it is certainly the limit of absurdity. Mignon Anderson and Morris Foster were in the leads.

TOILERS OF THE SEA (Victor), May 11.—A sea story, written by James Dayton, with Warren Kerrigan and Vera Sisson as the young lovers. The youth goes to sea in his father's boat, which has been condemned, but is saved from death by his father's appearance in a launch. Not a very strong plot, but quite entertaining.

THEIR PICNIC (Crystal), May 12.—On the same reel with "Charlie's New Suit." This is full of complications that furnish quite a little comedy; nothing extraordinary, but not a bad offering.

CHARLIE'S NEW SUIT (Crystal), May 12.—This is a comedy that contains considerable action. Charlie buys a new suit and prepares to call on his best girl. While he is bathing a thief enters a window and steals the suit. Meeting Charlie's friend and rival, he sells him the suit, subsequently the complications create laughter, but in the finale, Charlie regains his suit and the girl.

UNIVERSAL IKE GETS A LINE ON HIS WIFE (Universal Ike), May 12.—Ike and his wife meet at the beach in company with a girl and a man, unexpectedly. The scenes are taken near San Pedro, and are well photographed. The story itself is a little breezy in treatment, but avoids actual vulgarity and should not offend. It is,, however, only fairly amusing.

HOW GREEN SAVED HIS WIFE (Joker), May 13.—This number, written by Grace Cunard, serves to introduce the rocky coast of La Jolla, near San Diego, with its picturesque environs. Mrs. Green is caught in an isolated cove by the tide and her husband goes on a wild goose chase for a rope while another man saves her. The situations are novel and pleasing.

THE UNLAWFUL TRADE (Rex), May 14.—This is another of many moonshine stories which is filled with melodrama from start to finish, murder and assault predominate with the shadow of the law overhanging all. There is a theme of love introduced which somewhat softens the ragged edges of the plot, and the sacrifice made by the hero is somewhat redeeming.

DAD'S ALLOWANCE (Frontier), May 14.—The reluctant father is lured into a flirtation by the young couple who wish to get married. The father is induced to sign a paper making his son his legal guardian while intoxicated in a cabaret. This is neither good humor nor good drama, and there is little to be recommended in it except the photography. This sort of plot is seldom handled effectively.

THE NEWLYWED'S DILEMMA (Nestor), May 15.—This is a highly interesting comedy, finely acted; photographically, it is almost perfect. The troubles that the newlyweds bob up against are possibilities that under the circumstances could happen. A good little comedy.

THE TRANSFORMATION OF PRUDENCE (Powers), May 15.—Ray

Gallagher and Edna Mason play the leads in this story, written by H. G. Stafford. It shows how a Quaker girl learns the tango, and how to dress in order to please her young husband. The plot is rather ovious, but the cast is pleasing and it holds the interest quite well.

THE FASCINATING EYE (Joker), May 16.—The eye that fascinates everybody and everything that she casts it upon is in the head of a miscegenous and enticing little silent actorine. This is a clever little picture play.

WON BY WIRE (Frontier), May 16.—A Western story picturing a gold strike in Coyote Canon. The girl climbs a telegraph pole and sends a message for help to her lover. The presence of this sort of communication in a wild country seemed improbable, and the various scenes were somewhat unconvincing all the way through, though attractively photographed.

CHARLIE'S WATERLOO (Crystal), May 17.—This is a sort of a continuation and concerns the marital troubles of Charlie and Vivian. Charlie meets a friend and they have a few drinks, which eases him to meet up with various troublesome adventures. Impossibilities predominate in this offering which makes it ludicrous, but, nevertheless, it is laughably received.

A BOOB THERE WAS (Rex), May 17.—A number featuring Robert Leonard and Hazel Buckham. The former plays the part of a country boob who sells his cow to buy an $87 automobile. He wins the love of the girl after considerable competition from the city salesman. This makes a fairly good offering.

OUR DAUGHTER (Eclair), May 17.—This is a dramatic offering with an anti-suffrage twang. Julia Stuart gives a presentation of an absorbed suffragette mother who neglects her daughter, played by Barbara Tennant. The girl elopes, but her lover is killed when his automobile goes over a cliff. This latter scene is very realistic. This holds the attention, and is a good offering of its kind.

Independent Specials

A MILLION IN PEARLS (Victor), May 15.—A two-reel offering, written by M. Kellerman. The first part presents a strong series of events which resemble a well-known act in vaudeville. The confidence woman lures a jeweler to the office of an alienist, having informed the latter that he is her husband, and is insane over jewels. The alienist under this impression aids her in making away with the pearls. The later events, in which the jewels are recovered, are of a rather conventional sort, but hold the interest well. This makes an entertaining number.

ON THE CHESSBOARD OF FATE (Imp), May 14.—A two-reel offering, written by W. Hanson Durham. This abounds in absurdities and improbabilities, and gains a certain interest from this very fact. The leading character is a villainous doctor, who hypnotizes individuals at will, induces an insane man to make out a will in his favor, tries to poison his own wife, commits murder, and does other things in keeping. No explanations are offered for vital happenings. The chief interest in the production is its amazing disregard of the usual rules of construction and the highly melodramatic incidents pictured. There is little in it that may be safely commended.

THE FOREST VAMPIRE (Domino), May 14.—There are flashes of good dramatic action in this two-reel film. Some of the acting is good, and the out-door settings are admirable. The plot is of the dime novel sort and full of improbabilities. The innkeeper, who pursues the calling of a highwayman in his leisure moments, wears a disguise which even a short-sighted man would have no trouble in penetrating. Modern matches and cigarettes do not jibe well with Rococco costumes.

LUCILLE LOVE (Gold Seal), Series No. 4, May 5.—This two reel number continues the adventures of Miss Cunard as the girl of mystery among the native blacks. The arch-conspirator, Hugo, sets fire to her hut, and there are numerous adventures of a characteristic and pleasing sort. She awes the warring natives by riding the white elephant into their midst. The action lags a little at times, but the scenic effects are spectacular and picturesque.

THE OPIUM SMUGGLERS (Gaumont), May 2. This is a three-reel feature photoplay that contains many thrilling scenes, beautifully photographed and splendidly acted. The plot illustrates the methods employed by the Chinese to smuggle opium into the United States. Several scenes in opium joints are incident. The work of destruction possible by machine guns on board a naphtha launch is well illustrated. Strenuous work, especially by the male and female leads in this picture make it intensely interesting.

SIMPLEX NEW CATALOGUE OUT.

The spring catalogue of the Precision Machine is now ready for delivery. It is a handsome publication, consisting of twenty-eight pages of reading matter profusely illustrated in half tone. The cover is heavily embossed in color, the size of the page being 9 x 12.

Great care has been taken in the compiling of this catalogue, and the text is comprehensive and gives, in clear and simple terms, a description of factory operations and full details of Simplex construction.

Of special note is the table of projection calculations, which has been compiled by J. E. Robin, and is the most complete ever offered. It shows the exact size of picture to be obtained, with all size lenses from 2 to 9 inches, based on aperture opening of 29 x 32 inches, and for all throws from 15 to 126 feet. This table is of incalculable value to lens manufacturers, dealers and operators, and a copy has been sent to every dealer and operators' union.

Captain Kleinschmidt Off to Mexico

With Two Cameras and an Assistant He Goes in Seach of Adventure.

CAPTAIN F. E. KLEINSCHMIDT is probably the champion of adventurers in the film world. (No, not adventurers of the melodramatic variety.) He is imbued with the real spirit of adventure, which is the essence of medieval chivalry. He, like the knights of old, from Sir Launcelot to Theodore Roosevelt, wants to sally forth and meet adventures. Instead of the cumbersome array of tin and iron, with which the ancient knights loaded themselves down, the Captain carries a moving picture camera. He follows the example of the old order of chivalry by having an asistant who is likewise equipped with the same kind of a camera.

Captain F. E. Kleinschmidt.

The Captain's second series of Alaskan pictures met with such a ready response that he was able to dispose of his interests in the Arctic Film Company in very short order. He no sooner had completed the last sale when he looked around for new worlds to conquer. With his camera triumphs in the farthest north still fresh in everybody's mind, he cast his ambitious glance south, even into the land below the Rio Grande. Mexico seemed to offer a wealth of opportunities for men who had daring and cameras. It did not take the Captain long to make up his mind. In a very few hours he had laid out his plans.

Omitting none of the precautions which experience has suggested, the Captain had himself vaccinated afresh and then inoculated with some sort of serum supposed to insure immunity from those ravaging diseases which threaten the newcomer in Mexico, where heat and lack of sanitation combine in record cultures of all kinds of deadly germs.

"It will take me two or three days to get over the effects of the inoculation," said the Captain in speaking to a World man, "but I think it a wise step to take. To tell you the truth, I am much more inured to cold than heat. Unless the extreme heat knocks me out, you may count on it that I will bring back something that is worth while. I have chosen an able and seasoned cameraman for my assistant, and before the end of the week I expect to start off for Mexico. If by that time mediation has accomplished peace it may, of course, upset my plans. Just now, I am inclined to take a chance. One cannot know what may happen or when it may happen, but I believe in being on the spot or as near it as possible. We will go directly to Galveston from New York and then we will try to get to Vera Cruz just as quickly as we can. I only wished I had been there these last few days, but then the big things may all be ahead, and perhaps the mediators will wait until I arrive. In all such things we simply have to trust to luck. In Vera Cruz we will try to get some horses and provisions, and then we will strike for the interior. I do not know how long I will be gone; that will all depend on circumstances. Have you heard any news from Teddy?"

"I told the Captain of the report that the Unconquerable Theodore had just discovered a new tribe of wild men somewhere in the South American jungles."

"Well, that ought not to phaze a man like him,' said the Captain, laughing. "Any man who has been in Republican politics as long as he has will scarcely be embarrassed by additional discoveries of wild men."

The Captain will keep in touch with civilization as long and as much as possible, and will from time to time, give the readers of The Moving Picture World news of things in general and of moving picture things in particular. There is a considerable batallion of camera men already in Mexico, but the intreped captain is a seasoned veteran and is almost certain to give a good account of himself. Watch his smoke!

Hearing on National Censorship.

Opponents of the Measure Are Heard Before the House Committee on Education—W. Stephen Bush's Arguments Against the Smith-Hughes Bill—Rev. P. P. Carter, of the National Board of New York, Also Speaks.

THE hearing on the Smith-Hughes National Censorship Bill before the House Committee on Education, at Washington, May 5, began on schedule time. Despite a raging rainstorm, despite the fact that at this time every member of the House is overburdened with work and uncommonly busy, there was a full quorum of the committee, the following members being present, when Chairman Hughes called the meeting to order: John W. Abercrombie, of Alabama; J. Thompson Baker, of New Jersey; Thomas C. Thacher, of Massachusetts; Caleb Powers, of Kentucky; Horace M. Towner, of Iowa; Edmund Platt, of New York; Allen T. Treadway, of Massachusetts; Simeon D. Fess, of Ohio; and Arthur R. Rupley, of Pennsylvania.

Chairman Hughes, in asking the members to come to order, briefly outlined the purposes of the bill, on which a hearing was to be had. He said he had given the authors and advocates of the bill a full opportunity to be heard and he now called upon the opponents of the proposed measure to present their arguments. Addressing himself to W. Stephen Bush, who had been invited to be present, he asked him to submit his reasons against the bill to the members of the committee.

Mr. Bush, in addressing the committee, said he wished it understood that he was not financially interested in any producing or distributing concern, that he had no interest in any motion picture theater, and that he was not directly or indirectly, officially or unofficially, connected with the National Censor Board, of New York. Continued, Mr. Bush said:

I am speaking to you gentlemen as a close student and an ardent friend of the motion picture and my viewpoint is simply that of an ordinary American citizen interested in public affairs.

It may well be questioned whether Congress under its delegated powers has authority to assume control of the subject matter with which the bill of the entire committee purports to deal. I shall not, however, go into that phase of the question at all. I would rather submit for your consideration certain arguments which seem to make it plain that the bill is most unlikely to accomplish the objects which it is intended to accomplish.

I think it may be considered a well settled axiom of our laws and traditions that every medium of expression ought to be as free and unrestrained as possible. Indeed, this sentiment has been written into the organic law of every state and into the very Constitution of the United States. We do not interfere with the stage to the extent of censoring. We do not interfere with the newspapers to the extent of censoring. This does not mean that either the stage or newspaper are above the law. On the contrary, both are distinctly amenable under the statute and under the common law. Under the statute of every commonwealth, the state has always dealt with certain evils that grew out of the abuse of freedom of expression. We do not ask the playwright to submit his work to a committee of detectives. We do not ask a publisher to send the proof sheets of his articles to be o. k.'d by police headquarters. These propositions are self-evident. When, however, the stage offends common decency or permits exhibitions which actually constitute a common nuisance, the law steps in, not with censorship but with measures of suppression and criminal prosecution. Whenever the newspaper prints a piece of obscene and indecent matter, the law hales the publisher before the court and makes him suffer for his abuse of the liberty of the press. Why should a different course be pursued with motion pictures? Let me ask you to consider this fact most carefully. We are now releasing for exhibition in all the moving picture theaters of this country approximately 150,000 feet of film, including a great variety of subjects, dramatic, economic, topical, educational etc. These pictures are seen by more than 50 per cent. of our population. If they were as full of obscenity as some of our friends among the reformers maintain, they would never have risen to the esteem and popularity which they now enjoy among all classes of people. The men who produce these films, the men who distribute them and the men who exhibit them cannot afford as a simple matter of business to offend that respect for common decency so deeply ingrained into the makeup of every normal person. The manager of the theater, the publisher of the newspaper may avoid the immediate consequences of public anger and resentment. They need not come into actual contact with the patrons of the theater or readers of the paper. It is quite different with the exhibitor. He must face day after day and night after night people who pay for admission into his entertainment. He is under the constant and immediate supervision of his own public and he would ill afford to brave the anger of a father or mother of a family whose children had been scandalized by offensive portrayals on the screen. I have travelled in pretty nearly every part of this country and I have come into close relation with exhibitors everywhere. Last year I travelled through the state of Ohio seeing a very large number of exhibitors and there was but one sentiment among them and it was this: "We must be our own censors. There is hardly one of us who does not endeavor to give to the public the best in his audience and we are most anxious as in all things only that which is clean and respectable. To do otherwise would be to spite our own bread and butter."

It is true that there are a very few producers who, with no investment to protect, are reckless as to the choice of their pictures. These men generally seek to exploit a temporary craze fostered by the yellow journals and with an investment of perhaps one or two thousand dollars they bring disgrace and contempt upon the industry, the rank and file of which compare favorably with the rank and file of any industry. Will censorship, that is to say, will the imposition of a previous legal restraint kill off these undesirables? It may and it may not, but whether it will or whether it will not, are not the certain evils of censorship far greater than the possible evils of which a few individuals may be guilty? Our courts are full of libel suits and it happens occasionally that a publisher is punished for printing and circulating obscene and lewd articles. Would this justify the abolition of the liberty of the press? Censorship is entirely alien to American conceptions of public life. It has, from time immemorial, been the engine of tyranny and oppression, a fact which was finely elaborated by John Milton in his plea for the Liberty of Unlicensed printing. To restrict censorship at the beginning of the twentieth century seems like going into a chamber of horrors and galvanizing the follies of past ages. Censorship is an impossible expedient and belong as much to the dead past as, for instance, the legal disabilities of married women or the rights of a feudal lord in the thirteenth century. The present law is quite capable of dealing with those who would degrade and abuse this noble invention of motion pictures. Within the last three months two men who showed, or attempted to show, films dealing with the so-called "white slave" evil on Broadway were arrested under the law which makes an indecent exhibition a misdemeanor. They asked for and received a jury trial and it was the judgment of their peers that they were guilty under the law. There have been no further "white slave" films on Broadway since then.

I have, however, left the strongest and most conclusive argument against censorship to the last. Do you realize with what tremendous arbitrary power you invest the man whom you place in judgment over the producers, distributors and exhibitors of films? Let us assume that the motives of such a commission as this bill contemplates are above reproach and suspicion, is it safe and fair to make the judgment of one or two or three individuals absolute and conclusive as against the investment of millions and millions of dollars? No man can wholly detach himself from his personal feelings and opinions. Women who have been appointed on boards of censorship in at least two states are even more subject to the influence of their personal feelings and opinions. The film may honestly seem to them objectionable when perhaps in the judgment of the great public it might not be. Their aye or no would mean the absolute destruction of property, practically without remedy or appeal. The experience of all nations and especially English speaking nations has been that no individual nor any set of individuals are to be entrusted with such absolute power as would be vested in a board of censors.

The speaker then took up the question of censorship in European countries, briefly sketching the system which prevails in each country and its effects upon the industry. By suggestion of Mr. Powers, the Chairman asked Mr. Bush to compile all data in reference to European censorship and incorporate it into his address.

The committee had listened to the speaker with marked attention and frequently interrupted him to ask questions or to controvert his conclusions.

Mr. Towner, of Iowa, wanted to know whether there was not something radically wrong with motion pictures when there was "a nation-wide demand for censorship."

"I deny that there is such a demand," replied Mr. Bush. "There are eight and forty states in this Union and motion pictures have been shown in every one of them for at least the last eight years. Out of the 48 states only two have adopted censorship and in neither of the two was the censorship the result of a public demand. If there were a "nation-wide demand" there would be more than two states with censorship laws."

"Is it not a fact," asked another member of the committee, "that in England the public rallied to the support of the censorship of plays despite the fact that Bernard Shaw did his best to create a hostile sentiment?"

"I would draw no conclusions from this fact," said Mr. Bush in response, "other than that the British public cherishes a lively resentment against Shaw for his clever scourging of the foibles and weaknesses that are particularly British. Certainly the fact is not revelant here, except that the censorship of plays is one of those British institutions that have never taken any root in American soil."

Many other questions were put and much interesting discussion ensued, but there is no space for it all in this column. The whole address and discussion will be printed and may then be had for the asking by any one who chooses to write to Mr. James L. Fort, the clerk of the House Committee on Education.

After Mr. Bush the Rev. P. P. Carter spoke. He said he was a member of the National Board of Censors of New York and then went very fully into the workings of the board. The reverend gentleman did not know that the General Film Company had some time ago left its patrons free to take outside films and this information was supplied to him by Mr. A. Brylawski, a well-known Washington exhibitor, who attended the meeting of the committee. Mr. Carter said that the National Board censored about 98 per cent. of all films made or imported, but the sources of his knowledge did not seem very definite.

Another hearing before the committee will be held next Friday, May 15.

ECLECTIC OPENS NEW EXCHANGES.

The Eclectic Film Company announces that it has opened a new branch exchange for the release of regular features at 910 Gravier Street, New Orleans, La., under the direction of J. A. Nicoll. Another branch has been opened at 1235 Vine Street, Philadelphia, Pa., under the management of Robert Etris, formerly manager of one of the New York branches of the General Film Company.

TO DECORATE THEATER WITH FLOWERS.

Gustav Schroeder, of the Schroeder Art Flower Manufacturing Company, Cleveland, Ohio, reports that his company has closed a contract for the decoration of Keith's Hippodrome, Cleveland, with fireproofed electrical flowers. The scheme of decoration includes the entire house and the effect will be to transform it into a veritable bower, giving the house a cool and delightful atmosphere.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

Censor Funkhouser Over-Ruled by Superior Judge.

"MAGDA, a Modern Madame X.," a film handled by the Clingen Curtain System, which was refused a permit by Second Deputy Funkhouser, has had the ban lifted by Superior Court Judge Tuthill, of this city. After a long series of ups and downs in the courts, Judge Tuthill issued a writ of mandamus compelling Chief of Police Gleason to issue a permit for the films. The writ was granted Saturday, May 2nd, after the Judge, accompanied by his daughter, had seen a private exhibition of the pictures the preceding evening.

"I didn't see anything shocking to anyone in this film," said Judge Tuthill, in rendering an oral decision. "It makes vice unattractive and hideous. These conditions are conditions of life. We hear them every day in divorce cases. All one would have to do to see this story in real life would be to attend the default cases tried here day after day.

"I don't see how there can be anything harmful or demoralizing in this picture. I don't think if I were licensed to censor plays I should see anything obnoxious in this film, and I shall, therefore, grant the writ of mandamus."

"As far as the city is concerned, we will not interfere with the showing of this picture," replied Max Korshak, attorney for the city. "But I'll ask that you deny the writ. If not, we'll insist that we be allowed to proceed to trial to have the power of these officials determined."

"I'll not do it," said the Judge firmly. "You agreed yesterday if I viewed the picture you would abide by my decision."

"We wish it to be understood that this is not Mr. Funkhouser's picture, but that it is Judge Tuthill's picture, exhibited with his permission," said Mr. Korshak. "We are forced to say this, your honor."

The court ruled, however, that the city would be given thirty days to file a bill of exceptions.

Major Funkhouser declared, after leaving the courtroom: "I could never place my O. K. on such a moving picture. If Judge Tuthill wishes to have such a picture shown to children that is another matter. I will never issue a permit for the exhibition. The Judge pointed out that some of the high-class operas he has seen on the stage are very much like the picture in question, but it must not be forgotten that few children witness high-class operas; the people who see operas have good understanding. Sixty per cent. of those who attend nickel shows are children. It is the children we are fighting to save. The older ones can take care of themselves."

Pictures Lead an Orchestra.

A recent cable dispatch to the Chicago News reveals a new use for the moving picture. This is no less than the preservation of the orchestral interpretations of great conductors. The invention which is by a Berlin company, makes it possible for a real orchestra to be conducted by a photographed leader.

Herr Felix Weingartner, who was requested to allow himself to be "filmed" as a director, was skeptical until he saw an orchestra playing the overture to "Carmen" under the direction of a photographed conductor.

"The effect was altogether astounding," he said, after the performance. "The orchestra played exactly as well as though conducted by a living being. I am convinced that it is possible to give as artistic a program through this invention as with a living conductor. This is an important epoch in the annals of moving pictures, because there is nothing automatic about it, and any beloved director can wield an influence in the artistic world for generations to come."

Films already have been taken of several of the leading European conductors.

Moving Pictures Preserve Family Ties.

In a recent address delivered by Mrs. Gertrude Howe Britton, this city, under the auspices of the National Kindergarten College at 2944 Michigan Avenue, that strong supporter of moving pictures said:

"There are too many organizations and individuals engaged in misguided and futile efforts to uplift the masses. The world is not by any means as black as it is painted, for nearly every one would rather do right than wrong, and the taste for bad plays and vicious pictures comes solely from their unhindered exploitation.

"Let us have plenty of good, clean comedy. Let the picture film producers give us the right kind of pictures and in the end they will find that they pay best. The establishment of municipal social centers will work wonders and every sociologist is delighted that there are to be municipal dance halls in operation in the near future.

"The influence of the moving picture shows is good beyond question. Critics have said that poor people spend more than they should on this amusement; but, on the other hand, they have done more than anything else to unify the family life among the people, for they have kept the families together in their recreations when they might otherwise have been miserably separated."

"Spartacus" will Open in Auditorium, May 11.

The Auditorium has been secured for the summer months by George Kleine for the presentation of great feature photodramas. "Spartacus," an eight-part subject by Cines, will be the opening attraction.

The subject will be exhibited in three acts, and it has been arranged that an orchestra of thirty pieces will render operatic selections between the second and third acts, and an overture before the curtain on the screen is raised. The operatic intermission numbers will be of the nature of grand opera promenade concerts, during which patrons can indulge in tete-a-tetes with friends, or discuss the merits of the pictures.

The Auditorium will seat over 4,000 people regularly, but, if necessary, it can be arranged so that it will seat 7,000 people. The Metropolitan Opera House, New York City, seats 3,449 people. The Auditorium is the home of grand opera in Chicago, and, needless to state, numbers among its clientele not only the leaders of society and prominent members of the professions and art circles, but also all that best represent the citizenship of the city.

The season of high-class moving pictures at the Auditorium cannot fail to extend the influence of cinematography. Many thousands will be brought over to the ranks of moving picture regulars, and many thousands more—who have already joined the ranks—will insist hereafter on better subjects at their regular theaters and on better projection.

"Spartacus" will be given its opening presentation on Monday, May 11th.

New Dignity for Film Manufacturers.

William N. Selig and George K. Spoor were traveling to New York City, via the 20th Century, a few weeks ago. Nearing Toledo, Ohio, a flock of sheep was seen grazing in a meadow, near the tracks.

"Why do white sheep eat more than black sheep?", asked Mr. Selig.

"I didn't know that they do," replied Mr. Spoor.

"Why?", he queried.

"Because there are more of them," answered Mr. Selig.

Mr. Spoor looked quizzically at his companion for a moment and said: "Well that's pretty good for a celluloid impresario."

"The mobbled queen is good." So is "celluloid impresario." Next!

Chicago Film Brevities.

J. B. Hunter and A. W. Turner, owners of the Crown Theater, Jackson, Mich., called at THE WORLD office last week. The Crown is the oldest moving picture house in Jackson, and seats 300 people. General Film service is used and admission is five and ten cents. Business is fair. They stated that they run the Kathlyn series every other Friday to very good business.

The Schiller Feature Film Company has moved its offices from 140 North Dearborn Street to Suite 605-06 Schiller Building.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer, the well-known Chicago exhibitors, owning and controlling a large chain of moving picture theaters and vaudeville houses in Chicago, are now going into the exchange business. They will open a feature film exchange, with offices on the third floor of the Orpheum Theater Building. H. A. Spanuth, for many years prominently connected in the film exchange and feature film business, and who lately organized the Celebrated Players Film Company, of this city, has been appointed general manager.

The Health Department has issued certificates to 157 theaters in Chicago that have complied with the ventilation ordinance. Two hundred and ninety-two theaters have ventilating systems installed or in process of installation. There are still 282 theaters without proper ventilation, according to the Health Department.

Alice Joyce in Serial

Kalem Will Feature Its Popular Actress in Picture Stories.

WHILE the serial motion picture story has attained tremendous popularity, its one great drawback, according to exhibitors, is that it presumes too much upon the patience of the motion picture patron.

According to exhibitors the person paying good money to see a complete performance does not relish the idea of being informed just at the time the story is reaching a smashing climax, that he must wait two weeks before he can see the continuation of the story.

Alice Joyce.

Consequently, an announcement just issued by Kalem concerning a series of Alice Joyce features will be of interest to the exhibitor and motion picture "fan." Commencing Monday, June 8, a two-part production in which the popular Kalem star appears, will be released every other Monday.

According to the Kalem announcement, each of the features will be complete in itself and entirely independent of the other productions embraced in the series. This means that the photoplay patron who may miss one of the series can see the next story with the assurance that the Alice Joyce feature on the screen is a story that has no connection with its predecessor in the series.

It will therefore be perceived that the "fans" will have the opportunity of seeing Miss Joyce in an entirely different role every two weeks. This will enable the charming actress to give further proof of her versatility.

It is said that each of the Alice Joyce features will prove a fitting vehicle for the famous Kalem actress. With the avowed intention of making every drama in the series a genuine headliner, the producers commissioned a number of well-known writers to draw up stories especially adapted to display Miss Joyce's talents.

Miss Joyce's hold upon the motion picture public is a valuable asset to exhibitors, and as a result of the loyalty of this charming star's following, features in which she appears are always in great demand.

Since it is a Kalem axiom never to do things by halves, Miss Joyce has been surrounded by a cast of players almost as popular herself. The sterling worth of this cast and the unusual stories of the every-other-week Alice Joyce series are two of the reasons why it is destined to be a success.

The first two-part production of the series will be "Nina of the Theater," a story of the stage. As already stated, the release date of this feature will be Monday, June 8.

Patent Case Decision

Judge Mayer Decides in Favor of Edison in Re-Issue Patent Litigation.

THE validity of the Edison re-issue patents controlled by the Motion Picture Patents Company which has been questioned by Carl Laemmle and the Independent Moving Picture Company for several years, was sustained by Judge Mayer, of the United States District Court, this week and a decree perpetually enjoining the Independent Moving Picture Company of America and the Imp Film Company using the Warwick camera held to be an infringement of the patent rights of the Motion Picture Patents Company will be entered.

The next step in the long litigation which commenced in December, 1909, when the Motion Picture Patents Company filed a complaint through its attorneys, Dyer & Taylor, to secure injunctive relief and damages based on an accounting, will be to take testimony before a special master as a basis for assessing a bill of damages against the defendants.

The defendants have contested every step in the litigation bitterly, but the defense narrowed down to the alleged invalidity of the Edison re-issue patents, non-infringement and the claim that the complainants through failure to file a disclaimer following adverse decisions and laxity in prosecuting claims had rendered them null and void.

"In the case of re-issue," said Judge Mayer, "the patentee loses all of the rights which he had prior to the re-issue and he may ask for injunctive relief and damages only from a date subsequent to the re-issue, while in the case of a proper disclaimer, the patentee may still obtain injunctive relief or damages for infringement prior to the date of disclaimer or both, in regard to that part of the invention which is justly his own," Judge Mayer pointed out: "The failure to disclaim did not of itself render the patent void. It simply resulted in closing the door to recovery for past damages and injunctive relief at that time, because the complainant itself closed that door when the patent was surrendered and the re-issue applied for."

At that time the defendants opposed the application for a temporary injunction before Judge Noyes in 1910 on the ground that the complainant's patents were invalid because, as it was alleged, they had been obtained in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law. The defense was overruled and a temporary injunction issued which soon resulted in the arraignment of the officials of the defendant company on a charge of contempt of court for refusing to obey the injunction. The corporation was punished for the violation.

The following year the United States Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the decision of the district court in granting the temporary injunction, ruling the issues involved in the suit should be determined at a final hearing. It was at this time that the claim was made that the re-issue patents were void on account of the alleged unreasonable neglect and delay on the part of the complainant to file a disclaimer.

Since then over two thousand pages of testimony have been taken before a special master and three days were consumed by the opposing counsel in presenting the final argument to the court.

Judge Mayer paid a remarkable tribute to the motion picture industry in the closing lines of the opinion, in which he said: "To declare the present re-issue invalid would be to deprive the owner of the patent of the fruits of an invention which the courts have declared valid in all substantial particulars and which, I regard as a meritorious invention and a useful contribution to an industry that has advanced by leaps and bounds, that has given employment to many thousands of people and that has afforded amusement and instruction to the public at large."

"The House of Temperley"

A Five-Part Film Adaptation of Conan Doyle's Novel, by the London Film Company.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

EASE heralds perfection. The masterhand performs its work playfully with no visible strain or effort. "The House of Temperley" is a fine example of art concealing art. Not one inch of wasted motion was I able to discover, every scene moved to some purpose and brought the action nearer to its climax. All the elements which go to make a complete success are present in this feature in nicely adjusted proportions.

Scene from "The House of Temperley."

The film is based on Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's story. The dramatic values of this tale are obvious. Its action is rapid, it abounds in turns of the unexpected, its characters are taken from the finest and at the same time from the most picturesque side of English life, the leading themes are honor, love and sport. The climax is sufficiently far removed from the commonplace to please the discriminating, while the str ng melodramtic touches in the play have an appeal that is universal. If there are any flaws in the construction of this play I for one have been unable to discover them. Seldom has there been finer direction and more skilful elimination than here, one is reminded of what James Russel Lowell has so finely described as "the science of irrecognition of non-essentials." The director was Harold M. Shaw, well known in this country.

Scene from "The House of Temperley."

Next to its faultless construction in the catalogue of excellence comes the acting of the cast. It is camera-perfect. Characterization is one of the strong points in the story. It is if anything made stronger in the filmed version. There is Sir Charles Temperley (Ben Webster), an admirable type of the British nobility, full of human weaknesses but sound in essentials and willing to risk and sacrifice his life for the sake of noblesse oblige. There is the younger brother (Charles Maude), with the same stout English heart and the same love of sport; there is Ginger Stubbs (Wyndham Guise), the burly, but intensely loyal servant with his prize-fighting past; there are two well portrayed figures in the underworld of sport, the crooked gamblers and sportsmen, Sir John Hawker (Charles Rock) and Jakes (Edward O'Neil), all perfectly suited to their parts and true to life in the minutest detail of appearance and manners and acting. Though they be but shadows on the screen they move and act like veritable human beings of flesh and blood. Yolande May made a most charming and sympathetic Lucy, while the minor part of Lady Temperley was filled with no mean skill by Claire Pauncefort. There were flashes of humor in every part; Ginger Stubbs and his sweetheart, Ethel (Lillian Logan), being responsible for most of them.

The plot is marked by that simplicity which is always a source of strength in a screen play. The House of Temperley is on the verge of ruin because of the gambling mania of Sir Charles, its head. Lucy, an heiress in her own right, is persuaded by Lady Temperley to pledge her hand to Sir Charles in order to save the House of Temperley from disaster. She loves the younger brother and he loves her, but both make the sacrifice unflinchingly for the sake of the honor of Temperley. The younger brother is an amateur pugilist of much promise and keeps his skill alive by daily practice with Ginger Stubbs. Now, Sir Charles has promised upon the honor of a Temperley to stop gambling on the races or the cards, but nothing has been said about prize-fights. His wily antagonist in many a bout at the gaming table believes he has discovered an "Unknown" of exceptional merit and offers to back him against any unknown whom Sir Charles may be able to bring to the ring-side. The younger brother, thinking of Stubbs, advises Sir Charles not only to accept the bet but to raise the stakes to $50,000. Before the meeting in the ring the true form of Stubbs is revealed to Sir John Hawker and his confederate and they decide to kidnap the ex-prizefighter on the eve of the bout. They succeed, and when time is called things look black for the House of Temperley. At this critical juncture the younger brother throws his hat in the ring and after a desperate battle defeats the man of the schemers. The House of Temperley is saved. After the battle in the ring, Sir Charles challenges Sir John Hawker to a duel. He knows his adversary to be a perfect shot, but having found out that he stands in the way of the happiness of Lucy and his brother he welcomes the probable fatal ending of the duel. He kills his antagonist but himself receives a deadly wound. His last act on earth is to join the hands of his brother and Lucy and give them his blessing.

The photography is superb throughout, disposing forever of the foolish belief that no good photography can come from England. The settings both interior and exterior could not possibly be improved upon. In the selection of the outdoor scenes every choice was an inspiration.

"MYSTERY OF THE FAST MAIL" (Kleine-Eclise).

The term "a rattling good detective story" has been applied by press agents to practically every mediocre mystery film ever thrown upon the screen, and this has been done because it is a recognized fact that "a rattling good detective story" is one of the most popular of all themes with motion picture patrons.

In George Kleine's "Mystery of the Fast Mail," however, we have a subject that really deserves this sadly overworked descriptive caption. This is a Kleine-Eclipse picture made in Paris by the talented Eclipse company and worked up in a manner much to the credit of that popular organization. As is usual with Eclipse subjects, every detail is carefully and painstakingly handled, and the perfection of the completed production testifies to the unusual ability of the company's producers and directors.

A clever criminal, a shrewd detective and a slender clue combine to create a situation of the keenest interest. When the fast mail enters a long, dark tunnel there are two passengers in one of the cars. When it emerges from the other end of the bore, there is only one. Detective Byrnes solves the mystery, destroys the network of circumstantial evidence which has threatened to convict an innocent person and brings the guilty one to trial. This splendid two-reel subject will be released through the General Film Company, Tuesday, May 19.

JOE BRANDT BACK FROM COAST.

Joe Brandt, of the Universal Film Company's publicity department, is back in the New York City offices after a six weeks' trip to the Pacific Coast, in the interests of the various Universal products. The "Lucille Love" serial, which is Brandt's "baby," was boosted quite materially on the trip and now there are more than eighty newspapers running the story in cities from New York to 'Frisco, and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf, in which the pictures are being shown.

"The Waif"

Six Parts. Eclectic.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS six-reel feature, "The Waif," is up to the best standards of the Eclectic. We take good photography, skillful direction, splendid acting and a sense of art in the selection of settings almost as matters of course in almost any of the features which are put on the market by this company.

Scene from "The Waif" (Eclectic).

The plot of this feature is rich in sentimental possibilities, which the director has developed to the utmost. The French drama is strong in sentiment at all times and for this reason it has an international appeal, though in strength and simplicity of construction the English drama is much above the French. The scenes in "The Waif" are laid both in England and in France. The atmosphere of both countries is reproduced with considerable skill. The story hinges on the strange pranks of fate with two children, sons of the same father and the same mother. It looks at times as if right would be forever on the scaffold and wrong forever on the throne, but that equalizing Nemesis, which is the hope and foundation of every sentimental drama, comes to the rescue of the oppressed and duly punishes the guilty.

The actors and actresses in the play were selected from the best theaters in the capital of France and most of them are known to admirers of Eclectic films. None of them are strangers to the camera.

The success of this film play depended much on the strength of the characterization of its principal figures. In this respect it would be difficult to improve the performance of the actors. There is a finish and detail work which one loves to see on the screen at all times. The children who take part in the play are deserving of special mention. They act with perfect naturalness and never even seem tempted to play to the camera. "The Waif" is a typical Eclectic success.

Pathe Opens Exchanges

Claiming Discrimination by the General Film Company, Distributing Offices are Established in the Principal Cities.

Following the open letter addressed to the General Film Company by its attorneys and published in the Moving Picture World of May 9, Pathe Freres announces this week the establishment of sixteen exchanges in a number of the leading cities of the United States. Regarding this radical move on the part of Pathe Freres, L. P. Bonvillain, vice-president of that company, explained his position to a representative of the Moving Picture World in the following terms:

"The opening of these exchanges is necessitated by the insistent demand of exhibitors for Pathe's Weekly and their inability to secure it through the General Film Company. From every section of the country we have received letters and telegrams from exhibitors asserting their desire to show Pathe's Weekly and complaining that they were unable to get it. The opening of these exchanges will afford them the opportunity to satisfy the demand of their patrons and to display the latest pictures of the world's events, as shown in Pathe's Weekly—an opportunity which these exhibitors say has been denied them by the General Film exchanges.

"Our exchanges are located in the following cities: Atlanta, Syracuse, St. Louis, Boston, Cleveland, Minneapolis, Chicago, New York, Cincinnati, Dallas, Pittsburgh, Portland, Oregon, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Philadelphia.

"The action of Pathe Freres in opening these exchanges," continued Mr. Bonvillain, "should not be considered in any manner as a fight against the General Film Company. We have no intention of fighting the General Film Company. At the same time we believe that it has committed a breach of contract in forcing the substitution of another weekly for Pathe's Weekly. We have overwhelming evidence to the effect that this substitution is almost always against the wishes of the exhibitors and of the general public and it is because of the numerous demands made upon us that we have been compelled to offer Pathe's Weekly in this manner direct to the exhibitor, and we will continue to do so as long as the General Film Company maintains its present attitude toward our weekly."

Mr. Bonvillian said that no expense would be spared to make the Pathe exchange service efficient. Each office will be supplied with a plentiful number of copies of the weekly to supply the demand. The issue has been reduced from two to one reel each week, eliminating many trivial subjects and giving the cream of the world's events only. More camera men have been engaged, including six recently sent to Mexico. These facts led Mr. Bonvillian to conclude that the weekly will be better and brighter than ever.

Two Producers Go Abroad

Hugh Ford and Edwin S. Porter, of the Famous Players, Sail for Europe on Important Picture Making Tour.

Edwin S. Porter, technical director of the Famous Players Film Company, and Hugh Ford, the distinguished producer of a long list of theatrical successes, more recently including "Joseph and His Brethren," "The Yellow Ticket," and "Potash and Perlmutter," accompanied by six members of the Famous Players, sailed Thursday morning, May 7, for Europe on the steamship Kaiser Auguste Victoria, on an extended tour for the production of a series of spectacular feature films, to be based on celebrated plays of the day.

They will join James K. Hackett in Paris, where this popular star will be presented in a five-part film version of "Monsieur Beaucaire," by Booth Tarkington. James K. Hackett was the first American star to follow the lead of Sarah Bernhardt, and appear in a motion picture production for the Famous Players, about a year ago, when he portrayed his geatest characterization, "The Prisoner of Zenda," before the camera.

Shortly after the completion of this production, Mary Pickford, the most popular motion picture star in the world, commonly termed "the Maude Adams of the movies," will sail for Europe to appear in a series of plays, in each of which she will depict a different national type, embracing England, Ireland, Scotland, Japan, Spain, Germany, France and Italy. In every case, the subject selected will be a famous play, produced and made popular in America.

In England the Famous Players will also produce "The Silver King," the celebrated play by Sir Henry Arthur Jones, and will photo-dramatize Hall Caine's famous novel, "The Eternal City," in Italy.

The tour is expected to last many months, and is considered a distinct departure in the production of motion pictures, in that it is the first time that an international tour of this wide range has ever been undertaken by a film concern.

"The Port of Missing Men"

Arnold Daly Appears in a Five-Part Famous Players Subject Staged in Picturesque Backgrounds.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

RIVALING in the stateliness of its backgrounds the best of the European pictures, "The Port of Missing Men," the five-part Famous Players subject released the first week in May, will have unusual attractiveness for picture-goers. As knowledge of the identity of the great estate appearing in this production will have interest, it may be said that it is Georgian Court, the Lakewood home of George Gould who, it will be remembered by those of an older generation, chose for a wife Edith Kingdon, an actress—and while it is not a part of this story it may be added that so far as the public knows it has been a most happy union. Access to the grounds and premises is said to have been gained through the friendship subsisting between the star of the play and the owner of the magnificent estate. Matching the picturesqueness of the mansion, its spacious grounds and groves, and its long tree-lined approach are the elaborate interiors. It is a finely staged picture.

Arnold Daly, who among other characters on the stage has been most successful in the role of Napoleon in George Bernard

Scene from "The Port of Missing Men."

Shaw's "Man of Destiny," makes his debut in motion pictures as John Armitage, the Americanized son of the prime minister of his native country, from which he was taken in his boyhood in company with the heir to the throne. Mr. Daly displays no evidence of camera concern in his first encounter with the recording eye which to some experienced players has been known to impart several kinds of terror. As Armitage he is more of a fighter than a lover, although his successful suit for the hand of Shirley Claiborne shows that he is not impregnable to feminine charm; he is faithful in his friendship to his chum, the heir to the throne, and with inflexibility of purpose adheres to the lines whether of lesser or greater resistance best calculated to favor the interests of Frederick Augustus. Mr. Daly makes the most of his part, which confessedly limits him in opportunities for the display of characteristics that most deeply appeal.

Minna Gale Haines as the scheming archduchess gives a fine performance of the mother who seeks the recognition of her son as the heir to the throne. Mortimer Martini as Ferdinand Von Stroebel makes an impressive and convincing prime minister. Frederick Bock as the Emperor Charles Louis will remind one of a well-known European figure. His work will please. Augustus Balfour as Archduke Karl, the false claimant, the unstable and the weakling, does well in a difficult part.

Dave Wall as Jules Chauvenet, the conspirator in the employ of the archduchess, by his interpretation brings out the full strength of his part. Judge Claiborne is a fine type of American, one who by his personality alone compels interest.

The story is one of intrigue for the recognition of an heir to a throne in a mythical kingdom. There are good situations, especially in the last part, where the action is accelerated. Some of the best of these are where the old emperor summons his son in America to return to him. The schemers led by the archduchess try to prevent this, and as a result there are many clashes. Mr. Daly as Armitage has some real struggles with the men who are trying to prevent his lifelong friend from reaching his native land. The scenes at court are well carried out. The picture is one that will interest by reason of its many entertaining factors, but the story is not one that will measurably stir the heart.

Director Dawley Takes Vacation

J. SEARLE DAWLEY, director for the Famous Players and producer of a number of that company's notable releases, has resigned for the purpose of taking a good long rest from his labors, with the ultimate intention of devoting his energies to the development of certain well defined ideas in the production of scenarios for big subjects. Mr. Dawley's service in the producing field dates back several years, most of which time was spent in the employ of the Edison Company, for which he made many notable pictures. Since joining the Famous Players he has performed yeoman service and his work has received high commendation from all sides.

J. Searle Dawley.

Speaking of his plans Mr. Dawley said: "It has been my desire for some time to get away from the grind and do a little thinking along certain lines that particularly appeal to me. I have realized for some time that one cannot reach one's ideal when compelled to do a stipulated amount of labor in a given time. The demands of a fixed program offer no incentive for artistic work, so I have resigned my present position, severing my connection with the Famous Players entirely, in preference to taking an extended vacation as was urged upon me. By thus cutting loose I hope to be able to do some original work in the way of scenario production which I believe will be worth while. Much of our scenario work is too hurriedly done. This seems to me to be wrong. Why, when contemplating a production costing $20,000, should only three days be allowed to prepare the scenario, as I know to have been the case in at least one instance? A playwright thinks he has accomplished something if he produces a play in six months, but we who produce motion pictures, though we have an infinitely more difficult task, turn out picture plays in six hours. There is a chance for improvement in the system.

"I have other interests that will hold my attention until I am ready to get into the harness again, but when I do resume work on pictures it will be along quite different lines from those I have followed in the past."

"SKY MONSTER" AT REPUBLIC THEATER.

"The Sky Monster," the Universal Company's latest special feature, will be shown at the Republic Theater, New York, beginning May 15.

Sawyer, Incorporated

New Feature Producing Company Opens Handsome Offices in the Mecca Building, New York City.

SAWYER, Incorporated, were giving early exhibitions of their first big feature picture, "The Lightning Conductor," with Dustin Farnum, this week and incidentally piloting their friends among the trade upon voyages of inspection of the newly opened Sawyer quarters on the eighth floor of the Mecca Building, No. 1600 Broadway, New York.

When A. H. Sawyer resigned his position as general manager of the Kinemacolor Company of America some time ago he took up the organization of a $100,000 company to embark in the film business along special lines which Mr. Sawyer had long felt would prove particularly profitable. This company is just getting into first class running order and announcements of new accomplishments are coming thick and fast.

Arthur H. Sawyer.

Prominently associated with Mr. Sawyer in the company is William H. Rudolph, who is serving as general manager. The combination is a particularly happy one. Mr. Sawyer has a wide acquaintance in the film business and has had years of experience in every branch of the industry, from manufacturing to exhibiting. Mr. Rudolph is an advertising originator of many years' experience and has been closely identified with the theatrical business for a considerable length of time.

For the past two weeks the Sawyer Company has been operating a big open air studio at Asbury Park, N. J., Mr. Sawyer, who has had experience on the legitimate stage, personally assisting in the productions. It is said that these pictures now being taken at Asbury Park are being turned out along entirely new lines, on an idea which will not be disclosed until five or six pictures have been completed and are ready for distribution. Mr. Sawyer and his associates are firmly convinced that this new idea in moving pictures will create a sensation in the film industry.

Of particular interest, too, is the Sawyer announcement that within the next few weeks the company will be in possession of a splendid studio site at Saratoga Springs, negotiations for which have been pending for some time. These studios will be located near one of the lakes, a mile or two from the village and in the heart of one of the most beautiful scenic sections in the East.

The offices which Sawyer, Inc., have fitted up in the Mecca Building indicate the solidity of the enterprise which has just been launcheed. Thirty-five hundred square feet of floor space are occupied and the equipment throughout is of the very best. The "Pompeiian Projection Room" is one of the most perfect of its kind in the country. No expense has been spared in fitting it up and, in general effect, it is a quiet well appointed clubroom possessed of the atmosphere of pleasure and enjoyment rather than the hurry and bustle of business. There are big easy chairs for the comfort of the exhibitors who visit the place to make their feature selections and every convenience, including telephones conveniently placed and neat little writing tables with shaded drop lights, has been provided. The ventilating system is guaranteed to provide a temperature of seventy or less on the hottest day of the summer and a beautiful fountain, which is being placed in the center of the room, will add greatly to the charm and comfort of the place.

Starting with a production as pretentious as "The Lightning Conductor," with Dustin Farnum, there is every promise of spectacular success for Mr. Sawyer and his associates. This big photoplay from the novel of the same name by C. N. and A. N. Williamson, is in seven parts and has been produced by William Elliott, well known producer and manager in the legitimate field who seems possessed of much of the genius of David Belasco, whose daughter he married. Prominent in the cast with Mr. Farnum are Walter Hale, Miss Helen Bertram, and Miss Rosina Henley, as well as Mr. Elliott himself. The picture was made in Europe last summer, the opening scenes being laid in London and subsequent ones in the Swiss Alps and along the famous Lake Como in Italy. In addition to "The Lightning Conductor," the Sawyer company is already offering state rights on several other pictures of different classes and prices.

Fox to Sell State Rights

Has Secured Many Excellent Features and Has Territory to Dispose of.

WILLIAM FOX, whose success at the head of a large circuit of vaudeville and motion picture theaters has made him known to the public throughout the country and whose further successful efforts as a renter of film have made him known to the trade generally, has launched into the state rights feature film business.

Mr. Fox has consummated with Herbert M. Horkheimer a deal whereby all the products of the Balboa Feature Films will be sold to exchange men of the United States, Canada, and South America through him. He has also been in conference during the last week with representatives of ten of the largest European producing companies and a million-dollar deal was made for the handling of unusual features for North and South America, and plans have been made to take the leading feature dealers of the country into the scheme.

William Fox.

The Box Office Attraction Company, of No. 130 West 46th Street, will use all these features for New York City and State, Northern New Jersey, and all of the New England States, and will dispose of the remaining territories. Abraham Carlos will be in charge of the state rights department of the Fox organization. The feature films to be sold to state rights buyers will pass through the Box Office Attraction Company's hands. A special effort will be made to deal with exchanges who supply the larger picture houses and those playing vaudeville and feature pictures.

The first state rights to be sold will be the subject, "St. Elmo," in six reels, and "The Will o' the Wisp," four reels. The latter feature was made at the time of the flood in Southern California, and is realistic and sensational, aided by the whims of nature in the rush of water over a flooded village.

Public exhibitions for buyers will be held at the two little theaters of the Box Office Attraction Co. at their main offices, No. 130 West 46th Street. In addition, the Box Office Company uses in its exchange service in New York, Northern New Jersey and all of the New England States, the complete output of Ramo, Blache, Solax, Gaumont, Great Northern Film Company, and a selection of the products of sixteen other manufacturers.

"The Mistress of the Air"

A Three-Reel Production Released by Albert Blinkhorn Feature Company Under the "Deer Brand."

Reviewed by Harry W. DeLong.

THIS is an American production and was made principally along the coast of southern California. Florence Seidell, said to be the only woman in the world flying a hydro-aeroplane, is the star, and she certainly demonstrates that she has the nerve to accomplish wonderful feats, in driving an automobile at full speed and manipulating a hydro-aeroplane both on the water and in the air. The gentleman in the cast, Richard Garrick, as Tom Hendricks, the villainous villain, and Jack Conway, as Dick, clearly show that they are not afraid to take chances in the portrayal of their roles. This picture-play involves all the elements in its plot —air, land and water. Miss Seidell makes an actual fall, accidentally, of three hundred feet from her aeroplane while racing with a motor boat, which was recorded by the camera. There is a highly interesting romance incorporated in this picture, full of light and shade; told in exquisite photography and intense action. One can exult with the lovers and sneer at the villain, who exerts every effort to foil the hero, but of course he fails.

Seeing the Hero Thrown from the Clouds.

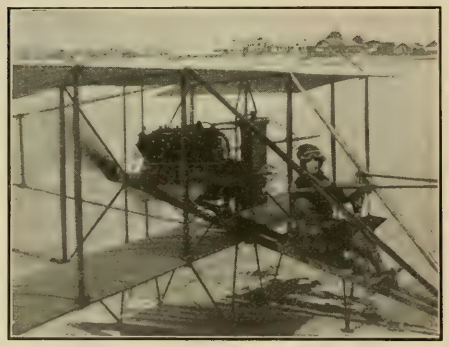
The principals of the cast are Florence Seidell, the "Mistress of the Air;" Richard Garrick, Tom Hendricks, the villain; Edith Sterling, Florence's chum and Jack Conway, as Dick, the lover and hero.



Florence Going to Dick's Rescue.

The story of the play is interesting. Florence Seidell, a wealthy young lady devoted to athletics of every kind, owns a hydro-aeroplane. Tom Hendricks (Richard Garrick), the owner of a dirigible airship, who is a fortune hunter, annoys her with his attentions without success. Florence has met and fallen in love with Dick Sterling. Later Tom induces Dick to take a trip with him in his dirigible and through jealousy determines to rid himself of his rival. He attacks Dick and throws him out of the balloon car. Fortunately Jack drops into the sea and is rescued by Florence, who has been watching them through a field glass, with her hydro-aeroplane. Later Tom is convicted of crippling the hydro-aeroplane by cutting one of the braces and in attempting to escape from the officers is shot while on a small hand ferry and falls into the stream. A month later Florence and Dick are married at an aerial wedding, which takes place in her hydro-aeropane, and they fly away on their honeymoon, disappearing in the clouds hanging over the summits of a range of California mountains.

The three hundred feet fall of Florence Seidell was an actual mishap, verified by the makers of the picture and was most thrilling, but which happily did not result seriously, from the fact that she fell into the water. The machine was totally wrecked, which fact the camera registered.

"The Curse of Greed"

A Five-Reel Feature Production of Extraordinary Merit to be Released Under the Melies General Brand.

Reviewed by Harry W. DeLong.

THAT this picture is a highly meritorious production in all its details cannot be denied. A mere slip of a boy essays the leading role and sustains it throughout the five reels amazingly. He is mentioned in the cast as "Little Adrian." Incidently, Adrian is called upon to do many strenuous stunts in the plot's developments, and he does them naturally (just as a boy would). This is not a display of heroics or impossible stunts, which a mere boy could not accomplish. The author of this photoplay has used discretion in this respect and throughout the entire production a pleasing continuity pertains.

Adrian has inherited from his ancestors a love of the sea, and through this natural born instincts readily accedes to the schemes of his enemies, whose tools subject him to cruelties, and he experiences many thrilling adventures.

Scene from "The Curse of Greed" (Melies).

The plot of this offering is complicated but extremely comprehensive, and it has been ably and carefully directed. The cast, in all respects, is strong and typical. Beautiful scenes, both interior and exterior, embellish the whole. A cabaret scene embracing, perhaps, two hundred persons, including clever professional artists, is one of the features, but the court scene in the final reel will be hard to surpass in quality and the number of people involved in the scene.

The Marquis de Luscky, a spendthrift nobleman, with little principle and less conscience, in league with Elias Webb, a grasping money-lender, scheme to relieve Adrian's mother, Viscountess Kinsale, of her vast fortune, she being widowed. Through accident or design the Marquis is thrown from his horse under the wheels of the Viscountess' automobile. This occurrence is taken advantage of by the two schemers to consummate their plans. Adrian objects to his mother's marital plans and instinctively dislikes the designing Marquis. Webb, the money-shark, ingratiates himself into the boy's affections and assumes the task of getting rid of Adrian, using as an incentive his inherent love for the sea, and forces the captain of a sloop who is indebted to him to shanghai the boy on board and dispose of him. An old sailor, Penrose, of the sloop, protests and rescues him from his perils, subsequently piloting him back to his mother at the critical moment, when she is being tried for the murder of her son and the poisoning of her husband, the Marquis de Luscky, who in his attempt to poison her, through fate, drinks the concoction intended for his wife, himself.

The utmost intensity is prevalent in this offering and photographically it is almost perfect. There are, as in all pictures, some trivial details lacking, but, all in all, it is a work of artistic merit. This subject will be released on May 19.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

"FIRST SHORT CIRCUIT" A GREAT SUCCESS.

Exhibitors and Exchangemen of Washington, D. C., Get Together at Banquet—Trade Conditions Discussed.

MORE than fifty exhibitors and exchangemen, and their guests of Washington, D. C., gathered together, Thursday evening, April 30th, at a banquet given at Castelli's at "The First Short Circuit" of the Exhibitors' and Exchangemen's Social Club, to talk over local conditions and bring the members of the various branches closer together. Talks on "Service" were strictly prohibited, but every subject other than that, of interest to those present, was brought up.

Mr. A. Dresner, the genial president of the club, acted as toastmaster. He started the ball rolling by telling of the formation of what is to be a medium of social intercourse. "About five weeks ago," he said, "Messrs. O'Brien, Crandall, Davis, Morgan, myself and a few others were talking things over and someone suggested that we organize something similar to the Screen Club and similar organizations in other cities, and we finally decided to try out some such plan." He gave a brief outline of what might be expected from the club and called upon Dr. Herbst, president of the League of Motion Picture Exhibitors of the District of Columbia, as the first speaker. .

Mr. Herbst congratulated the members on getting together and having so large a representation. "If I had the gift of expression of Fulton Brylawski, or of William Jennings Bryan," he remarked, "there would be a lot of things that I might say to you. I suppose that most of you know there is an Exhibitors' League of the District of Columbia, affiliated with the League of the United States. What the League here has done we cannot brag much about, but, of course, those who have attended its various meetings know something of what we have done and there are things that must be accomplished in a quiet sort of a way, that the different officers are always on the lookout for our benefit and welfare."

He called the attention of the exhibitors to the fact that when they apply for new licenses they will have to pay $5 for inspection. He stated that he called upon the inspector of buildings and told him that the exhibitors were each paying $100 as a license fee, personal taxes on fixtures and machines and a property tax, and that these should prove sufficient. The inspector replied that his office had been created by an Act of Congress and that it had to be self-supporting, hence the additional fee. While he did not see any way of having this additional charge wiped out, yet he felt positive that the officials of the District of Columbia know that there is a league of exhibitors here ready to contest anything unreasonable, and that other departments of the government will hesitate following the example of the building inspector's office for the purpose of raising funds for, as he said, there is the electrical and other branches who might desire to do so.

He condemned the practice of some of the exhibitors in discontinuing the services of one exchange, without notice, that they may obtain the service of another, not considering it fair to the exchangemen, for the exhibitors would object strenuously were the shoe on the other foot. "Exhibitors should be as fair to the exchangemen as exchangemen are to exhibitors. I feel that we want them to get together on some number of reels, say four reels, if we all decide on that number to constitute a show and have it so understood, and we could get the exchangemen to agree to that. If an exchange was supplying four reels to one house and that exhibitor went to another exchange for an additional reel, he would be refused by the latter." He pointed to the large sums of money invested in the business in the District of Columbia, stating that few exhibitors were making anything there because of the extremely keen competition, although few of the league members were showing more than four reels for five cents, and in conclusion expressed it as his hope that the meeting would prove a benefit to all, not only in a social but in a business way.

Tom Moore, proprietor of a chain of moving picture houses, gave forth the startling information that he could think a great deal better than he could talk, and before he completed his remarks he had everyone wondering if he had not made a misstatement, for he has been remarkably successful in his various ventures, showing his ability to think, and he made a rattling good talk, showing his ability as a speaker, entirely disproving his first remark.

Mr. Moore gave a short talk on how he started in the moving picture business as an exchangeman, finding that line of endeavor a strenuous proposition. "Way back, when we were all learning the business, a fellow made it pretty hot for the exchangemen; it always happened that some one was learning the business, when the latter had to explain to him why, for $30 per week, he could not get first service. The exchange line is one of those in which a fellow must have the ability to please all kinds of people, and once a year they are complimented. Gentlemen, it is one of the most glorious thoughts to know that this business started like a little child crawling and has grown to such a magnitude controlled by men representative in every place." Due to the fact that the producers are getting so many stars from Broadway, Mr. Moore predicted that there will be a dearth of feature films, for where there are two or three large theaters that could handle the vast productions, there are hundreds that will have to let them pass by. In conclusion, he paid tribute to the operators, who, through their various unions, have grown up with the business and have become so thoroughly efficient.

Messrs. Ira La Motte, S. J. Mayer and Harry Crandall, each made a few remarks, and the toastmaster introduced Mr. Fred A. Clark, of the Kinetograph sales department of Thomas A. Edison, Inc., who had just reached Washington after a successful tour of the south and middle west territory. "I have always believed in organization," said Mr. Clark, "and I do not believe that the exhibitors and exchangemen could have hit upon a better plan than the one that they have, and it is gratifying, I guess, to the committee, because of the good attendance. The reason for organization is conditions liable to arise in your locality from time to time. The condition, as Mr. Herbst said, of regulating the number of reels per show—that would be a mighty fine thing, for I believe that if there was some scheme whereby the exhibitors as a whole could come to some agreement that it would be for the benefit of the business. It stands to reason that a three or four-reel show for five cents is going to be of a much better quality than one of five or six reels. I can speak, possibly, for both the exhibitors and exchangemen, for I have been connected with the business for the past sixteen years. For the last four years I have been traveling and, of course, I come in contact with people all over the country. I find in my travels that the program of three and four reels seems to be more of a standard than that of five or six reels. There are houses and conditions to take care of each program, such as Mr. Moore spoke of relative to the feature end of the business. It seems that in the larger cities the large houses are running feature films and they can afford to charge an extra price, advance their usual prices according to the number of reels they are running, because they do not run as many shows as the smaller houses."

Continuing, Mr. Clark told of the working of similar clubs in other cities and of what organization was accomplishing all along the line, in each of the branches, exchanges, exhibiting and projecting.

A number of other guests spoke on various subjects and the newspaper men were asked to contribute to the evening's entertainment, but, led by the correspondent of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD they were in accord that the menu had been of such proportions as to make speech-making an impossibility. Under insistence, Mr. Glaser, of the Washington Herald, pledged the support of all to the foremost amusement industry, that of moving pictures, and the pen artists were allowed to remain at rest upon the promise to stand by exhibitors and exchangemen for the betterment of the business.

Harry Crandall called the attention of the exhibitors to the pending bill in Congress providing for a national board of censorship and recommended that it be given the support of all. He told of conditions existing here which, however, were portrayed by the World's correspondent in the issue of May 2.

The evening was brought to a close by a humorous speech by the vice-president, Mr. Davis, who suggested that a baseball fans' section of the club be formed, each members thereof to provide himself with a flag bearing the name of the theater or exchange which he represented, and to attend en masse two or three times each week the baseball games held on the home grounds. He started in to give the history of the Washington team when his knowledge thereof was questioned. Mr. Davis got away entirely from business and he had his audience with him from start to finish receiving far more applause than the serious speakers. However, getting down to business, he asked the support of every exhibitor and exchangeman and urged that all be present oat the next meeting "when no spread will be noticeable."

A more pleasant evening could not have been desired. The fun started at ten o'clock and it was well into the next day before the assemblage adjourned. This is but the first of a series of entertainments and those who failed to accept an invitation to be present on this occasion missed something that will live long in the memories of all.

At the tables were: A. Dresner, president; M. Davis, vice-president; H. Crandall, secretary; Joseph Morgan, treasurer; S. Davis, J. Payette, W. Waters, Samuel Greenberg, Stanley Sommers, F. Brickner, D. O'Brien, Tom Moore, James Moore, William Moore, Mr. Plunkett, T. M. Eastwood, M. Coleman, Mr. Harris, Mr. Frazier, J. Anderson, S. J. Mayer, Samuel Flax, H. M. Osborn, Leo Yates, M. Watson, G. D. Holland, A. C. Joy, Mr. Evans, Ira LaMotte, Mr. Shippam, Dr. Herbst, N. Stein, V. Stonesifer, L. Glaser, Fred Stein, Guy Barrett, Harry Wolfe, J. R. Gross, William A. Alvine, David Goldsmith, A. J. Bachrach, Mr. Robb, Mr. Irwin, L. Molinsky, M. W. Gain, L. Engle, Norman Weiser, J. Healy, Frank Painter, Geo. Smiley, F. A. Clark, Clarence L. Linz, representing the Moving Picture World; representatives of the Herald, Times and Star, and others.

Tom Moore won the hearts of all by ordering the distribution of additional cigars among the guests. Mr. Moore is an acknowledged connoiseur of the weed, for the brand was a good one.

Fred H. Kramer decorated the banquet room with his famous Queen Beatrice roses, which were afterwards used as peace offerings to the females of the species to allay possibilities of troubles arising from the home-coming at so late an hour.

Thanks are due the committee for the strenuous labors necessitated in the production of so great a success.

SAN FRANCISCO EXHIBITORS CONFER.

A special meeting of the San Francisco Local of the Exhibitors' League was held recently in the assembly rooms in the Phelan Building, all exhibitors being invited, whether members of the league or not. A number of very urgent questions were taken up at this meeting, including Sunday closing, censorship, the length of shows, the sixteen-year law and conditions in other places. A committee consisting of J. A. Huff, M. C. Smith and R. L. Marks was appointed to arrange for another meeting of this character to be held in the near future when these matters will be gone into more fully. A special committee consisting of M. Davis, C. H. Mason and I. Oppenheimer was appointed to investigate proposed Sunday closing legislation and to render a report.

KENTUCKY FEATURE CLUB FORMED.

As a result of the convention at Lexington of the Kentucky Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, a new club has been formed which is to be known as the Kentucky Photoplay Feature Club. The club will have for members leading exhibitors from all over the state. The object of the organization is to secure features from the producing companies at a reasonable price, and lease them to the members of the club, at a rate whereby they may show a substantial profit on them. The object of the club is not to force the exchanges which are now furnishing service daily to Kentucky houses to lower their rates, but to make feature exchanges which are said to be charging exorbitant rates for their service to come to terms. Other owners of the state rights will be executed to lease their films through the club. The club is capitalized at $10,000 and is incorporated by L. J. Dittmar and W. A. Kinney, of Louisville; Sherman Arn, Maysville; L. H. Ramsey, Lexington; Charles O. Brown, Middlesboro; George A. Bleich, Owensboro; and R. C. Davies, Paducah. It is expected that practically all of the large exhibitors of Kentucky will join the club.

NEW YORK ASSOCIATION MEETING.

President Trigger Reports Big Success of Exposition June 8—Convention Committees Appointed.

In the Assembly Room of the Imperial Hotel a meeting was held on Tuesday, May 6, of the New York Branch of the International Motion Picture Association. President Samuel Trigger was in the chair, while Harold W. Rosenthal acted as secretary.

Mr. Trigger reported great progress on the part of the management which has charge of the preparations for the Intenational Exposition of Motion Picture Art to be held at the Grand Central Palace, New York City, June 8 to June 13. He said that $23,000 worth space had been sold, which is more even now than was sold at the last convention. Responses are coming in from exhibitors all over the country announcing their intention of coming and participating in the proceedings at the exposition. Among those who attended the meeting today were F. J. Rembusch, of Indianapolis, Ind., and Irving L. Davis, of Binghamton, N. Y.

It is planned to make the exposition a source of practical benefit to exhibitors. Prominent experts in their various lines will speak during the progress of the convention. Every exhibitor in the country is eligible to admission to the convention with a voice and vote on all matters coming before the body.

Mr. Trigger introduced S. R. Rothapfel, of the Strand, to the meeting. Mr. Rothapfel detailed his experiences as an exhibitor to the delight and edification of all present.

Following committees to act during the Exposition of Motion Picture Art at the Grand Central Palace, New York, during the week of June 8 to 13, were appointed:

General Officers—S. H. Trigger, president; Grant W. Anson, treasurer; Adolph Weiss, secretary.

Entertainment Committee—A. A. Corn, chairman; William Hilkemeier, vice-chairman; Al Kaufman, Famous Players; L. W. McChesney, Edison; Joe Brandt, Universal; George Ames, Mutual; Harry Reichenbach, Lasky; S. Roonheimer, B. Gutenberg and M. Naughton.

Box Office and Information Committee—Adolph Baurenfreund, chairman; Charles Fisher, secretary; Mr. Feltenstein, J. Hirshfield, G. Koenigswald, M. Warshauer.

Press Committee—Sam Spedon (Vitagraph Company), chairman; William Brandt, Harold W. Rosenthal, James Tyler.

Ladies' Entertainment Committee—William Brandt, chairman; Miss T. E. Schwank, chairlady; Miss Jeanette Cohen, Mrs. William Landau, Miss J. Ehrenberg, Mrs. Joe Brandt, Mrs. M. NEFF MEETS LOCAL NO. 1.

A meeting of the members of New York City Local No. 1 of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was held at the Hotel McAlpin, on Thursday, May 7. President Neff was present and discussed the question of extending the organization. Reports of the delegates to the Rochester State Convention were also made at this meeting.

PHOTOPLAY THEATERS IN NEW OFFICES.

Announcement is made by the Photoplay Theaters Company that it has moved to its new offices in the Forty-Second Street Building, at the corner of 42nd Street and Madison Avenue, New York, where a handsome suite has been especially fitted up for the convenience of the company's officers and staff.

MISS TSURA AOKI.

MISS TSURA AOKI, the twenty-two-year-old Japanese lead of the New York Motion Picture Corporation's Imperial Japanese Company, married her leading man, Sessue Hayakawa, May 1st. Miss Aoki has been starred by Mr. Thomas H. Ince in quite a few of his recent Japanese productions, and at present is working in two big feature productions, "The Typhoon" and "The Wrath of the Gods," which Mr. Ince is putting on simultaneously.

Miss Tsura Aoki.

Miss Aoki was born in Tokyo, Japan. She came to this country at the age of eight years with her uncle, Otto Kawahami, known as the Sir Henry Irving of Japan, and her aunt, Mme. Sada Yacco, Japan's greatest emotional actress, and founder of the modern method of acting in Japan. Her father was a noted artist, and after his trip around the world exhibiting his paintings, he met Miss Aoki and her aunt and uncle in San Francisco. He returned with the aunt and uncle to Japan and left Miss Aoki at the convent in Pasadena, Cal., where she remained for eight years. Here she studied the piano and vocal music. As well as being an artist of some note, which ability she inherited from her gifted father, she studied toe dancing in Chicago, and it is her ambition to return, some day, to Japan and enter her aunt's dramatic school as a teacher of dancing.

Just prior to the time Nat Goodwin was injured at Santa Monica, Miss Tsura Aoki was rehearsing with Mr. Goodwin in a vaudeville sketch which he had booked on the Orpheum Circuit, but, owing to the disastrous outcome, his project had to be given up and Miss Aoki turned to the pictures.

Her first work was with Mr. Henderson, of the Majestic, in a two-reel subject. A few months ago she joined the New York Motion Picture Corporation, and is now one of their prominent leading women.

ELLA MARGARET GIBSON, CHILD OF NATURE.

ELLA MARGARET GIBSON is the youngest leading woman in the Vitagraph company. She is the star of the western contingent, located in Santa Monica, Cal., and, in spite of her youthfulness, has portrayed many parts. Miss Gibson was born in Colorado Springs, Colo., Sept. 14, 1895, which makes her but eighteen years old on her last birthday. Her parents were both professional entertainers, her father being a musician and her mother a vocalist. In her youth the mother was noted for her beauty and her ability as a singer. The mother's father was also a professional vocalist, and the mother's mother was an exceptionally successful professional dancer. It can be readily seen that Margaret Gibson comes by her great talent naturally.

Ella Margaret Gibson.

The professional environment in which Miss Gibson was reared, and a prudent mother's thoughtfulness, have done more for the little Vitagraph star, in the matter of education, than most girls receive in many years at girls' colleges.

In a semi-professional way, Miss Gibson has been appearing on the dramatic stage practically all of her life. Her first bona fide theatrical engagement was playing a child's part when about twelve years old in Denver, Colo. Later on, she made several tours through the western country, playing vaudeville engagements. Before she was fifteen she was the ingenue and soubrette in a permanent stock company located in her home town, Colorado Springs. Early in 1912, Miss Gibson became interested in the possibilities of motion photography. Being employed in Los Angeles at the time, she applied to the western Vitagraph company and was immediately engaged. For several weeks she portrayed minor parts in the pictures. At this juncture the regular leading woman of the company was changed to New York, and Miss Gibson was given an important part against the judgment of her managing director. Her years of successful theatrical work and her knowledge of the camera made it possible for Miss Gibson to immediately demonstrate her right to the position. Her success was instantaneous and emphatic and she was immediately placed at the head of the Vitagraph western company, and continues in that capacity. She has never appeared with any other film company. Some of her more recent successes are the leads in "The Riders of Petersham," "The Love of Tokiwa," "The Hidden House," "Francine," "Bianca," "Auntie," "Ginger's Reign," "Back to Eden," "The Little Madonna," "The Kiss," "The Outlaw," "Mareea, the Half Breed," "Out in Happy Hollow" and "The Old Oak's Secret." Miss Gibson has appeared in almost one hundred Vitagraph pictures.

Miss Gibson is essentially a western girl. She is a splendid horsewoman, a skilled automobile driver, and a veritable fiend at "roughing it" in camp life. Her knowledge and love of life in its natural forms probably accounts for the direct naturalness and simplicity for which her professional work is justly celebrated.

CHICAGO EXHIBITORS' GRAND BALL.

Moving Picture Men of the Windy City Will Trip the "Light Fantastic" at the Coliseum, Thursday, May 14.

UNDER the generalship of "Big Bill" Sweeney, assisted by a full corps of assistants on the various committees, preparations have about been completed for the first annual reception and ball of the Chicago Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, and since it is the first attempt the Chicago exhibitors have made to do anything quite so ambitious in the social line, nothing is being left undone that ought to be done to make a great and triumphant success.

William J. Sweeney.

Just now the headquarters of the exhibitors in the Masonic Temple building is about the busiest place in Chicago. The arragements are of a most elaborate character, entailing a vast amount of committee work to make every little feature of the entertainment fit into the big program harmoniously.

One of the interesting features of the occasion will be the presence of an imposing array of motion picture stars of every magnitude. As this is the first time photoplayers have had a chance to meet Chicago face to face and shake its hand, many will take advantage of the opportunity and be there with bells on. There will also be a large gathering of exhibitors from neighboring cities, and it is expected that a considerable delegation will journey all the way from New York to see how they do things in Chicago.

The manufacturing interests generally have given the event their hearty approval and will be represented almost en masse. Facilities for the dispensing of refreshments will be most elaborate and satisfying and every assurance is given that those who attend will have a royal time. Don't miss this feature.

HODKINSON GETS "HOUSE OF TEMPERLEY."

W. W. Hodkinson, whose New York office is 110 West 40th Street, has secured the rights for the entire United States and Canada for "The House of Temperley," made by the London Film Company, represented here by the Cosmofotofilm Company. Mr. Hodkinson makes his announcement elsewhere in this issue of the Moving Picture World.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"THE WOMAN OF MYSTERY" (Blaché).

"Dual personality" and "spirit control" combine to make Madame Alice Blaché's latest literary effort, which was also staged for this screen under her personal direction, one of the most interesting photodramas that she has produced in her long and successful career.

A "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" personality is developed in a detective by a Hindu princess, who revenges herself upon him by means of the uncanny psychic powers developed to such an astonishing degree in the Far East. The action of the story takes place in America and the introduction of the priestess, who maintains a secret temple to her favorite gods in a lonely villa where she is surrounded by a large number of faithful followers, gives the drama an air of mystery and adventure that makes it unusually interesting.

Clever "double exposures" and unique light effects add to the atractiveness of this picturesque and exciting four-reel drama in which Vinnie Burns gives a splendid performance of the Priestess and Fraunie Fraunholz interprets the difficult "Jekyll and Hyde" role of the detective in a really remarkable manner, with Claire Whitney as his beautiful actress sweetheart.

"THE HOSTAGE" (Dania Biofilm).

"The Hostage," a four-part subject being shown by the Dania Biofilm Company, of which Edward H. Wagner, of 38 Park Place, New York City, is the general agent, has to do with a band of brigands whose place of hiding is among shore cliffs. When one of the outlaws is captured the confederates of the prisoner kidnap the child of the chief of police. Word is sent to the official that if in three days their comrade is not released the child will be put to death. The mother of the little girl pleads with her husband to comply with the demand, but he is bound by his honor to hold the prisoner. The mother goes to the jail at night, and by an appeal to the jailer's sympathies obtains the keys to the cell of the bandit. Her husband comes in time to prevent the jail delivery. When, three days later, word is received that the child is dead the mother's reason is seriously threatened.

Owing to the failure on the part of a member of the gang to carry out the instructions which have been given to him by his father, the child escapes death. The cripple on whom by lot the task had fallen decides instead to blackmail the father for the safety of the child. When the father has recovered his daughter the cripple betrays the hiding place of his confederates, word is sent to the police, and after a battle most of the outlaws are captured. Beppo, the leader, gets away. Later he comes across the cripple, and in their struggles the two fall over a cliff and are killed. The reason of the mother is restored.

There are sensational episodes in the story. One of these is the fruitless attempt of the outlaws to release their comrade from prison. So also is the capture of the child, the bandits securing admission to her home by means of a rope thrown over a balcony just outside her bedroom window. The picture is well photographed.

"HER HERITAGE" (American).

A most remarkable one-reel "American Beauty" subject produced under direction of Harry Pollard. It is remarkable not only because of its dramatic merit, but because of the superb photographic quality. The depth of focus, stereoscopic quality, detail, microscopic sharpness and technical perfection are par excellence.

Scene from "Her Heritage" (Beauty Film).

Margarita Fischer plays the titular role and her heritage consists of an almost unconquerable appetite for liquor. As she gazes upon the reflection of her own countenance in the mirror of the sideboard it dissolves into the dissipated picture of her father.

The story is well presented and teaches a great moral lesson. The American will probably be congratulated for this unusually good piece of work.

"SHOTGUN JONES" (Selig).

"Shotgun Jones," one of Selig's very latest Western plays, has the real atmosphere of the old West, showing the bravery as well as the big heartedness of the men who are wise in their way, as simple as children, and as brave as lions.

"Shotgun Jones" looks like a divinity student behind his big rimmed glasses and he performs as docile as a "Tenderfoot," when a mischievous circle in a saloon surrounds him as he is unarmed and makes him dance by shooting at his feet. However, when he gets away and comes back with his own trusty shotgun, he puts all of his oppressors in motion at once, showing the spirit of the man and the weapon. Around this strong and curious character is woven an ingenious romance, which has in its finale a remarkable magnanimous strain and a big heart-throb, in the surrender of a strong man to a young woman. Wheeler Oakman, identified with many Selig successes, takes the part of "Shotgun Jones," and Bessie Eyton appears as the winning girl. This was released Monday, April 27th.

"IN THE NORTHLAND" (Lubin).

From a viewpoint of atmosphere this picture will be much admired, the scenes being taken in the mid-winter of Northern Canada. The story is very pathetic, telling a tale of intense love and wonderful heroism of a stout-hearted French Canadian, whose wife is on the point of deserting him for a cowardly city weakling who has fascinated her with his empty refinement. The strong trapper rescues his foolish wife and her lover from a storm at the beginning of the elopement which would have ended in death, but still thinking only of his wife's happiness he offers her liberty, that she may enjoy a new life in the big city, but the wife then realizes the worth of her simple minded but powerful husband and bids the cur go back to his kennel at Quebec. The husband forgives and the sunshine streams into the little cabin. The story is written by Emmet Campbell Hall and the picture made by John E. Ince, who has selected an excellent cast.

"THE MONOMANIAC" (Great Northern Special).

In offering this multiple-reel photodrama, the Great Northern Special Feature Film Company gives the assurance that it will be found to be a subject out of the ordinary. The theme is so unusual and the situations so startling that the production is well calculated to hold tense interest. "The Monomaniac" in this instance is Harvey Stokes, a well-to-do business man, who is obsessed by an insane desire to bring about the ruin and unhappiness of Fred Newton, a business rival. Stokes is possessed of hypnotic powers and these he applies evilly in order to gain an influence over Mabel, the wife of Newton. He succeeds in this, but to what purpose will seem incredible. Imagine a man arranging for his own suicide so that the circumstances will warrant the arrest of his hated business rival on a charge of murder. Notwithstanding the strange insanity of Harvey Stokes, the plot is worked out logically, the story is unfolded in dramatic sequence and the closing scene sustains as much interest as did the ones preceding.

The role of Harvey Stokes is played by that sterling actor, S. Aggerholm, and the part of Fred Newton is given a splendid presentation by V. Psilander, another Great Northern favorite. As usual the photography is up to the Great Northern standard of excellence and many of the scenes are startling in their realism.

"THE CONQUEST OF CLAIRE" (Pathe).

Pathe will release on May 23 a two-reel production entitled "The Conquest of Claire," which is said to be an exceptionally interesting comedy-drama. The story is that of a madcap girl, a thoroughly lovable character, who by reason of excellent health and bounding spirits is continually up to some drollery or other. Because of a series of pranks at home, culminating in an invasion of her old maid governess' room at night disguised as a man, she is sent away by her parents to a girls' boarding school.

Scene from "The Conquest of Claire" (Pathe).

Here she soon becomes a ringleader among the other girls in various harmless frolics of a kind which are not conducive to the best order of the school. One very laughable scene is where some young men students come to serenade the girls and are put to rout by the determined woman principal. Returning home for the holidays she revenges herself on her parents for sending her away to the boarding school by playing the fine lady. The lessons in etiquette she gives them are most laughable.

Interwoven with the comedy is a love story with a happy ending. Excellent photography, acting and story mark this production.

PLANNING NEW THEATER.

Another moving picture theater is being planned for Kearney, Neb. It will be opened during the summer by Messrs. Swan & Schwarz. The structure is to be a one-story building, and its dimensions are 50 by 130 feet. When completed $23,000 will have been expended on the theater.

"THE FOX" (Rex).

Stories of life on any of the frontiers of civilization have always been and probably always will be well received by the vast army of people who live exiled from nature in the grimness and grayness of cities. Upon the frontiers life is seen against a natural background. There is less of the artificial and traditional here and a greater display of basic emotions which are common to all humanity. And it is the element of humanity in this story which measures its worth.

Scene from "The Fox" (Rex).

"The Fox" is a story of the early days, laid in the great forests of the Canadian Northwest. Have you ever imagined yourself out in the great open where your livelihood, your very life depended upon a good right arm and ability to think and act quickly? That is what will happen when you witness this play—for it is vivid, it carries one away with its realism. It's a story of big, strong passions, and of mean passions; of life and adventure with a note of pathos striking a responsive chord in the heart of the spectator.

Among the more stirring incidents of the play is a battle between outlaws and mounted police; it is such a battle that could take place only between fighters possessing a thorough knowledge of woodcraft. And that is one important point about this play that is going to strike home. Every detail is true—every incident impresses as though it might be a page torn from the book of experience. You are going to find it mightily interesting every minute that the picture is on the screen.

Robert Leonard is seen in the lead role, that of a mounted policeman. Hazel Buckham plays opposite, as the sister. Al. Forrest and Bill Fredericks are in the supporting cast.

A VITAGRAPH PUBLICITY SCHEME.

Carrying Vitagraph publicity from coast to coast, Dave MacFayden, well known in the Broadway theatrical colony, set out Tuesday, May 5, to drive a pair of hardy little horses from New York to San Francisco. The start was made from the Vitagraph studios, near Coney Island, and the journey into the heart of New York was recorded by a Vitagraph motion picture camera. Late Tuesday afternoon motion pictures of MacFayden and his outfit, surrounded by one of those quickly assembled crowds for which New York is famous, were made in front of the Vitagraph Theater, at Broadway and Forty-fourth Street.

MacFayden is most widely known as a "song plugger" and his trip across the country is in the interests of both the Vitagraph Company and the music publishing house of Waterson, Berlin & Snyder. The light-covered wagon which he is driving carries advertisements for both these concerns.

The cross-country tourist's plan is to make the journey to 'Frisco by easy stages, by way of Albany, Buffalo, Chicago, Omaha, Denver, Reno, Sacramento and Los Angeles. In various theaters throughout the country he will "plug" the Waterson, Berlin & Snyder songs, singing them to the accompaniment of a phonograph, and will also have a few words to say concerning the superior merit of Vitagraph motion pictures.

MacFayden and his wife made a similar cross-country trip in 1911. MacFayden walking the entire distance while his wife drove a similarly equipped wagon in which the pair slept and ate. The 1911 trip required seven months and six days for its completion.

"THE VOICE IN THE WILDERNESS" (Essanay).

"The Voice in the Wilderness," a two-reel dramatic production, booked for release Friday, May 22, is the product of a new producer, and it is safe to say that it is superior to anything in this line that has been released within the last thirty days.

Francis X. Bushman plays the star role of an author, seeking solitude in the country. His wife, a society butterfly, very much disgusted with the country, decides to return to the city. She is nonplussed when she is informed that her husband has been accidentally killed. A sculptress living in the forest finds the injured author and takes him to her shack, where he recuperates. He learns to love her. Later, he discovers that his wife has remarried, thinking him dead. Miss Gerda Holmes, in the role of the sculptress, plays it with the hand of a genius. Irene Warfield plays the role of the author's wife.

Notes of the Trade.

"THE HOUSE DISCORDANT," in which Hazel Buckham and Robert Leonard play the leading roles, is being completed this week by Director Lloyd Ingraham and his company of Rex players. The title of the picture originally was "His Father's Son."

KENTUCKY.

LOUISVILLE exhibitors are noting a considerable improvement in business and most of them are satisfied with conditions. The weather has improved greatly, and with the end of the long Lenten season, people are eager for recreation. Big features of from four to six reels are being shown a great deal more of late than at any previous time, and are going well, although it is pointed out that the patrons of the picture house may become tired of them when the weather becomes really hot. During hot weather two or three-reel productions are about all that the public cares for, it is suggested, as spectators can leave the house without having to see the whole show.

Johnston Musselman, of Louisville, formerly manager of the Clifton Theater, who has been managing the Arcadia dance hall for L. J. Dittmar, will manage the Westonian Airdome this summer. Mr. Musselman will attend to the booking of the house, and take the general supervision of the work, but will have another man to handle the active management of the theater. The Arcadia will operate until the weather becomes too warm and will then close for the summer. Mr. Musselman will put in part of his time at the Maestic during the summer months.

Gerald Wagner, representing the Mutual Film Corporation, St. Louis, Mo., was a recent visitor to Louisville. A good deal of the Mutual program has been shown in Louisville recently, due to the efforts of Mr. Wagner, who may possibly locate a branch office here later on.

The Louisville Photo Play Association met in the offices of the Novelty Theater April 20. Nothing of great importance was brought up at the meeting, and after a few talks regarding general conditions in the local business the meeting adjourned. Among the members present were L. J. Dittmar, D. Levenson, Fred Dolle, Max Simons and several others.

Ralph Studyvin, of Indianapolis, Ind., was recently in Louisville representing the Universal Special Features branch of the Universal Film Mfg. Company. Mr. Studyvin also owns a feature, "Caught at the Beach." This is a three-reel production which he is also booking.

R. S. Kramer, of the Warner Feature Film Company, Indianapolis, Ind., was recently in Louisville visiting at the Louisville branch office.

G. W. Neville, of Louisville, has re-opened the old Majestic Theater, of Jeffersonville, Ind., just across the Ohio River. The house has changed its name to the Jefferson. This theater has been idle for three or four weeks since being closed by its former manager, L. A. Hammond.

Manager John Buckland, Sellersburg, Ind., was recently in Louisville, where he bought a new phonograph and some picture machine parts. He is about to open a picture show in the Odd Fellows Hall.

The Owl Feature Film Company, of Louisville, recently received an inquiry from London, England, regarding a film renovator which the Owl concern is using. At the time the Owl put in the renovating plant, a note was made of it in the Moving Picture World, and the inquiry was the result.

The Rev. James Mitchell, of Louisville, has purchased a complete moving picture outfit with the intention of giving special religious plays in the churches of Louisville and vicinity. The Rev. W. M. Reynolds, of Jeffersonville, Ind., has bought an outfit for the same purpose.

Manager Hill, of the Eminence Opera House, Eminence, Ky., was a recent visitor to Louisville. He purchased from the Owl Feature Film Company a Motiograph machine for a new picture house which he is to start on that city.

H. J. Gelman, of the Eclectic Company's Cincinnati branch, was recently in Louisville. He booked the feature, "Perils of Pauline," with Judge W. A. Kinney, of the Orpheum Theater. Starting May 1 three reels have been shown for fifteen weeks.

Manager Fred Dolle, of the Walnut Street Theater, is well satisfied with the way business is going at the only twenty-cent house in Louisville. The big feature, "The Sea Wolf," made an immense hit with Louisville people, and the house was well filled.

Judge W. A. Kinney has had work started on the new home of the Star Amusement Company in Fourth avenue, Louisville, and the work will be pushed to a speedy finish. The completed house will cost in the neighborhood of $7,500.

The Broadway Theater Company, Louisville, has been incorporated for $50,000. The stock is divided into 5,000 shares, of which A. Steurle holds 2,500, Edward Klapheke 100, and Fred Hoffman 3. The company operates the East Broadway, the West Broadway and other theaters.

C. P. Davidson, Middlesboro, Ky., has opened the new Lyceum Theater. The motion picture business is increasing in popularity in Middlesboro, and they now have several houses.

Luther E. Huron, Lancaster, Ky., and several associates have formed a company to put up a building for a motion picture house and garage. The building will be of concrete construction and will be 40 x 90 feet in size.

The Howe & Soper Amusement Company has been incorporated at Nicholasville, Ky., with a capital stock of $1,000. The incorporators are H. C. Howe, L. M. Soper and W. P. Sowers.

A deal was recently closed at Henderson, Ky., whereby Henry P. Vogel becomes owner and manager of the Novelty Theater, in the East End, in Letcher street between Helm and Clay. This popular little playhouse was formerly conducted by J. L. Horton and Roy Melton, who recently disposed of their holdings. It is the plan of Mr. Vogel to improve the property greatly before the opening, which will be about May 1. The floor will be lowered, the seating capacity increased and a new machine and screen installed. There had been some talk of a new picture house to open in the East End, but with the reopening of this house it is not thought that another one will be started.

The Rev. C. M. ("Pastor") Russell, of Brooklyn, N. Y., has left Louisville for Pittsburgh, Pa., after supervising the first presentation of the elaborate Biblical picture drama, "The Drama of Creation," at the Shubert Masonic Theater. The drama is divided into four parts and will be run for four weeks, a week being devoted to each part. Phonographic lectures explain the parts as they are shown. In the construction of the drama the Rev. Russell said that he had made an effort to include scientific and historical confirmation of the stories of the Bible. The discoveries, he said, had only served to prove the accuracy of the Bible, but these facts were not the property of the great mass of people, and through the pictures he proposes to carry the message where it is most needed. The drama will be exhibited free of charge at the theater until the month's engagement is completed.

The new Abin Motion Picture Theater, Hodgenville, Ky., has opened for business, and is showing some very good pictures, with good results from the view of the box office.

Hickman, Ky., is to have two new motion picture houses. George W. Bouck has leased one of the store-rooms in the new business house being erected by A. A. Faris and as soon as the building is completed will have his show ready to start. J. T. Dillon, of the same city, will also install a picture show as soon as he can get possession of a building which is now occupied by Curlin, Shaw & Company.

The Merchants' Association, of Campbellsville, Ky., recently held its spring opening. Souvenirs and tickets to a picture show for the women were the features of the day.

T. B. Dixon, of Scottsville, Ky., has purchased a building which was formerly used by an undertaking establishment, and is having it remodeled. The upper room will be used for lodge-rooms, and a new building will be built next door to it, which will be used for a picture show.

A. E. Waltrip, generally known as "Buck," has been appointed manager of the Garrick Theater, Madisonville, Ky. M. Switow, of the Switow Amusement Company, who has managed the theater since the resignation of Mr. Hunter, has returned to Louisville. Mr. Waltrip is a young fellow, and is well liked in Madisonville. He is expected to build up the Garrick's patronage to a marked degree.

Louisville officials recently notified the picture show managers that they must not allow people to stand in the houses, and that the ruling was to be rigidly enforced from now on. D. Levenson, one of the leading motion picture men of Louisville, said that he was heartily in favor of the ruling. He pointed out that a number of people who come into the theaters become dissatisfied when they get inside and are unable to get a seat. They pay their money without knowing that the house is packed, and naturally feel that they have been imposed upon. If no more people were admitted at a time than there are seats, the people on the streets would not buy tickets to a house where there was a line already formed, and would go to one of the houses which was not so crowded. In this way the public would be better satisfied, and people would come into a show who might otherwise pass on, rather than take a chance. Also, it would help some of the houses which were not as well filled as their more fortunate competitors. When a house is jammed full, it is more or less worry to the management, as any slight mishap might start a panic.

R. S. Shrader, manager of the Central Film Company, has returned from a short trip to Indianapolis. George Hackett, who was formerly inspector at the Central office, and who has been operating a machine for several months at the Empire Theater, on East Market street, has returned to the Central Film Company, where he has resumed his old duties. Byron Shrader, who filled the position in the meantimes, is now connected with Collers' Weekly, at the local office. He is a brother of Manager R. S. Shrader.

Walter Anderson, who has been operating an office in Louisville for the Miller Feature Film Company, of New Harmony, Ind., for some time, has given up the Louisville office, and has gone to Indianapolis to establish a new office.

The Novelty Theater has signed a contract for the big Warner production of "Zinga." This feature is composed of thirteen reels, four of which will be shown the first week in May, the balance to be shown in weekly installments of three reels. A two-reel feature of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, "Love and Vengeance," in which Ford Sterling takes the principal part, made a big hit with the Sunday patrons of the Novelty. This is the first production which Mr. Sterling has been in since leaving the Keystone Company, with which he was connected for some time.

News has reached Louisville of a new film manufacturing company which was recently incorporated at Atlanta, Ga., to handle Southern business. The company will be known as the Al Barrett Film Manufacturing Company, and is incorporated for $8,000. The incorporators are Al Barrett, Martin F. Amorous and H. G. Morrow.

The long talked of motion picture house on Fourth avenue, between Walnut and Green, in Louisville, has at last become a certainty. The Fourth Avenue Amusement Company has been incorporated for $75,000. The stock has been completely paid in, and a building leased. M. Switow, president of the Switow Amusement Company, is the head of the movement. The cost of remodeling the building is estimated at $80,000, and when completed it will have a seating capacity of 1,200. This will be by far the largest house in the city. The house will probably be opened in the early fall. The ventilating system will be of the latest and best type to be obtained, and no expense will be spared in making the house the handsomest in the city.

Manager George Steurle has emphatically denied a report which has been circulating, relative to the Walnut Theater becoming a burlesque house next season. The Broadway Amusement Company has a long lease on the building, and expects to operate at twenty-five cents admission for some time to come, as the pictures are taking well. It is planned to close the house about July 1, while some remodeling is done to the lobby, which is not conveniently arranged for a motion picture house. Big feature films are in strong demand by the public, and not very much is expected of the house this late in the season, but next winter should prove that twenty-five-cent features have come to stay.

Arthur Mitchell, manager of the Dixie Theater, at Russellville, Ky., will soon move into the Dixie's new home. The new house will have a seating capacity of 300, and will be equipped with all the modern motion picture features, which include a special type of ventilating systems, a radium gold fibre screen and two new machines in the operating room. One of the machines will be a Power's and the other a Simplex. An up-to-date power plant will also be put in. The General program will be exhibited, and six reels shown daily, with the whole show also changed daily.

The Powell Lumber Company, of Lewisburg, Ky., has opened a new picture show, which is operated three nights a week. The company is exhibiting three reels of Universal service, and use an Edison projecting machine. Very good crowds have been attending the show since it was first opened.

New picture shows were recently opened at Bevier and Livermore, Ky., which completes a chain of motion picture shows which extend from Owensboro, Ky., to Russellville. Motion pictures are certainly becoming popular out through the state, and every crossroads has a show house of some kind.

A warrant was recently issued against Elbert Mattingly, of Russellville, Ky., for operating a picture show on Sunday. Mr. Mattingly has been operating the People's Theater on Sunday for over a month, and between 900 and 1,200 attended the afternoon and night performances. No admission was charged to see the show, but donations were accepted. After numerous complaints were made by residents a summons was issued for him to appear in court. At first he said he would test the case and fight it through the courts, but when the case was brought up in the city court his attorney announced that he would discontinue the Sunday shows, providing the case was dismissed.

Campbellsville, Ky., has a new picture house. This house is the Arena, and is under the management of J. R. Hobson. A new electrical piano was installed to furnish the music for the opening.

Manager Harry Bilger, of the Hopkins Theater, Louisville, admitted free of charge all children under ten years of age to see the pictures of the Hagenback and Wallace Combined Shows. A great many of the grownups were present to view the pictures, which lasted about two hours.

The Lyric Theater, of Lawrenceburg, which has been in course of construction for several weeks, has opened up for business. A new Wurlitzer automatic piano was installed.

A new moving picture machine has been purchased by W. V. Shaw and V. W. Ingels, of Paris, Ky. The installation of the machine was delayed by the failure of some electric attachments to arrive on time.

SAN FRANCISCO

THE New Theater, on Broadway, near Stockton street, has been opened by Ben Michaels, and will be conducted under this name until the close of the naming contest that is being conducted. This theater is one of the largest and finest in the North Beach district and is devoted exclusively to motion pictures.

A. Eby, formerly of Napa, Cal., has opened a moving picture theater in Mission street, near Twenty-eighth, San Francisco. The house has a seating capacity of 400 and is known as the Mission Theater.

The Empress Theater is meeting with success with its policy of a continuous performance from 11 a.m. to 11 p.m., the morning crowds steadily growing in size. Arrangements have just been concluded for featuring an exclusive Mutual program and this is expected to prove to be a good drawing card.

James T. Turner has secured a permit from the Board of Police Commissioners for a moving picture theater at 64 Eddy street.

Herbert Payne, president of the California Motion Picture Corporation, has left for New York and Europe, accompanied by Mrs. Payne. This trip was to have been taken immediately following their wedding a few weeks ago, but was postponed, as Mrs. Payne was obliged to undergo an operation for appendicitis.

One of the features of the recent departure of a government transport from this city for Mexico, with a complement of troops aboard, was the taking of a complete moving picture outfit and an operator from the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. Arrangements for this had to be made in a short space of time, and at the last moment there was a rush to secure certain equipment and supplies. Pictures were taken of the departure of the troops and efforts will be made to keep in touch with the land forces in Mexico in case there is trouble.

Frederick Monsen, a well known artist and lecturer, gave a talk recently at the Columbia Theater on "Mexico and the Revolution," this being illustrated with moving pictures.

The management of the Portola Theater has booked the film, "With Roosevelt in South America." It will be shown at an early date at this Market street playhouse.

A. Markowitz, booker for the California Film Exchange, Inc., and brother of Morris L. Markowitz, manager of that concern, was married on April 25, and is away on a wedding trip.

S. A. Fowell, a cameraman, formerly with Capt. F. E. Kleinschmidt, who recently lectured during the display of the Arctic Hunt films at the Savoy Theater, is now with the Golden Gate Film Exchange as traveling man.

The Vitaslide Company, 70 Turk street, is meeting with great success in introducing its new novelty slide, and the company is preparing to send a representative to New York to place it with the trade.

Ralph Clark, who was with Turner & Dahnken, Inc., when this concern maintained an exchange, and who for two years was with the General Film Company, has been placed in charge of the contract department of the local branch of the World Film Corporation. William F. Wood, who has been with this concern since the opening of the local branch, is now making a trip on the road and will cover the entire territory between here and Los Angeles.

C. B. Price, district manager of the World Film Corporation, with headquarters at San Francisco, has placed into effect a clever idea designed to secure a more general viewing on the part of exhibitors of the features put out by this concern. As soon as a feature has been placed in a downtown house cards are mailed to other exhibitors, advising them when the film will be shown, these cards bearing a detachable admission ticket. Arrangements have been made whereby these tickets are redeemed at the regular admission price. Many exhibitors who are not able to attend a special showing of a picture find time to view it when it is shown from three days to a week. The lobby displays being sent out by this firm are attracting much attention, the photographs being of a highly artistic order and the stands equally handsome.

Joe Brandt, who has been here for the past month in the interests of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has left for the East after having completed arrangements with the Panama-Pacific International Exposition authorities for the exclusive rights of producing pictures on the World's Fair grounds. Moving pictures are now being taken there under the direction of George Collins. A large studio will be erected shortly and visitors to the Exposition gorunds in 1915 will be enabled to see the making of moving pictures in detail. The concession that has been secured includes the display of industrial films and it is announced that ten large theaters will be erected for this purpose. Admission to these will be free, the moving picture concern to secure its revenue from those whose pictures are shown.

The concession for operating moving picture theaters to which an admission will be charged has been secured from the Exposition by John Morrissey, of the Orpheum, and associates. Miles Bros. were originally interested in this concession, but have disposed of their interests.

The Film Theater, at Stockton, Cal., has been purchased by W. E. Borne and is being conducted under the management of H. Howard.

The Novelty Theater, at Napa, Cal., has been purchased by A. Jacoby, who has opened it with Mutual service.

Harry Laugenour will shortly commence the construction of a large moving picture airdome at Woodland, Cal., having secured a site near the Woodland Theater.

A new moving picture theater has been erected on the grounds of the Fetters Hot Springs, a summer resort in Sonoma County.

After a prolonged fight made by the managers of moving picture houses at Chico, Cal., against the granting of permits to conduct open air moving picture shows there during the summer time, the City Trustees at a special meeting granted a permit to Neal McGuire and J. L. Stone to conduct an airdome. Trustee John S. Waterland opposed the procedure, claiming that the theater owners had large sums invested and that as they conduct their business through the entire year they should be protected.

The Fred Mace Feature Film Company has been incorporated at Los Angeles, Cal., by Fred Mace, S. de Gray and H. Revier, with a capital stock of $200,000.

The Edwin August Feature Film Company has been incorporated at Los Angeles with a capital stock of $500,000, the incorporators being Edwin August, W. P. Lyon and A. W. Cleaver.

Architect Harris Allen, Central Bank Building, Oakland, Cal., is preparing plans for a moving picture theater to be erected at Burlingame at a cost of $25,000. The seating capacity will be about 800.

CHURCH.

MISSOURI.

CONDITIONS affecting exhibitors have changed materially in Kansas City during the past fortnight. Warm weather, for one thing, has given exhibitors something new to think about. A substantial hint of summer has been carried by recent weather conditions, and electric fans have been dusted off and installed for the comfort of patrons. More interesting is the change in the style of films seen here recently. The Willis Wood Theater, a burlesque house, has opened its summer season with straight moving pictures. Multiple-reel features only will be shown, and will be given runs of a week or more.

Moving picture men of Kansas City were responsible for an innovation which has elicited expressions of gratitude from patrons caught without umbrellas on rainy days. Umbrella slot machines have been installed in several houses. Devotees of the silent drama who find themselves umbrella-less and the weather stormy on leaving a theater may secure a check at the ticket office in exchange for one dollar. The check, dropped in the machine, produces an umbrella. The latter is not of the high-class variety, naturally, but is durable enough to suit the average business man. The plan has proved popular in its early stages and may prove to be permanent.

With the baseball season well advanced, and interest in Kansas City at a high stage in both of its professional ball clubs, the Standard Amusement Company has created much interest by installing electric scoreboards in the Twelfth-Street and Palace Theaters. In the former, the board adjoins the screen, while in the latter, it is in the basement. Patrons at the Palace will be unable to see the scoreboard and the pictures at the same time. Those at the Twelfth-Street house may view both from the same seat. Patrons of the theater who happen to be baseball fans have a difficult time in retaining the thread of the plot and at the same time following the plays on the ball game. The Kansas City Star, in commenting on the innovation, said: "A motion picture theater has installed an electric scoreboard, but announces that it will not interfere with the running of the films. Imagine a death-bed scene on the curtain and a home run on the scoreboard."

Difficulties which arose recently between Lew Nathanson, manager of the Cozy, Best and Orpheum Theaters, of Topeka, Kan., and the local operators' union, were amicably settled after several days of discussion. The exhibitor employed a non-union operator and the union men objected. The operator in question eventually was allowed to join the union and everyone concerned was satisfied with this solution.

The Triangle Amusement Company, which operates the Alamo in Kansas City, has added the Broadmour to its string, and is reorganizing the company to some extent. Joseph Spero probably will continue as president of the Triangle. N. J. Flynn, who is interested in the Richlyn Amusement & Realty Company, is a stockholder of the Triangle, and will have the active management of the Broadmour.

In view of the recent use of surgery in reforming criminals, "The Surgeon's Experiment," a Majestic production, recently seen in Kansas City, attracted widespread attention and much favorable comment. "The Surgeon's Experiment" is reminiscent of "Alias Jimmy Valentine," with the well-known theatrical production, but boasts touches of its own which are lacking in its mate, the chief being the scene in the operating room, where the surgeon converts the criminal into a law-abiding citizen.

W. S. Gleason, who formerly operated moving picture houses at Brookfield and Moberly, Mo., has taken over the Maywood, in Kansas City, Kan., having disposed of his other interests. William McCallahan, former owner of the Maywood, plans to enter the field at another point.

H. Bennett, assistant general manager of the World Film Corporation, of New York, recently took over the management of the Kansas City branch temporarily, in order to allow J. Edwin Dodson to make a trip through the Southwest. The branch will be moved from the eighth to the third floor of the Gloyd building, which accommodates a half dozen exchanges, including the General, which occupies the entire second floor.

The Aurora Theater, of Topeka, Kan., extended personal invitations to members of the Topeka Western League Ball Club to make the theater headquarters for the first twelve days of the season. The athletes were told to bring their families as guests of the theater.

An odd plan, but one which promises to become extremely popular among exhibitors and the public is that launched at Topeka, Kan., recently by H. G. Montgomery, manager of the Iris. Mr. Montgomery believed that he could receive a lot of good suggestions from his patrons, if a means of communication were available. Ordinary correspondence did not meet his views and accordingly he established a correspondence department in the daily papers, using bought space, of course. Only a small portion of this space is devoted to an announcement of current or coming attractions at the Iris, the major part being reserved for comment, favorable and unfavorable, as well as answers to letters. The plan has brought splendid results and probably will be made permanent by Mr. Montgomery. The exhibitor is running features almost exclusively and is receiving twenty cents for his best seats.

The recent announcement from the Iowa branch of the M. P. E. L. that a press committee to "secure the publication of articles calculated to make known to the public the actual condition of the picture business, etc." aroused much interest in moving picture circles of Kansas City, even while the practicability of the plan was doubted. One exhibitor, who follows the trend of the times closely, quoted from Printers' Ink, a leading advertising paper, in telling why the plan was apt to fall through. Printers' Ink recently stated that if the country editor were to print everything he receives for publication, including reports from the government, press agent stuff, and similar news, he would not have room in which to mention that Cy Jones had put a new coat of paint on his barn. In other words, Printers' Ink, which ought to know, asserts that the day of the press agent is passing, and that the money spent on him would prove more effective if used to buy space in the various newspapers.

J. J. Brown, auditor of the Standard Amusement Company, of Kansas City, has completed the making of 2,000 feet of pictures of Patterson's circus, which will shortly open its season at Paola, Kan. Mr. Brown encountered much difficulty in getting pictures of Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo on the latter's recent visit here, but finally placed his camera in such a position that Mr. McAdoo walked into it unwittingly. The visitor merely laughed over the incident, apparently being pleased at being outwitted.

MONTREAL.

OFFICIAL publication has been given to the new regulations affecting the exhibition of moving pictures in the Province of Quebec, as adopted at the last session of the legislature. The object is to provide punishment for any changes made to a film after such film has been passed by the censors. The fees for examination will apply to each 1,000-foot section of film, whether of the same subject or not. When the board sits without all its members present and refuses to sanction a film the owner shall have the right of appealing to the full board, but can go no further.

Mr. Maurice West, manager of the Family Theater, announces that all records were broken with "Atlantis." Mr. West introduced a novelty in conjunction with this photoplay. It was in the form of an announcer, or lecturer, who explained, in French, the drama as it was told on the screen.

The management of the Imperial has extended an invitation to school teachers in Montreal to attend their Saturday morning Children's Show.

Mr. Schlesinger, manager of the Theater Francais, always combines the artistic with the practical in all his undertakings. He announces that he has acquired a shop next to the theater and intends enlarging the lobby in the near future. The Sunday concerts are drawing very large audiences.

In connection with the Edison "Wood B. Wedd" series, the Imperial is distributing free copies of "The Pictorial Review" among its patrons.

The Montreal Standard is running the "Lucille Love" story in serial form. The Strand, Family, Mount Royal, Napoleon, Crystal Palace, and Electra are some of the houses showing this Universal production to crowded houses.

Mr. Herring, manager of the Mount Royal, is proving to be quite a public speaker. He has frequent chats with his evening audiences, and discusses the merits of coming features.

The Montreal Standard has started a department, entitled "With the Photoplays and Players." The department takes up a whole page and affords interesting reading for "picture fans."

The Montreal Saturday Herald has resumed its photoplay department. It is under the direction of P. St. C. Hamilton.

GALLAGHER.

NEW ENGLAND.

THE Civic Theater has come to stay in Pawtucket, Rhode Island, and as this is, so far as the writer can ascertain, the first Civic theater in this republic, the movement is of more than passing interest. Without political or religious affiliation, the Civic Theater was started in Pawtucket in 1913 as an experiment for teaching American history and current events with the aid of motion pictures to the foreign population of the mill towns of Central Falls and Pawtucket. The meetings were held on Sunday evenings, and invitations were issued in seven languages. On the opening night, people were turned away from the Star Theater, which has a seating capacity of 1,800. This was the story through the seasons of 1913 and 1914 just closed; and the wide interest aroused by the success of these two seasons promises a longer season next year.

The noteworthy feature of this whole movement is the value of motion pictures in any effort to instruct and educate our foreign citizens. The visual presentation appeals to the imagination and needs little interpretation to be fully understood by the various groups which go to make up an audience of this nature. The meetings in Pawtucket were lessons in citizenship to a class of adults which could hardly be reached in any other manner. The closing meeting for this year, held on April 26, gave some idea of the interest and successful possibilities in this new venture. The audience filled the theater, in spite of the fact that the weather was disagreeable. On the platform were seated President Faunce, of Brown University, Providence, R. I.; Rev. J. Dingwell, chairman of the Civic Theater meetings; the mayor of Pawtucket, and a committee of prominent citizens, who have taken an active part in this work. The program consisted of a short address by Dr. Faunce; patriotic songs by the audience; singing by a choral society from local churches; and a recital of the story of Lincoln's life by a class of fifty pupils from the Polish school of Pawtucket.

This part of the entertainment was particularly impressive. Many of the children were dressed in the costume of the Fatherland; their songs and recital of the life of Abraham Lincoln were very pleasing. On the screen a picture story of the life of Abraham Lincoln and a story of an American industry made the whole exercise a live lesson in Americanism. The Civic Theater has proved itself as a factor in the development of civic interest, and the citizens of Pawtucket deserve praise for their vision in the utilization of the motion picture.

General Manager J. A. Eslow, of the N. E. Universal Film Exchange, Boston, who is very much interested in the educational possibilities of motion pictures, was an invited guest at the opening exercises this season, sitting beside the governor of Rhode Island. Mr. Eslow has recently established an educational department at the N. E. Universal Exchange, and is giving a great deal of time and attention to the educational interests of New England. Many of the pictures for the Civic Theater were supplied by this exchange. The stories chosen for the closing night were the Universal's "From Rail Splitter to President" and "The Reunion at Gettysburg." Mrs. Alice B. Carroll, formerly with the General Film Company, has charge of this department. Besides her knowledge of motion pictures, Mrs. Carroll brings to this work a teacher's standard of educational requirements, and a wide acquaintanceship among N. E. educators. With the support which the Universal Film Company is giving her in this department, school and church interests may look for an exceptional service.

Nathan Goldstein, of Goldstein Bros., Inc., is an ardent admirer of and believer in mirroroide screens. This firm is using these screens in the theaters they operate in Springfield, Northampton, Westfield, Holyoke, Hampton, and Exeter, and Mr. Nathan Goldstein recommends mirroroide to all his brother exhibitors.

Jerome Pettiti's petition for a license to operate a moving picture theater on Hanover Street, Boston, was rejected by Mayor Curley on April 29. The mayor held a public hearing on the license last week, and great opposition from the police, church and residents of the district developed, as these columns have previously noted.

John W. Grey, manager of the Special Feature department of the Universal Film Company, visited General Manager J. A. Eslow, of the Universal's Boston offices on April 29. Mr. Grey reported himself as well pleased with the reception accorded the Universal specials throughout the country.

The Revere Beach Amusement and Construction Company has been incorporated at Boston for $15,000 by Louis Bopp, Louis Bopp, Jr., and Katherine Bopp, all of Revere, Mass.

Brookline, Mass., society was chiefly interested this week in the entertainment given on April 30 in Whitney Hall, for the benefit of the Brookline Friendly Society, which runs the only moving picture theater in the town for charitable purposes.

Bedford, Mass., is going through a scarlet fever scare, and the state authorities have closed up everything of importance, including the places of amusement.

Lowe's Orpheum Theater, Boston, is having a very large new electric sign erected at its Hamilton Place entrance to attract the attention of the public. Victor J. Morris, manager of the Orpheum, is doing his usual capacity trade, with Loew vaudeville and General Film service.

George Kleine's "Quo Vadis?" continues to do a very nice business at Tremont Temple, Boston. An augmented orchestra has been provided, and the Hon. W. E. Weeks is lecturing on the production.

W. R. Scates, who had been manager of the General's Boston offices for some time past, has severed his connection with this branch. It is understood at this writing that Edward J. Farrell, formerly the assistant manager, will succeed Mr. Scates.

Another change in film circles is at the Mutual's Boston offices, where Joseph Roth becomes the assistant manager, succeeding George T. Appleby, who is now manager of the Mutual's office at Portland, Me. Mr. Roth is very well known to the trade hereabouts. For several years he was manager of the Olympic Theater, Bowdoin Square, Boston, and before that, manager of The Juliette Theater.

The Eastern Theaters Company, Boston, has purchased the Casco Theater, Portland, Me., from the Casco Amusement Company, and has taken over the management of this house. The Casco will be piloted by Manager Stratton, formerly at the New Gorman Theater, South Framingham, Mass.

Starting May 15 for an indefinite engagement at Loew's South End Theater, Boston, is the Universal's "Traffic in Souls." It is expected that this feature will pull tremendously well at this locality, and great results are looked for.

The Somerville, Mass., Aldermen have adopted a resolution, calling upon all residents of this city to fly the American flag from their homes during the Mexican crisis, and Mayor Cliff has written a letter to the proprietors of all moving picture theaters, suggesting that they call upon the audience to stand when the flag is shown on the screen, or when any patriotic airs are sung from the stage.

"Jim" Donovan, the general representative of the Universal's Boston offices, has returned from a short trip through New England, which made up his honeymoon. Brother Donovan reports that "married life is the only life," and sagely advises everyone to follow his lead. Mr. Donovan is now settled at 1 Flora street, Brookline, where he is receiving the congratulations of his many friends in the trade.

Kate Brock, manageress of the Lyric Theater at Lebanon, N. H., finds business very satisfactory, and will run her house all summer.

H. Hirsch, formerly manager of the World Film's Boston office, and later at the home offices of this concern, has returned to his old stamping ground—Boston. Mr. Hirsch has been selected as the man to pilot "The Million Dollar Mystery" for the Syndicate Film Corporation, in this territory. Mr. Hirsch has many good friends among the New England trade, and should prove just the man to handle this Thanhouser serial feature.

The Somerville Theater, Davis Square, Somerville, Mass., is now nearly ready for its opening. This house is of brick, and is thoroughly fireproof and up-to-date in every respect. The theater was erected by the Hobbs family, well known in Somerville, and is to be known as the "House of Quality." The policy will be vaudeville and photoplays, with admission prices up to 10 cents. Two performances daily will be given; at 2:30 and 7:30 p. m. The location is one of the best in Somerville, and the house should easily do a prosperous business.

The big Boston Theater, Boston, is scheduled to dip into feature pictures, starting late this month. Such a policy at the Boston Theater will not help the new Modern Theater any, which is now nearly ready for its opening performance.

The Exeter Street Theater, corner of Newbury and Exeter streets, Boston, had its initial opening this week. The theater is an old church, the First Spiritual Temple, and will give two performances daily, one at 3:30 and one at 8 p. m. William Farnum, in the four-reel feature "The Redemption of David Corson," was the opening offering. The pictures will be changed here four times each week, and John Craig Kelley, former organist at the Boston Opera House, will render selections on the organ. Vaudeville is to be used in addition to the pictures. S. Ayer and Charles Hunt are the promoters. The Exeter Street Theater is in the residential section of Boston, and has a thickly settled district from which to draw.

HENRY.

NORTHWESTERN NEW YORK.

THE Majestic Theater, Buffalo, will open a summer engagement May 25. George Kleine's attractions will be featured exclusively, and the admission prices will be offered at 25, 50, and 75 cents. Foster Moore is Mr. Kleine's general manager in Buffalo.

John B. Rock, manager of the Chicago office of the Vitagraph Company, gave a private exhibition of the Vitagraph feature "A Million Bid," at the Strand Theater, Buffalo. Among those who witnessed the show were William H. Kneib, of the Wilkay Theater, Erie, Pa., and Mr. Fitzer, of the Happy Hour Theater, Syracuse. The production was later booked by Manager Harold Edel, of the Strand.

Thomas S. Powers, manager of the Gordon Theater, Rochester, was a recent visitor in Buffalo.

Another caller was Mr. Peterson, of the Winter Garden Theater, Jamestown, N. Y. He reports a good business at the various houses in Jamestown and vicinity, in which he is interested.

Work is progressing rapidly on the new $150,000 Hippodrome, Rochester, N. Y. The contractors have agreed to complete the work by Labor Day.

The private exhibitions of features given by E. Meadows, manager of the special feature department of the General Film Company are being well attended.

Frank Frane, manager of the Buffalo offices of the Greater New York Film Rental Company, is planning to move into larger quarters.

Manager Schlesinger, of the Academy Theater, Buffalo, recently booked for a week "The Drug Terror," a six-part feature. Mr. Schlesinger used special advertising for the piece. He also showed moving pictures of a baseball game by the Buffalo-Baltimore Federal teams.

The Lyceum Theater, Elmira, N. Y., has been bought by J. T. White, of Galeton, Pa.

Preliminary plans for the new theater which John A. Stapf and Frank S. Stegelske will build in Dunkirk, N. Y., have been received. These provide for the construction of a fireproof building with a seating capacity of 1,200. The theater proper will be 60 by 135 feet. The entrance will be in Central avenue. The building will extend back to Lark street, and work will be started during the present summer.

The Morton Amusement Company has received a permit to build a one-story moving picture theater at 444 Connecticut street, Buffalo, to cost $30,000.

The Grant Theater Company has received a permit to build a fireproof moving picture theater at 363 Grant street, Buffalo, to cost $25,000.

Leroy Upham has received a permit to build a one-story frame moving picture theater at 523 Grider street, Buffalo, to cost $7,000.

Foster Moore, Buffalo manager of George Kleine attractions, has moved his headquarters from Ellicott Square to the Majestic Theater.

The Buffalo Feature Film Corporation has moved its offices to No. 2 Chapin Block.

M. M. Miller has become manager of the Buffalo branch of the Mutual Film Corporation. He comes here from Cincinnati, where he did special work for the company. He was formerly assistant manager of the Mutual branch in Indianapolis.

Daniel J. Savage has become general manager of the Buffalo branch of the General Film Co. He covers this city and surrounding territory. He is a veteran in the moving picture business and has a large personal following in this field. He was formerly manager of the Mutual branch in Buffalo. A. G. Benedict and R. H. Brink have left the Mutual staff to join Mr. Savage at the General Co.'s headquarters.

"Sealed Orders," a moving picture feature showing war scenes, was recently featured by Manager Schlesinger, of the Academy Theater, Buffalo. Half-page advertisements were used in the Buffalo newspapers to boom the production. In the advertisements appeared pictures of President Wilson and Admiral Mayo.

BILLY BISON.

CINCINNATI.

LOCAL No. 165, the Cincinnati branch of the Moving Picture Operators' Union, recently elected new officers for the ensuing year, including the following: Edward Kirsch, president; William Sullivan, vice-president; Frank Hines, second vice-president; Henry Lacy, recording secretary; Arthur Six, treasurer; Walt Kinney, financial secretary; Charles Ring, business representative; Albert Deisel, sergeant-at-arms; Harry Nolan, trustee, three years; William Newman and J. M. Gelman, sinking fund trustees; Walter Kinney, delegate to district conference.

Stanley W. Hatch, formerly Cincinnati manager of the General Film Company, has taken charge of the feature department of the Universal Film Company's offices. Mr. Hatch has been succeeded at the General offices by Frank Smith, the former Cincinnati Mutual manager. The feature department of the General has been incorporated with the main department, with headquarters at Seventh and Walnut streets, where the old offices were located.

G. J. Trask, district manager of the World Feature Film Corporation, with jurisdiction over the Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Detroit and Indianapolis offices, reports that business has been running along nicely, exhibitors seeming to take enthusiastically to the big features issued by the company. George J. Beihoff, traveling representative of the company, who has been in charge of the Cleveland office temporarily, has been succeeded by E. A. Painter, who was formerly manager of the feature department of the General Film Company's Cincinnati office.

McMahon & Jackson, proprietors of the Olympic Theater, one of Cincinnati's popular burlesque houses, have broken into the motion picture business anew with pronounced success, their Independent Feature Company, which opened for business several weeks ago, apparently being a winner from every respect. The company has contracted to release a feature a day, with the Exclusive program as a basis, and already has a number of theaters signed up to handle its releases. Among the features which it now controls in Ohio are the productions of Helen Gardner, Gaumont, Apex, Great Northern Special, Pasquali, Italo, Metropolitan, Solax, Kennedy, and Ammex, and it will take the entire output of all of these companies for the Buckeye State. The firm's members are pioneers in the business. They recently acquired the stock of the Norwood Amusement Company, operating the Plaza Theater, in Norwood, and Mr. McMahon has been elected president, Mr. Jackson becoming vice-president. The former president of the company, A. C. Bingelsdedt, will continue for a time as manager under the new ownership. The deal involved $60,000, the title to the building and ground passing with the stock. The house seats 700.

The Olympic Theater, whose burlesque season closed on Saturday, April 18, opened on the following Sunday with the Paul J. Rainey Hunt pictures, prices ranging from 15 cents up to a dollar for box seats. The popular feature showed during the entire week with such success that it was continued for another week, at reduced prices, however. The Olympic is open for engagements for the summer season, and will probably be leased by some exhibitor for use in showing features, as it is in an excellent location.

The Kathlyn series has been the hit of the season, according to E. J. Bauman, manager of Dreamland. All of the releases in the series have drawn crowded houses, says Mr. Bauman. Business has been good at the Dreamland, in spite of alternately rainy and hot weather.

"Love and Vengeance," one of the first of the new Sterling releases of the Universal, was greeted by large audiences at the Colonial last week, the popularity of the leading comedian who stars in these pictures being strongly in evidence. Manager Ed. Bernardi is immensely pleased with the way business has been running at this big house.

Edward T. Lux, manager of the Cincinnati Buckeye Film Company, of Cincinnati, had a most annoying experience several days ago. While he was in Indianapolis on business, some man, whose identity has not yet been learned, took the extreme liberty of using his name while in a very sensational scrape. The man was moved from a Cincinnati hotel to the city hospital, suffering from the effects of bichloride of mercury poisoning, and recovered and left without revealing his identity to the authorities. A woman was involved in the affair. Mr. Lux knew nothing about the matter until he was notified in Indianapolis, when he promptly wired to Cincinnati, informing the papers that there was undoubtedly an error. Full reparation for the error was made in the papers, but the incident was not a pleasant one to Mr. Lux.

Manager C. Hubert Heuck, who handles Heuck's and the Lyric Theaters, the former of which is now running pictures, has notified the Chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati that he will gladly permit that organization to use Heuck's, free of charge, for the display of any industrial moving picture films which it may desire to show, and it is expected that this generous offer will be taken advantage of, as a number of such films are in course of preparation.

The management of Coney Island, Cincinnati's famous river amusement resort, has made arrangements by which any of its patrons who are willing to pay the fee may have themselves photographed in motion. Amusement Manager Reisenberger is in charge of this, as of many other unique stunts for the merriment of visitors to the park, and it seems that it will be one of the most popular on the list. Already many mothers of distractingly interesting infants have made arrangements to record the antics of their youngsters in this up-to-date manner, and indications are that the cameramen will be kept busy with this and similar work.

KENNETH.

ST. LOUIS, MO.

THE business Mens' League of this city is having pen and ink sketches made of all the principal motion picture theaters of St. Louis. "Forward St. Louis," a publication devoted to advertising the city's advantages and resources, will use the drawings in an article that will feature St. Louis as one of the greatest motion picture cities in the United States. The sketches will be published in a booklet among other facts concerning the city's greatness.

The Mutual Film Exchange, in the Benoist Building, has opened another set of offices for the handling of its larger features.

The Parent-Teacher Association, of Maplewood, an organization looking to betterment of school conditions and a closer relation between the parent, the teacher and the pupil, has inaugurated a once-a-week picture show for the benefit of the school children and their parents. Only selected films are shown, the program being limited to educational subjects of a general nature, or plays that are classics or adaptations from classical books. Mrs. Luella M. Grimsley, who is active in club and uplift work, is the head of the organization, and attends to the selecting of the program. The opening bill contained "The Lady of the Lake" as the special feature.

Edward Auger, who has resigned from the management of the General Film Company's exchange here, has been succeeded by Frank Tabler, who was assistant manager of the branch. It is said that Mr. Auger has gone to New York to enter the service of the Eclectic Film Company. Mr. Auger was well known and well liked, and his absence from St. Louis will be regretted by his many friends.

When the Park Theater presented the Mutual Corporation feature, "The Dishonored Medal," special interest was manifested in the production because it was made under the direction of W. Christy Cabanne, who is a member of the well known Cabanne family of St. Louis.

Frank T. Highfield, who has charge of manufacturing Radium Gold Fiber screens for the Atsco Company, Inc., has gone to New York to establish a factory for the manufacture of the screens there. The factory in St. Louis will continue working full time as usual.

John Osborn, lessee of the Maplewood Theater, died very suddenly on April 2. Mr. Osborn was about seventy years old, and had been actively engaged in business up to the day of his death.

Edward Abeles, who played Monty Brewster in "Brewster's Millions," was a St. Louis citizen and is well known here. This fact gave an added interest to the photoplay when it was shown at the Park Theater last week.

The Powhatan Theater and Airdome in Maplewood is open after a thorough cleaning and repainting.

Geo. C. Rose, who succeeded Graf E. Weller as manager of the Orpheum Theater in the 5900 block on Easton Avenue, is running a five-reel General program to good business.

The Grand Theater in Market Street is using the "Lucille Love" films. A Kinemacolor subject is shown each day in connection with a big vaudeville bill.

A bill which provides that all motion pictures shall be passed upon by the chief of police has been introduced in the City Council by Councilman Fletcher.

John B. Rock, of the Vitagraph Company, was in St. Louis with the Vitagraph's Broadway star feature, "A Million Bid," which had such a phenomenal run at the Vitagraph Theater in New York. L. G. Edel, manager of the General Film Company's feature department here, gave a special private showing of the film at the Empress Theater on Thursday, April 30. Three hundred and fifty exhibitors from St. Louis, East St. Louis, and nearby towns were invited to see the film, which made a splendid impression on the audience.

Thomas Santschi, the hero of the "Adventures of Kathlyn" series, is the seventh of the St. Louis Times Popular Player contest. After three more favorites have been selected, the finals will be held to determine the grand winner of the ten weeks' voting.

GIEBLER.

INDIANA.

ANOTHER Warner Feature, Inc., office has been opened in Louisville, Ky., by S. B. Kramer, Indianapolis, head of the Warner exchange for this territory.

Harvey Bryant, of the Chicago office of the Peerless Film & Supply Company, is in Indianapolis conferring with Indiana Manager Parker on business matters relevant to the company's interests here.

The Mutual Film Corporation here will move from the Willoughby building May 1 and will take the entire floor above the Keystone Theater.

Orrin iC. Cox, advisory secretary of the National Board of Censorship for motion pictures, speaks at the Michigan City High School on moral criticism of films, structural and sanitary needs of picture theaters and the elimination of objectionable reels, next week.

Members of the Southeastern Kansas Association which was entertained recently while in Huntington, Ind., with moving pictures, showing Huntington and its commercial, industrial and social life, were so impressed with what they termed "this unique method of touring a city," that they intend having films made showing the points of interest of Kansas on the screen.

Word has just been received at the Mutual Film Corporation offices here that M. M. Miller, recently with this exchange and later located at the Cincinnati office, has been transferred to the Buffalo exchange of this concern.

"Lucille Love," a serial story that is being featured strongly in Sunday papers throughout the country, was shown at the Surprise, South Bend, the other night with excellent results. It will run at this theater for fifteen weeks.

The business of the National Board of Censorship for motion pictures was explained by Orrin G. Cox, of New York, advisory secretary to the board, in an address before South Bend citizens the other evening. The motion picture expert visited under the auspices of Mayor Keller's special committee on picture films.

The Keystone Theater, Indianapolis' latest and best addition to the moving picture houses here, was formally opened May 1 by Edward G. Sourbier, former sheriff and owner of several of the leading theaters of the Hoosier capital. The interior decorations are lavish and lighting scheme is original and most effective. From noon until 3 p.m. the house, which seats 600, was opened to newspaper men and moving picture men, criticism being invited. Managers of the many film exchanges here and their wives and women friends flocked to the house. Some of the interior work on the decorations was left unfinished in order that the theater would open on scheduled time. A lavish distribution of flowers was a feature of the opening. After 3 p.m. the theater was open in a business way to the public. The newspapers, represented at the opening, were unanimous in their praise of the new house, both as to beauty of design and originality of operation. Keystone pictures are being offered by Mr. Sourbier, who, it is predicted, will enjoy much business with his new venture.

Mr. Sourbier has probably instituted a record in this part of the country in the pomp and ceremony of his opening. Nothing but that had the hallmark of quality found place on his program. The invitation cards were models of artistry, registered a departure from the ordinary procedure of first performances. The cards received by the newspaper men and picture men in general read: "Mr. Edward G. Sourbier requests the presence of yourself and ladies at the special performance and musical program, Friday, May first, nineteen fourteen, from twelve to three o'clock, at the New Keystone Photo Playhouse, 150-152 North Illinois street. Music on the Wurlitzer Motion Picture Orchestra, the wonder of the twentieth century. First and only one in the city. Object: Inspection and criticism."

Manager J. C. Mack, of the Indiana branch of the World's Special Film Corporation, is supplying the Anderson, Ind., high school with a series of "Joan of Arc" films of educational merit. Principal W. A. Denny reports to Mr. Mack that the pictures are going fine and arousing enthusiasm among the pupils.

The old Opera House, at Greenfield, Ind., has just been opened as a moving picture theater and is doing good business, according to reports.

Anderson, Ind., staged a mile long parade containing thirty-two floats, four thousand children and city councilmen, physicians and undertakers, April 30, the purpose being to arouse interest in the campaign on the house fly. While the children chanted a "swat the fly" anthem, moving picture men from Chicago and New York "got busy."

Indianapolis is to have some more vaudeville houses, features of which will be the motion picture series to be given at each performance. The F. J. Rembusch Enterprises of this city will operate the shows, incorporation having just been effected with a capital stock of $10,000. Directors are: Frank J. and Grace Rembusch and Harry Koch.

Inauguration of moving picture shows to render unnecessary the proposed "lass de'sible" stamp act if war with Mexico should be proclaimed is the suggestion of Dr. A. E. Stonecipher, of South Bend. The physician has communicated with Representative Barnhart at Washington, urging that each ticket sold to patrons of moving picture houses be required to bear a special internal revenue stamp.

Dickson Bros., of the Yarnell Theater, Wabash, Ind., recently visited the Blache office here and contracted for a number of Blache releases.

Billy Outland, owner of a new show in Lafayette, has just booked three weeks of the Blache features for his house.

Greenfield, Ind., is seeing educational pictures in the series "Picturesque Hawaii" with special performances for students and school children. A lecturer accompanies the entertainment.

Hector Fuller, former war correspondent, English cosmopolite and now dramatic critic for the Indianapolis Star, will lecture at the Murat Theater here Sunday night, May 10, on "Through China." Four moving picture reels of Chinese life and 100 slides taken by Fuller while in the British marine service will be thrown on the screen. The Murat is the first and largest theatrical house here.

The Shelbyville, Ind., Coza Theater did a big business the other day, the resulmt of special advertising, announcing films depicting John Bunny and Flora Finch "doing" the Tango.

The management of the Royal Grand, Marion, Ind., is giving free Saturday morning shows along educational, religious and comedy lines. "We want to help educate the children," is the slogan of this house.

The Lafayette Courier, Lafayette, Ind., is printing the serial story, "The Three Musketeers," which will be shown in six parts at the New Victoria here, commencing May 4.

PHILADELPHIA.

MANY local moving picture theater owners were represented at a meeting recently in Harrisburg, Pa., of a committee representing theater owners, architects, equipping firms, the State Building Code Commission, fire marshals of cities and the department of labor and industry. At the meeting a draft of rules was drawn that calls for all buildings to be erected hereafter in Pennsylvania must be on the ground floor. Numerous other changes were suggested for safety, and it is believed that the draft will be finished in time to be submitted to the State Industrial Board at its next meeting.

Preliminary plans have been completed for a moving picture house to be built for Levick & Waldow, at 2709-11 North 5th street. The new theater is to be a one-story brick, 45 by 100 feet.

The Metropolitan Opera House, of this city, opened Monday, April 28, to run nothing but high-class moving picture films. The Electric Supply Company, 13th and Race streets, supplied the opening picture, the title of which was, "The Great Demand." It is understood that hereafter the Opera House will run moving picture shows permanently.

The construction of a moving picture house is under way at Hanover, Pa., for John J. Schmidt. It will be a one-story brick and terra-cotta building, 36 by 115 feet.

THE FRINGE ON THE GLOVE (Special—2 parts—May 18).—Jack and Bob, employed with a lumber company, are chums. Both are in love with Adele. A real estate deal puts Bob on the road to fortune. He decides to propose to Adele, but Jack informs him that the girl has promised to be his wife. Bob leaves for the city. Adele, ignorant of Jack's contemptible trick, wonders at Bob's departure and his continued silence. Jack presses his suit. Believing Bob has forgotten her, Adele marries Jack.

Jack speculates with the firm's money. Adele and her husband go to the city, where Bob is now a prominent real estate operator. Jack calls Bob up on the phone and invites him to call. While waiting for him to arrive, the man reads a news item which informs him that he is ruined. Fearing lest his peculations be discovered, he attempts suicide. Bob arrives in time to frustrate his design. Bob mortgages his property and loans Jack the money. Later, Adele returns from a shopping trip and meets Bob. The old love flares up. Jack is filled with jealous rage.

The cur ignores Bob's plea for the repayment of the loan when the mortgages fall due. Bob is ruined. He joins the Northwest Mounted Police. Fate causes him to be stationed near Jack's home. Speculation again ruins Jack. He plans a fake robbery to hide his thefts. The man enters his office at midnight and rifles the safe. The watchman discovers him. In the fight that ensues, Jack slays him. The murderer arranges an alibi.

Bob discovers the murder. In the dead man's hand, he finds a piece of leather fringe. Remembering that Jack owns a pair of fringed gloves, he calls at his house but finds the man out. Later, Jack appears. Seizing his hands, Bob examines the gloves he wears. Realizing his crime has been discovered, the villain attempts to escape. His effort is fruitless. Adele enters in time to see her husband led away under arrest.

THE REDSKINS AND THE RENEGADES (Special—2 parts—May 20).—Swiftfoot, daughter of Chief White Eagle, is the sweetheart of Red Feather, son of Chief Red Bird. The lovers befriend Sancho, an old Mexican, thereby winning his gratitude. The man is the father-in-law of Pedro, leader of a band of renegades. Pedro learns that the Indians' government allowance is due to arrive shortly. By a clever ruse, the renegade band holds up the wagon containing the gold. Pedro and his men make off with the money. They bury their loot under a stone by the side of a stream.

Burns, the Indian agent, learns of the robbery. Chief Red Bird refuses to believe the story of the hold-up, while White Eagle places faith in the white man's honesty. Because he refuses to allow his tribe to take to the warpath, White Eagle and Red Bird separate, each taking his tribe in separate directions. Swiftfoot and Red Feather are parted. Later, White Eagle's people unwittingly pitch camp over the spot where the stolen money is concealed. Pedro is furious when he discovers this check to his plans. He and his men plot to recover the loot. They capture Swiftfoot and confine her in Pedro's cabin. Sancho, however, comes to the rescue and frees her. On her way back to camp, the maid meets Red Feather and tells him the story. The brave goes to summon his tribe.

White Eagle and his braves search for the missing girl. While they are gone, Pedro's band descends upon the camp and dig up the money. Red Bird's tribe arrives just as the thieves are about to flee. A desperate battle ensues. Attracted by the sound of firing, White Eagle and his men return, meeting Burns and a sheriff's posse on the way. The party arrives in time to help in the extermination of the renegade band. Burns, as Indian agent, promptly hands the recovered money over to its proper owners. Red Bird, realizing how unfounded his suspicions were, tries to make amends. But Burns, knowing of the love between Red Feather and Swiftfoot, first requests Red Bird to consent to their marriage.

TIGHT SHOES (May 22).—Cramer and Bennet are invited to a wedding. When the latter looks for his dress shoes, he finds that Cramer has appropriated them. Borrowing a pair several sizes too small, Bennet limps to the scene of the festivities. To add to the misery caused by his aching feet, Bennet finds his sweetheart, Alice, flirting with his hated rival, Rawson. Later, at supper, Bennet is unable to stand the pain caused by his tight shoes and removes them under cover of the table. Rawson steals the shoes and hides them.

When Bennet discovers his loss, he takes refuge in the dressing room. There, however, he is mistaken for a thief and placed under arrest by the detective guarding the wedding gifts. Cramer comes to the rescue. Bennet compels his roommate to give him back his foot-gear. Promising Cramer to find a pair of shoes for him, Bennet goes in search of Rawson. He compels his rival to come into the dressing room and play cards with Cramer for his, Rawson's, shoes. Cramer wins and appropriates the footgear of Bennet's rival. The roommates find the tight shoes and heave them after the bridal carriage. Waiting until all have gone, poor Rawson painfully limps down the pebbly road in his stocking feet in search of the discarded shoes.

ADVANCED STYLES FOR FALL AND WINTER, 1914-15 (May 22).—Since the question of what will be worn next season is of paramount importance to the members of the fair sex, this feature, in that it answers this question, is of unusual interest. One of the foremost designers in the country is shown at work creating new styles for the coming fall and winter. Among the garments shown are, a novelty military cape coat; suit showing the new tango back, flare bottom on jacket and skirt; new directoire suit; a tailored suit, the skirt of which is trimmed with ruffle around the knee; a new Balmacaan coat, and several other effects.

THE VENGEANCE OF THE VAQUERO (May 23).—Don Fernando loves Dolores, daughter of Valencia, a ranchero. Unknown to the Don, Alviso, his young aide, also loves Dolores. In leaving the Valencia hacienda, Don Fernando brutally lashes Jose, a vaquero, because of the man's awkwardness. The vaquero vows vengeance. Realizing that she loves Alviso, Dolores pleads with her father, but the stern old parent compels his daughter to become engaged to the Don. Desperate, Dolores resolves to call upon her betrothed at the Presidio and beg him to break their engagement. Jose accompanies his mistress.

Dolores meets Alviso at the Presidio gate. While the lovers are talking, Jose steals into the room where Don Fernando is writing and stabs him. The vaquero is successful in leaving unseen. Later, Dolores enters the room. She discovers Don Fernando lying lifeless on the floor. The girl staggers from the room in a fainting condition.

Alviso comes in time to catch her in his arms. When he discovers his superior officer slain, the boy concludes that Dolores has committed the crime. To shield her, he places her on her horse and compels the girl to head for the hacienda. Alviso then returns to the scene of the crime and arranges to have suspicion directed toward himself. He is placed under arrest. Dolores learns of Alviso's sacrifice. To save him, the girl hastens to the authorities and declares that she is the guilty one. The vaquero views the proceedings and bears his beloved mistress announce her guilt. Alviso, however, ridicules Dolores' story. Filled with grief, the girl tries to stab herself. Unable to remain quiet in face of Dolores' frantic grief, Jose rushes forward and confesses his crime. The vaquero is seized and placed under arrest.

A TICKET TO HAPPINESS (May 19).—Lowell Robinson's besetting sin is selfish ingratitude. He leaves Katherine Dexter in the East, telling her that he will send for her as soon as he can make a home in the West. He secures employment on the ranch of Olaf Olson, and, becoming impatient over the slow accumulation of wages, tries to accelerate financial accumulation by stealing cattle. He is arrested, but the big-hearted Swede intercedes and secures his release on probation. Robinson now concocts to work his generous friend for the girl's passage money West. He convinces Olson that the latter should marry, as available women are scarce in that locality, and he exhibits a picture of Katherine, representing that she is only an acquaintance in the East, who might be induced to come West and marry the right man. Honest Olson falls in with the idea and advances a considerable sum of money for this purpose. The correspondence leading up to this event is personally conducted by Robinson, as the Swede cannot write English.

Olson, however, finally suspicious of the treachery of Robinson, locks him up in the ranch house, and himself goes to meet the girl. Her ignorance of the whole matter, as originally laid out by Robinson, confirms his doubts. He speaks of it to his sympathizers and the news flies around the little settlement like wildfire, so that a committee is organized to remonstrate with Robinson, to see that there is fair play. He, in the interim, has escaped, but the committee capture him, conduct him to Olson and the girl, where the facts are laid before Katherine, who is given the privilege of deciding between the two men. She soon decides in favor of the Swede. Robinson bows his head in defeat, leaves the place forever, so that Katherine effects a "transfer" and gets her "ticket to happiness" by a fortunate accident.

TEACHING FATHER A LESSON (May 20).—Old Jasper Jenks refuses to allow his daughter, Bess, to marry Tom until he can buy her a home, so the young people take matters into their own hands and elope. When they return to the family roof-tree to ask forgiveness, Jenks meets them at the front door, drags Bess into the house, and chases Tom off with a shotgun. Bess carries on so terribly that old Jenks finally relents and writes to Tom he is welcome to Bess if he will come and get her at once. Tom secretly concludes to take the old man's advice, but openly decides to teach him a lesson. He writes Jenks he had decided to remain single and that Bess can get a divorce. Old Jenks is simply stunned, and Bess gets immediately into action, demanding an explanation. Tom confides in her and she returns home seemingly better than ever, declaring that she has been "thrown down."

Old man Jenks raves and rages louder than before, but to no avail. He sees Tom, and it only adds fuel to his fury. He finally returns home and tells Bess of the terrible situation. She pretends to be heartbroken. Driven to extreme measures, old Jenks "loosens" and finally goes out and buys a furnished cottage, hoping in this way to bring Tom about to reason. Thereupon he visits Tom, accompanied by Bess, and shows him the deed for the property. In spite of Tom's elation over the situation, he maintains a stolid indifference. Finally old Jenks has exhausted entreaty and patience, and drags out a six-shooter, compelling Tom to accompany Bess to the cottage. When they arrive there, Tom experiences a great change of heart. He kisses Bess passionately and astonishes old Jenks by fastening his arms around him. Somehow or other, old Jenks learns of the trick, and is furious, but finally relents, for he finds that he has been outwitted and Tom is a much better man than he thought he was. So he gives him the deed to the property, and the young couple are happy forever after.

MUSIC HATH CHARMS—NOT (May 22).—Sheridan, the thin cornetist, Booth, the fat flageolet-ist; Wonn, the dudish trombonist, and Hendron, the tall bass-drummer, do a vaudeville musical act, and simply make the habitants of their boarding house wild by continually practicing. The irate janitor tries to enforce the proprietor's orders, and gets stung good and proper. In the interim, the tenants get nervous and throw furniture and other things out of the windows. The janitor rings for the police and others pull the firecall on a lamppost in front of the house. He then enters the room of the vaudevillians with a knife between his teeth and a revolver in each hand to the accompaniment of the noisy musicians. They disarm him, and he, in a panic, upsets a negro woman hanging out wash on the roof, so that she jumps over the coping and lands on the network of ropes hung between the houses to sustain the wash of tenants. About this time the police and firemen come upon the scene, and there is a merry war. The "coppers" get sadly by the hose, likewise the actors, and after more excitement the musicians are finally hailed into court and sentenced to six months in jail, where they can practice their act for the benefit of other delinquents.

AS TIME ROLLED ON (May 22).—This deals with a peripatetic pup. Bloomer, hurrying along the street, bumps into a stylishly dressed woman holding a chain attached to a bulldog. He apologizes; she smiles and asks him to hold the dog for a moment while she visits the store. He wearies and persuades someone else to take care of the dog, and it is passed from hand to hand until it is placed in the care of an ancient beggar. Hours after, the woman remembers the dog and goes after him. She catches sight of the white-haired beggar, and, thinking he has aged in the interim, wails: "Oh, you poor fellow; I didn't think I'd been that long." She rewards him and gets the dog.

THE ESTRANGEMENT (May 23).—Henry Seymour, something of a genius, but thoroughly irresponsible, shamelessly subsists upon the earnings of his hard-working wife, who conducts a railway boarding-house. They have two children, who are inclined to be rather unruly. One day the husband and wife have a misunderstanding, and, acting upon her acidly expressed wish, promoted by the passion of the moment, he departs, declaring he will never return. Mrs. Seymour is thoroughly conscious of the fact that she will be able to take care of the children and have one less to care for in her shiftless husband.

Twelve years elapse. Without the restraining hand of a father, and the mother engrossed in business cares, the children become unmanageable and cause the mother many heartaches. In the interim, Seymour, now repentant and reformed, has, through hard work and cleverness, become a wealthy miner in Alaska. By corresponding with friends, he learns of the deplorable affairs at home, and returns incognito to see if he can bring about adjustment and make reparation. He finds the character of the son and daughter discouraging, but ascertains his wife's attitude and is most favorably impressed. He obtains room and board, and pays a month in advance at the boarding house. That same evening the son loses everything at a gambling den, and at the suggestion of a pal secures possession of his mother's money for further wastage. She discovers son in the act and pleads, but he refuses to listen and leaves, and Seymour happens to be an unseen witness to this incident. The daughter goes for a walk with the unscrupulous friend of the son, against the mother's wishes. Seymour follows his son to the gambling room and wins the money from him. The son accuses him of cheating and draws a revolver, not knowing who he is. The father easily disarms him, returns the money and orders him home. On the way they hear screams and find that the daughter is repulsing the advances of her escorts companion. Thereupon the father corrects the same what athletic son to give his pal a thrashing, which he does. He then looks arms with his son and daughter and brings them back to the house. The son, now overwhelmed with resentment, orders his father to leave the house; then the latter reveals his identity. All are dumbfounded; the wife tactfully embraces her husband, while the wayward son and impertinent daughter break down and beg forgiveness, which is granted.

VITAGRAPH.

DOROTHY DANEBRIDGE, MILITANT (May 18).—Dorothy Danebridge is spoiled by her father and aunt, and through the influence of Phyllis, an old school friend and an ardent suffragette, becomes interested in Women's Suffrage. She is engaged to Ernest Lardner, a young lawyer and member of Parliament. Her father and aunt discover her reading militant literature and are highly shocked, but the girl insists on having her own way. She then tries to persuade her lover to support the Suffragette Cause and on his refusal to do so, angrily breaks off their engagement.

Dorothy promises Phyllis she will speak at a suffragette meeting. Her father learns of it and takes her off to the country where, on the night of the meeting at which she is to speak, he locks her in her room. She manages to borrow a suit of boy's clothes, climbs out of the window and takes the train for the city. She arrives there late and finds the meeting has been broken up by a crowd of toughs. Rose, another friend of Dorothy's, and a very timid girl, is attacked by one of the ruffians. Dorothy interferes and tries to protect the girl. Ernest, who is passing by, sees a big fellow attacking a frail looking young "lad," interferes. The police come up and arrest Dorothy, Ernest and the tough. Dorothy and Ernest are thrust into the same cell and he finds the "boy" is none other that his sweetheart, in boy's clothes. In their distress, they are drawn together, and Dorothy, who has had enough of militantism, gladly gives her consent when he begs a renewal of their engagement. Through his influence, Ernest, after making himself known, gains their freedom, and they go home to her father and aunt, who are nearly distracted. On hearing of the renewal of the young people's engagement, they decide that "all's well that ends well," and the lovers are left alone in their happiness.

JOHANNA, THE BARBARIAN (Special—Two Parts—May 19).—After her husband's death, Johanna Weston, a rough mountain woman, continues single-handed hauling ore from her mine to the mill, over her private right of way. The Yellow Rose, a competing mine, meets with difficulties when a landslide blocks the roadway. The owners want to use Johanna's, the only other road, but she asks a prohibitive price for its use, and the foreman, fearing he will lose his contracts, writes to Crane, the owner, asking that George Randolph, a young mining engineer, be sent to make terms with the "Barbarian." Randolph, whose wife is an invalid, is glad of the opportunity to go, as an excuse to escape Juliet, a pretty dancer, with whom he has been infatuated. He accordingly moves with his wife to Randsburg. George, Johanna's lazy son, is treated kindly by Mrs. Randolph and her good influence has its effect. Johanna loves the boy in her coarse way and demonstrates it; at the same time displays her strength and courage by thrashing the camp bully for abusing George. Randolph gets an idea from this, what a sturdy type of woman he has to deal with.

The "little sick lady," as George calls Mrs. Randolph, wins Johanna's heart through her kindness to the boy. Randolph determines to run his automobile truck over Johanna's road without her consent. Johanna, in revenge, "plants" several sticks of dynamite in the road. Shortly after she sees a pair of shoes Mrs. Randolph has given George and they remind her of the good woman's influence over her boy. Johanna becomes remorseful at the thought of her deadly plan and the sorrow it will cause. George points to the new truck moving along the road, and, taking her gun, she shoots into the dynamite, exploding it before the truck reaches the spot. Randolph and the foreman are about to give up in despair when Johanna has George write a note, selling out to Randolph on his own terms. Later Randolph's wife gets well and is able to walk again. Through Johanna, Randolph gets rid of Juliet forever. In gratitude, Johanna determines nothing shall cloud the happiness of the woman who has added so much to her own.

Your Operator Wants a Chance!

You can make as good a picture in your theatre as can possibly be made, but you cannot accomplish this result with an old rattle trap of a machine and out of date arc controller, no matter how good an operator you may have.—Don't fool yourself into believing that a good operator can give a perfect picture with an inferior equipment, nor can a bum operator make a good picture with the best equipment—It takes the combination of the two to make success for you—SUCCESS MEANS MONEY IN YOUR POCKET, but remember you cannot make money unless you spend money, and the success is generally in proportion to the amount of your expenditure, within reason, of course—Get busy to-day and write to "HALLBERG," who has had the greatest experience in the world in the equipment of motion picture theatres—"HALLBERG" not only sells goods, but he selects for you the combination which will give the results you ought to have—The scalper and the low-price-man, who is always trying to put one over, is not in a position to do that.

I take old machines in trade as part payment for new ones, and I also make liberal allowance on your old rheostats, A. C. Economizers, A. C. to D. C. Converters and Rectifiers in trade for the celebrated "HALLBERG" A. C. to D. C. Economizers, which give the BEST LIGHT with the LEAST CURRENT.

THE RIVAL UNDERTAKERS (May 20).—While glancing over the morning paper, Mr. T. R. Sampson, a prominent citizen of Rapid City, finds an item, which erroneously states he is not expected to live. Ketcham Quick and Sneakum, two rival undertakers, energetic and alive to every phase of their business, hear of the threatened demise of Mr. Sampson, and anticipate a possible job for themselves. John, a poor relative of Mr. Sampson, also learns of the report, and he and his wife decide to call and extend their sympathy, secretly looking forward to getting a goodly share of his worldly goods.

The two undertakers endeavor to ingratiate themselves with Sampson. Both arrive about the same time, and professional jealousy nearly causes them to come to blows. They send in tokens of sympathy with their cards, and Mr. Sampson laughs boisterously. He decides to teach them a lesson and have a little fun. The butler announces John and his wife, and Sampson determines to learn the true state of their feelings toward him, so orders the butler to usher them into his bedroom. He makes himself up to look like a very sick man, and gets into bed. John and his wife are exceedingly nervous, make extremely bad breaks, and both get away as soon as they can. Dr. Dope is called in. The butler later informs the undertakers that Mr. Sampson is dead. John and his wife, who have also been notified, rush to the house. The rival undertakers drive up and each tries to tie crape on the door, struggle into the house and burst into the bedroom. While they are fighting desperately to get to the "corpse," Sampson suddenly sits up and roars out, "Can't I be left quietly dead!" Every one is astounded, and there is a grand rush for the door, and the terror-stricken relatives and undertakers go speedily up the street. Sampson, watching them from the window, laughs heartily at his little joke.

OUT IN HAPPY HOLLOW (May 21).—After shooting a man in a saloon fight, Gentleman Bob, a crook, makes his getaway to the West, leaving behind him "Mississippi" and their baby, promising to return for them. In the West he falls in with congenial companions and soon forgets her. The baby dies, and Mississippi goes West. Ten years later she becomes manager of the store and post-office in the little town of Happy Hollow. The Sheriff of that county loves her, but she refuses his attentions, believing Bob will yet keep his promise to marry her. One evening the sheriff begs her to go to a dance with him. Bob and a girl from another town also attend the dance, and "Sippi," as she is called for short, sees him. He goes outside for a smoke and Sippi follows him. He is cold and mumbles that he will come to see her soon. The sheriff notices a scar on Bob's right hand, and later gets a letter saying a man "with scar on right hand" is wanted for a postoffice robbery. Bob comes back agitated, and says: "Sippi, I'm in trouble. Give me some money and we'll leave this place and marry." She is overjoyed, but when he sees her small amount of cash, tells her he wants the postoffice money. Hearing a knock at the door, Bob hides under the bed. The sheriff enters, and sees a hand with a familiar scar on it reaching out from under the bed. The sheriff draws his gun, commands Bob to come out, searches him, and finds he is the man wanted. Sippi, to save Bob, lies, saying, "He stole to help his mother, let him go to her." The sheriff makes him give up the money he has stolen, gives him a few dollars from his own pocket, and Sipp commands Bob to go. Sippi starts to tell the sheriff about Bob, he puts his hand on her lips and smiles lovingly at her. Her past makes no difference to him, and she realizes she has found the Right Man at last.

BUNNY'S SWELL AFFAIR (May 22).—Bunny, the druggist, and Jones, the undertaker, are both rivals for the hand of the coquettish widow Finch. Bunny arranges to take the widow out for a trolley ride. They meet Jones, who invites the widow to go for a ride in his new automobile. Excusing herhelf to Bunny, she gets into the auto and they drive off, leaving Bunny swearing vengeance. Driving along a country road, Jones makes love to the widow, and carelessly steers under an overhanging tree. The widow's hat is pulled off and ruined. Going by a millinery store, Jones sees a beautiful creation in the window, trimmed with an assortment of pompons, and planning to square himself, orders it sent to the widow's house. The hat is given to a boy to deliver, and he stops at Bunny's drug store for a soda. While there he sees a fight going on outside, and dashes out. Seeing the address and Jones's card on the box, Bunny takes a peep at the hat, and determines to put a quietus on the undertaker's hopes. He quickly rips off the pompons, strings a lot of sponges around the crown, with a big one on top, covers them with talcum powder, and puts the whole affair back in the box.

The boy delivers the hat and the widow, delighted, puts it on and starts out for a stroll. A sudden downpour of rain makes the widow's hat a sight. The sponges are swollen enormously, and every one she meets bursts into laughter. She is puzzled and angry, but at home, sees in the mirror, the reason. Jones calls that evening and asks how she liked the hat, she says ironically, "It was a swell affair!" She then explodes, and after telling him what she thinks of such "jokes," jams the hat on his head and orders him out of the house. Bunny arrives, and, chuckling to himself, loads the blushing widow to the lounge, where she nestles lovingly in his arms.

ETTA OF THE FOOTLIGHTS (Special—Two Parts—May 23).—Etta Lang, a chorus girl, is the principal support of an invalid mother and her sister and brother—not only working at the theater, but looking after their small boarding house. Among their lodgers is Brutus Bellamy, an old actor. He becomes interested in the girl, and offers to teach her acting. She learns rapidly. She arrives at the theater late and is abused by the stage manager, Joseph Burton. Cecil Wentworth, one of the backers of the theater, takes her part and becomes interested in her. Irene St. Maur, the leading lady, throws up her part and leaves the company in the lurch. Etta offers to take her place.

The management takes a desperate chance and puts her in. She makes good.

Cecil now becomes very attentive to her, but she refuses all his advances. One night, in a pouring rain, he persuades her to let him drive her home in his car. She consents, and he secretly bids the chauffeur drive out to his villa, outside the city limits. Brutus, who is on his way to the theater, sees her in the machine, and, suspecting treachery, follows them in a taxi. Under pretense, the auto breaks down, and Cecil gets Etta to enter the villa. There he tells her where she is and tries to caress her. She repulses him. Brutus appears at the veranda window. Etta admits him, and, stepping forward, Brutus points to Cecil's mother's picture, hanging in the room, asking him how he dare insult another woman in the presence of that picture. Brutus leads Etta away. A year later she has made great strides in her profession, and is able to keep her mother in comfort. Cecil, who is really in love with her, writes Etta, begging forgiveness, and she, who has always loved him since the first day he protected her, gladly forgives him and consents to become his wife.

THE ADVENTURE OF THE COUNTERFEIT MONEY (Fifth story of Octavius, Amateur Detective—May 18).—When Octavius learned that one of the large department stores was having trouble with counterfeit money, he set out post-haste to investigate. His first step in this case was to walk about the store, "shadowing" various people. While engaged in this absorbing pastime, he happened to enter the glass department. Just as he did so, a very pretty woman accidentally knocked a vase from its stand. She apologized profusely for her carelessness and paid the salesman for the damage.

A few moments later, the cashier sent back word that the bill given in payment for the damage was counterfeit. Octavius, overhearing the complaint, immediately set out in pursuit of the pretty woman. Just as he was leaving, it was discovered that a bill with which Octavius himself had paid for a trivial purchase was also counterfeit. So the store detective who had been watching Octavius suspiciously all morning, followed him.

Octavius followed the woman to the house of a Dr. Kelly and advised her to confess everything. While the woman and Dr. Kelly were indignantly denying any knowledge of the charge, the store detective entered with a policeman and naturally supposing Octavius and the woman to be confederates, arrested them. By an undeserved streak of luck, Octavius discovered in the manager's office that the cashier was the guilty person. He assumed full credit for the discovery and deeply smitten with the charms of the beautiful lady, asked her if he might call. She gave him a card, and told him she would be delighted to see him. The card read "Miss Anne Rafferty." When Octavius called at Dr. Kelly's and asked for her, he received a distinct shock. Anne was the cook. Then the beautiful lady appeared and explained that she must have given him the card by mistake. Octavius was delighted until the lady introduced him to her husband—Dr. Kelly.

THE LIGHT ON THE WALL (Fourth Story of "The Man Who Disappeared"—May 19).—When "John Pottle," fugitive from justice, helped Jennie and Harry Horn to escape from the band of criminals which was planning to get Harry's money by using Jennie as a lure, he did so in the fond hope that he would be able to severe his connection with the aforesaid criminals for good. But fate ruled otherwise. Jennie, discovering that Biceps, one of the leading spirits of the band, had tracked her husband and herself to their refuge, implored John for help.

John, trusting that Biceps had not yet found out who had been responsible for the knock-down blow which resulted in the escape of the pair, went directly to Lipmann, the lawyer who was the brains of the criminal organization, and told him that the reason for his absence from the meetings of the gang was on account of being obliged to hide from the vigilant police.

Somewhat to John's surprise, Lipmann accepted his flimsy excuses without question. He told John that the gang had decided that Jennie must be punished for her double-dealing, and directed him to be present at a meeting to be held that night aboard a barge in the river. John, hoping to be of some service to Jennie, attended the meeting. His hopes were not realized to any large extent. He discovered that Lipmann had not been fooled at all by his excuses, and escaped from the barge only by besting Biceps in a terrible fight.

The next day John found a notice in the personal column of a newspaper, signed with his name, directing Jennie to call at a certain address. Realizing that the notice was a trap for the girl, John hastened to the address mentioned. He arrived too late to save Jennie, and was captured himself in an attempt to rescue her. The two were securely bound and placed in a room on the top floor of the house. Here, they were suavely informed by Lipmann that they would be thrown into the river shortly after dark. By almost superhuman exertions, John succeeded in getting Jennie's hand bag in his bound hands, and flashing sunlight into the eyes of a tailor across the street by means of the mirror on the bag. Rescued by the tailor, John and the girl hastened away to find some haven where they would be safe from their powerful enemies.

THREE KNAVES AND A HEATHEN CHINESE (May 20).—Joe, Ed and Frank were real sports. They bought their clothes from one of the largest mail order houses in the business. In the village, the three young men were looked upon with disapproval; they played poker entirely too well. After a time, it came to be increasingly difficult for the young men to find anyone willing to sit in a quiet game with them. When Charlie Lee arrived in town and opened a laundry, and Joe discovered that the gentle celestial could play poker, the young men immediately transferred their entire attentions to the new arrival. Charlie was very easy, indeed. Every Saturday night they played in the room behind his laundry and every Saturday night Charlie lost.

When Charlie naively informed them that he had fallen heir to a thousand dollars, the young men danced in glee. Then they rushed out, borrowed all the money they could lay their hands on, and pawned all of their belongings which were in any way negotiable. Charlie was easily persuaded to gamble with his new wealth. On Saturday night the game started. The result was curious and unexpected. The climax of the evening came with one pot which contained nearly all the money on the table. Everybody dropped but Joe and Charlie. Joe had three knaves. Charlie held his hand so carelessly that Fred was able to see it. Fred looked at it, and turned pale. "Cheese it, Joe," he whispered, "he's got a full house." Joe dropped, and Charlie laid his hand on the table. He had three sixes, a three, and a two. He had held the three in such a manner that it looked like another two.

SERAPHINA'S LOVE AFFAIR (May 20).—Sport MacSweeney decided that he would take a trip into the country for his health. Arriving in Wigginstown, fate directed him to Ezra Haskins' boarding house. Ezra Haskins lately adopted a girl from the poorhouse, named Seraphina.

Seraphina, in addition to being young and impressionable, had an exaggerated case of the romantic temperament. The arrival of the handsome young stranger from the city threw her into a furor of excitement. Toward Chug and her other country admirers she preserved an attitude of cold disdain.

Ezra Haskins was what one might call comfortably well-to-do. In accordance with the custom of simple souls, he looked askance on savings banks, and kept his money under his pillow. The astute sport, learning of this interesting fact, decided that he could turn it to account. Accordingly, he professed himself impassionately devoted to the guileless Seraphina. Seraphina, who from the first, had feared that her devotion to Sport must perish unconfessed, was overjoyed by the sudden attentions of that young man. And when, after a few days of courtship, he suggested that they elope, she was so overcome by her good fortune that Sport's further suggestion that they borrow Old Haskins' money to help them on their way never bothered her moral sense at all.

In pursuance with Sport's directions, Seraphina took the money from its hiding place, and gave it to her lover. Instead, Sport started immediately

ANNOUNCEMENT

Important to Every Exhibitor

To Our Friends, The Exhibitors:

THE enormous success and the unprecedented popularity we have experienced with the PERILS OF PAULINE has led us to take another step toward giving the American Exhibitor the very best possible in the way of feature pictures.

We received such good service, such hearty co-operation and such perfect results from PATHE FRERES on the PERILS OF PAULINE series that we have made a further special agreement with PATHE FRERES to lease more of their studio facilities, more of their leading stars and more of their directors to produce under our direction and for our sole use and release, multiple reel American features. These special features will include both comedy and drama.

We have been giving our patrons the cream of the European studios and now we can offer the highest quality American plays as well, so that you can fill a feature program from one of the Eclectic exchanges and be assured of the heartiest co-operation and the highest quality. These new plays will be made in the Pathe studio in America and will all be Pathe standard which you know means the best possible.

Watch for the first announcement. We are working on the first release now and it is a whirlwind. We have shown you what we can do in the PERILS OF PAULINE. We have a reputation to sustain and it will be sustained. Write us here or to the nearest office for privileges.

THE WAIF (6 PARTS)

One of the Best European Features We Have Ever Been Able to Purchase

Leading Part Played by Mlle. Fromet of the Theatre du Vaudeville

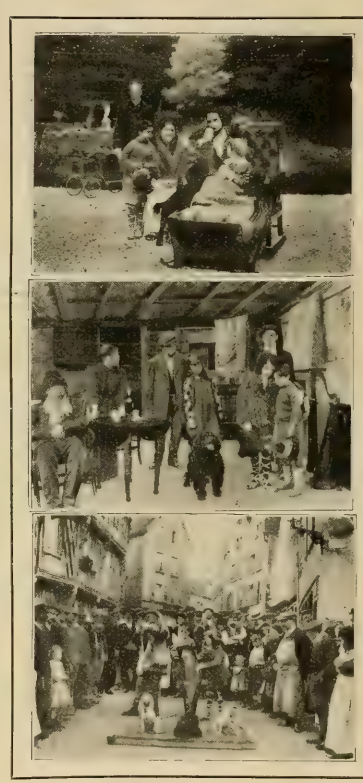
True to Life

The advantages of this truly wonderful feature are the chances it affords to show your patrons the way the small street arabs of the continent live and work. The pictures, taken on the spot, are an actual showing of the exact existence of these small future criminals. The action of this particular story is both

Pathetic and Joyful

Pathetic in his separation from his fond parents and in his experiences during the years he is forced to beg for a living before he is restored to loving arms. Mlle. Fromet never put such feeling into any play before and the kind-hearted people Remi meets on his travels show up in strong contrast the villainous uncle.

A Big Hit



As Good as a Trip to Europe

The story of THE WAIF is laid in Paris and London mostly, but the travels of Remi and his companions take them to all parts of France and some places in England. The Photography of the places they visit along their route includes some of the most to be seen in Europe. The Picture was taken in France by one of the best of the European manufacturers and we consider ourselves very lucky to be able to offer the exhibitors in America a feature of this class.

THE INVITATION

ON THE WAY

THE PLOT

Let us give you a tip—it will be worth real money to you and will save you many mistakes.

The leading moving picture stars will not play a part in a poor production. They will not risk their reputations. They are just as particular in that way as the stars on the "legitimate" stage. So when we offer played by the greatest, best-known stars in the motion picture business you can rest assured that the production is a pippin. It would have been impossible to have persuaded, ordered or bullied Pearl White, Crane Wilbur, Paul Panzer, Francis Carlyle or the others to play in the Perils of Pauline unless they were assured that it would be a real feature. When they saw what scope it allowed for their talent they threw themselves into it with an enthusiasm that is carrying everything before it.

The Perils of Pauline

You Know

what these names mean. You know what they have done before. They are doing better work in "The Perils of Pauline" than ever. "The Perils of Pauline" is a real live, red-blood feature that is pleasing the public and making a name for the theatres running it.

The Perils of Pauline

KIDNAPPED

Millions of people are reading the story of the Perils of Pauline every week. Millions of people are crowding the theatres showing it. There never has been such a crush to see a feature picture. There never has been such enthusiasm. We are getting hundreds of letters from exhibitors all over the country voicing their appreciation. They report crowded houses and people turned away. The Perils of Pauline has proved the very biggest money-maker for the exhibitor ever put out.

THE ATTEMPTED RESCUE

THE SOUTHERNERS (Special—3 parts—May 22).—It was in the early spring of 1861 that Boyd Peyton came home to Mobile after his first cruise as an officer in the United States Navy. Coming home to Mobile meant a very great real to Boyd. It meant coming back to his father, to his brother, and to his mother; but, above all, it meant coming back to Mary Annan. Mary Annan was divided in her affections between Boyd Peyton and Robert Darrow. She liked and admired them both so much that it made her heart bleed to think of giving up either for the sake of the other. But before Boyd had been long in Mobile, a love for a new idol sprang up in Mary's heart, which completely overshadowed her feelings for both men.

The name of this new idol was The Southern Cause. After years of misunderstanding and bitterness, the Southern States had at last decided to sever the bonds which held them in the Union. Mary, a Southerner, welcomed the rupture. So, too, did all the other loyal citizens of Mobile. All, that is, but Boyd Peyton. His love for the South was more than counterbalanced by his love for the country, and his duty as an officer of the United States Navy. At her birthday party, Mary Annan, rising in answer to a toast, bade none to drink to her who did not love her, and forbade any to love her who did not love the South. Boyd drank the toast. After the dinner, Mary, believing that Boyd would enlist in the Southern Cause, promised to marry him.

That night, the young officer suffered tortures of indecision. On the one side was Mary, on the other nothing but that ugly word—Duty. If he chose that, he would lose with Mary the love and respect of family and friends—everything that seemed desirable. But in the face of all temptation, when Boyd arose the next morning, he was firmly resolved to follow the bitter road of duty—and honor. When the local company of militia came to the house before breakfast, and announced to Boyd that they had elected him their captain, he told them that he was, and always would be, loyal to the government to which he had sworn allegiance. In the face of the horrified remonstrance of his family and Mary, Boyd remained steadfast in his decision. So, even while he was being cast forth from his father's house, Mary threw herself into Darrow's arms, and promised to marry him when he returned from the war. But Mary regretted her decision, for in the days that followed, love for Boyd grew and grew in her heart. At last, when she felt that she could no longer honorably keep silence, she wrote to Darrow, breaking their engagement. Darrow got Mary's letter on the eve of the battle of Chickamauga. He opened it smilling, read it and went forth to die like the brave man and honest gentleman he was. His heart was already dead before the kindly bullet found him.

As the cruel years dragged on, Mary learned to repent bitterly of her girlish desire for war and its attendant deeds of glory and bravery. Besides Darrow, her father had fallen fighting for the Cause, and Beverly, her young brother, the last of the Annan line, was stationed in Fort Morgan, in imminent peril from the guns of the Union fleet which was threatening the Confederate forts and fleet in Mobile Bay. In the terrible battle which resulted from Farragut's successful attempt to pass the forts and attack the Confederate fleet, Beverly Annan was killed. Boyd Peyton, on Farragut's flagship, the "Hartford," performed a miracle of valor in saving men from the dynamited "Tecumseh" beneath the guns of the fort and the eyes of his father, who commanded it. Desperately wounded by a shell, Peyton was removed to shore, and nursed back to health and strength by Mary Annan. Through her intercession, the outcast was taken back into the family that had disowned him. Then peace came upon the sorely-stricken land, and a far greater peace to the hearts of Mary and Boyd.

A TIGHT SQUEEZE (Eighth page in the active life of Dolly of the Dailies—May 23).—When the news came to the Comet office that Mr. Martinengro, the well-known Italian-American merchant and philanthropist had been murdered, Dolly Desmond was very anxious to have the assignment. To her disgust, the managing editor gave the story to a new reporter, Hillary Graham, the young man Dolly had met in "Mother Eve's" house. Dolly, herself, was forced to be satisfied with a Salvation Army wedding. Hillary set off on his assignment in high spirits. He had not made much of a success of reporting yet, but he was confident that his work in this case would convince the Comet management that he was one man in a thousand. Arrived in a dingy little barroom near the scene of the crime, he announced his intention of apprehending the criminals to the interested bartender. As a result, a few minutes later, Hillary was knocked on the head and thrown into the cellar.

Dolly, after finishing her report on the wedding, donned a Salvation Army uniform, and accompanied the band about town in search of more material. In the course of her wanderings, she entered the barroom, and saw a necktie on the floor which she had noticed that morning on Hillary. Creeping unobserved into the cellar, she discovered the unconscious Hillary lying on a pile of coal. As she stood in puzzled anxiety, wondering how she could possibly save the young man and herself, she was startled by a sudden rush of coal into the cellar, through the coal hole from the street. Daddy, the copy boy on the Comet, happened to be on the street above, watching the coal men at their task. Hearing a muffled cry, he stopped the men. A moment later Dolly crawled through the hole. She and Daddy rushed for the police. After Hillary had been rescued, the police entered the saloon, and arrested its occupants. A lucky chance resulted in the discovery of the Martinengro murderers. While Dolly was writing her story in the police station, the grateful Hillary proposed. Dolly was non-committal. She was afraid she wasn't quite ready to give up her adventurous life even for so successful a reporter as he was.

HE WON A RANCH (May 19).—Dan Bell, a ranchman, goes to New York for a good time. He gets into a poker game and loses all, even his ranch, to Isaac Rosenstein. Rosenstein immediately starts West to take charge. Just as he arrives one of the cowboys breaks a window. Rosenstein, showing the cuteness of his race, demands fifty cents for the broken window. The cowboy becomes enraged and wants to kill Isaac, who then approaches the cook and objects to the way he is peeling potatoes. He then proceeds to demonstrate on the laziness of the cook, who, taking offense, beats him out of the scene. The cook then explains to the cowboys that they will have to disgust him with the place. It is an excellent idea well received. From now on all sorts of things happen to the new boss. He has all he can do to escape with his life. Bell returns to the ranch to obtain his personal belongings. Rosenstein insists that he take back the ranch, and as the clothing business is more in his line, he goes back to watch the cash register.

HER HORRID HONEYMOON (May 19).—The day before Maude Raymond and Harry Mason are to be married they pass by a house where a wedding has taken place and see the fuss being made over the bridal couple. The throwing of old shoes and showers of rice was too much for Maude. She gives Harry back his ring and tells him she will not marry him, as everybody makes fun of brides. To overcome her objections Harry engages a midget and after a shave has him dressed in boy's clothes to pose as their son. Maude is pacified and the LOVE'S LONG LANE (Special—2 parts—May 20).—Lucille is a girl given over entirely to vanity. For that reason, Cecil Langley finds more favor in her eyes than Ernest Haven, who cannot give her things as Cecil can. Ernest is also a passionate man and his love making is simply an infatuation. Cecil loves her deeply and strongly, and Lucille ultimately accepts him. Ernest vows to even up matters. He had sworn to become rich so that he could marry Lucille; now he swears to break Cecil. He discovers that two stocks in which Cecil has heavily invested in are dangerous and with friends plans to have Cecil buy up all stock in sight and when the break comes smother him in ruin.

Meanwhile Lucille, tired of her luxury, decides that what she really wants is love. She forgets her husband's patient, deep seated love and remembers Ernest's passionate outbursts. About the time she decides to go and see Ernest, Cecil gets his first intimation from his friend, Jackson, that the bottom is falling out of his stock in which his fortune is tied up. He goes to tell his wife, but finds her going over her new gowns and, thinking her mood one of vanity, tells her simply that he is going out. Both Ernest and Cecil work all that night to prepare for the following day. The panic strikes and Cecil goes down to ruin with the others. While that is happening Lucille is on her way to Ernest's office. She enters in time to see him kissing his stenographer, on whom he has been lavishing attention. Ernest turns from the stenographer, Maysie, to Lucille, but she turns against him. Ernest tells her she is ruined and that she will be glad now to come to him. The news unnerves her for a moment and, telling him what she thinks of him, she leaves. Cecil has gone home broken in heart and spirit. He writes his wife telling her of his ruin, but that property he had made over in her name still remains intact and that she will be well fixed anyway. Then he leaves. Lucille returns home and reading the note and the papers realizes that he has beggared himself for her. Her latent womanhood and love for Cecil rushes to the surface. Jackson rushed to Cecil's home to tell him that he has one chance of saving his honor and his business and that is by gathering a few thousands more. Lucille learns of the new turn of affairs and asks Jackson if her property will help. Jackson sees it will save the day. She pledges all willingly and realizes her first real happiness. That night Cecil walks the streets and drops asleep from exhaustion on a park bench. In the morning he reads of what his wife has done and hastens to her. There he finds that she sat up all night and also learns how greatly she loves him. Ernest has also learned the truth, he turns to Maysie with a show of decent feeling and tells her they shall be married at once.

A LEAF FROM THE PAST (Special—2 parts—May 21).—Henry Wilson, son of a jeweler, has a pal attachment for Madge Rice, a fascinating woman who afterward proves to be a society thief. Henry knows nothing of the woman's past. In the nick of time his distracted father persuades him to give up the girl. Madge, furious, waits for a chance to avenge herself. Later Henry meets Eve Devereaux, who lives with her uncle in the city. Unknown to Henry, Eve, too, has a secret in her past. Her husband was a criminal who was killed in escaping from the penitentiary. When Henry proposes marriage to Eve, the fear that a revelation of her secret might destroy her future causes her to remain quiet.

Henry and Eve start married life in unalloyed bliss. Meanwhile Madge meets with Dick Trent, another crook. Trent was with Eve's husband when he escaped from jail and knows that Eve is the widow of the dead criminal. Trent and Madge then decide to operate a double scheme of blackmail. Trent exacts "hush" money from Eve through surreptitious visits to her home. Madge, on the other hand, terrifies Henry by threatening to take the letters he had written to her unless he pays her what she demands. Each try to keep their secret. Eve and Henry live in a state of fear.

Madge and Trent then discover that valuable jewelry is being kept by Henry's father in the family home, concealed in a small safe in the study. They resolve to secure it after each has made one more trip to his and her victim. On the following day, Madge pays Henry a visit in the jewelry shop and exacts a large sum from him. Eve, in terror lest her next tribute to Trent cannot be paid, goes to Henry's office to ask him for money. When he is forced to refuse her, she exhibits such terror that his suspicions are aroused and he follows her home. Madge, through a former appointment, has proceeded also to th Wilson home to meet Trent and to effect the safe robbery. Eve is surprised by Trent and forced to open the safe at the point of a revolver. As Henry enters the house downstairs he is met by Madge, who attempts to detain him at the point of a pistol. Detectives who have followed arrive. As the officers struggle with Madge, Henry hears a terrified scream from above. He seizes Madge's revolver and hurries upstairs. He finds the study door locked; he smashes the door with a chair and enters to find Eve desperately hanging on to Trent's revolver. Trent leaps upon Henry just as Eve faints. A fight follows and detectives rush in just in time to see Henry save his own life by killing Trent. Madge is led away to jail. Eve, unable to keep on her mind the burden that has tortured her for a week, tells everything. Henry shows her where he has been equally to blame for not confiding with her about his own past.

LIFE'S LOTTERY (May 22).—Roy Bryant, son of Henry Bryant, a retired business man, spends his time and father's money in loboter palaces with actresses and their "hangers-on." He has become so dissolute that his father is obliged to limit his allowance. Edna Lane, a refined girl, is having a hard time to support herself by sewing. Her principal associates are Joy Porter, a crippled child who lives in the same tenement with her mother, another sweatshop worker. Upon leaving the tenement to return her week's sewing, Edna is implored by the child to bring her a flower. Edna promises that she will have her wish and visits a florist to buy a plant. As she is about to pay for it she discovers that she has lost her money.

Young Bryant, joy riding with a couple of actresses, has stopped at the floist to buy violets. He witnesses Edna's distress and relives it by offering to lend her money to pay for her purchase. She accepts and gives Bryant her name and address. He gives her a fictitious address in turn. Later Bryant thinks much of Edna and decides if possible to add her to his list of conquests. He visits her in her tenement home, but is not able to persuade her to travel the primrose path. Then Roy's father, tired of Roy's prodigality, decides to send him to Arizona where an old rancher has promised to "make a man of him."

After the boy's departure the old man is left with only the family butler for a companion. Walking through the park the father, who is afflicted with gout, leaves his cane beside a bench. He misses it, and berates the butler, who angrily "throws up" his job. The old man is left alone on the street. Meanwhile Edna's crippled friend has died; the mother has moved away and she is left friendless. She attempts to find Roy at the address he gave her, but discovers it is a vacant lot. On her way home she comes upon the old man and assists him home. He asks her to stay with him.

Roy, in the West, freed from bad influences, has proven that he is a real man. As time goes on he thinks of th girl of the tenement and discovers that he is in love. He writes her a letter proposing marriage, but it goes to the address from which she has moved. Finally his father, who has discovered the good qualities of the girl, decides she is just the one to be his son's wife and wires him to return at once, telling him that he has picked out the girl he shall marry. The boy returns, but is angry over his father's attempt to dictate. The father is obstinate, brings them together, and leaves them. Then for the first time they realize how acceptable father's choice really is and without telling him their secret inform him that he shall have his own way about the matter.

A COUNTRY GIRL (May 23).—Louise Forrest, a country girl, goes to a barn dance and there selects Edgar Manners as her partner. The crowd dance cotillions, quadrilles and other respectable dances, but eventually drift into the tango. Edgar cannot master it, but Louise pulls him through. During the dance Edgar and Louise come to the usual understanding and the consequence is, marriage. Louise has become tango crazed, but Edgar doesn't like it. However, to please his pretty wife he permits her to try and coach him in the dance. On one occasion they go to a very respectable dance hall and tango, but on returning home Edgar is still rebellious. One day a street organ is playing in front of the house. Louise looks out of the window and Bennie and a number of other tough kiddies are dancing the tango. That afternoon she receives a note inviting her to a dance. The place is an awful dive and when she gets in she is asked to dance with a "rough neck." He swings her around, upside down and inside out until she becomes frightened. Eventually she breaks loose and runs home. She has had enough of the tango and later as the husband whistles they enjoy a waltz.

IN A PERSIAN GARDEN (Two Parts—May 20).—Henry Van Zandt is in love with Betty Morrow. She repulses him. At a ball given in her honor, she is impressed by the playing of the young violinist and she asks him to call. The uncle, a hard-hearted and domineering man, insists that Betty announce her engagement to Henry Van Zandt. She refuses and when the violinist calls, the uncle orders him from the house.

Time progresses. The uncle tries hard to force the unpleasant marriage. Betty runs off with her musician and they are married. Furious and disappointed, the uncle disinherits his neice. Two years pass. The violinist and his wife eke out a living. Things go from bad to worse. At times, when all looks dark, he plays for her, "In a Persian Garden," which melody had first brought them together and won her love.

A little baby has come to Betty. One day she receives a telegram from her uncle, saying if she will leave her husband he will take her back. For her sake the husband urges her to do it. She laughs at him. They return to Betty's home town finally, and the violinist searches in vain for work. The baby is taken ill. To save the baby's life a specialist is needed. While the husband is searching for work the uncle, who has learned of Betty's return, calls and pleads with her to leave her husband and save her child's life. She is between two fires, mother love and her affection for her husband. At last her love for the baby grows steadily stronger and Betty writes time and again to her husband, but receives no answer. The uncle has torn the letters up.

One night a ball is given in Betty's honor. Van Zandt, strolling on the stoop, observes the young violinist, who is trudging past the house. Half drunk, the rejected suitor drags him in before the excited crowd. The violinist begins to play. Upstairs Betty, bending over her baby, is thinking of her husband. The familiar strains of "In a Persian Garden" float through the hall. She walks slowly down the stairs and into the arms of the player, while the astonished guests slowly realize what the tableau means.

MOTHER MICHAEL (May 24).—The charming little granddaughter of Mother Michael is deeply in love with the struggling poet. Mother Michael looks with disfavor upon their love making, but bestows the little warmth of her crabbed nature on Raton, her pet, a well-fed and sleek cat. The poet writes an ode to his lady love and as they live across the way, tosses it through the window. Unluckly it strikes Mother Michael and she awakens from her nap. The old lady sends her granddaughter to her room and when the poet calls, throws him from the house. The love-sick maiden gets an idea. Placing the beloved cat in a basket and by means of a rope stretched from window to window, she sends it across to the poet. Shortly afterwards Mother Michael discovers her loss and is frantic with grief. The old lady is glad to make a bargain with the poet, who claims as his reward for returning the cat the hand of the granddaughter.

FROM KANDY TO COLOMBO (May 24).—A beautiful scenic in which we travel from Kandy, by rail, through gorgeous forests and vegetations rich in color, over rice plantations, miles wide and through the most awe-inspiring gorges and ravines, until at last we arrive in the City of Colombo. The picture conveys the distant impression of a wonderful stereopticon view and the scenery is far beyond description.

STERLING

NEIGHBORS (May 21).—The comedy commences when Schlitz enters the living-room and prepares to play a game of cards. His wife, trying to get dinner, grows disgusted with her husband and they commence to quarrel and fight. They move to the window and are seen by neighbors; their fighting turns to love making. Mr. Schlitz invites Mr. Mulligan over to play cards. Mrs. Schlitz goes over to visit with Mrs. Mulligan.

The card game starts and Schlitz wins game after game. Then Mulligan discovers that he is being cheated and the battle starts. The two women observe their husbands fighting and they commence. There is a wild scramble, throwing of various articles and a chase—a chase which continues through hotels and alley-ways until at last the police come in with an attempt to stop the fight. But in the end Schlitz gets his needs with a water hose.

POWERS.

STOLEN GLORY (May 8).—Paul Devine, an unrecognized actor, and Richard Storm, a struggling playwright, each loves Jane Dare, an actress and woman of unusual emotional depth. While she respects Storm as a close friend, it is Devine she loves.

A theatrical manager makes the proposition to Devine that if he will secure a sufficiently strong play he will star him in it. The actor carries the news to Storm, who has just had his latest drama rejected. Storm gives his friend the rejected play to read. Disappointed in love and discouraged in his work, Storm strolls to the waterfront to contemplate his reverses. While there he is set upon and shanghaied on a tramp steamer. Devine is carried away with Storm's play, but he cannot find the author. He is led to believe that Storm has committed suicide.

Devine erases Storm's name from the title page and writes his own there in its stead. The play is produced with himself and Jane Dare in the title roles. It proves to be a success. Devine and Jane are married. Storm returns. He goes to Devine's theater and demands that credit, financial and artistic, be given him. Jane enters. Storm hides and is a witness of her love for Devine. After Jane leaves, Storm undergoes a change of mind. He tells Devine that for Jane's sake he can have the play. Storm goes away to oblivion.

THE PEARL OF THE SEA (May 22).—Myra Benson has two lovers, Pat Dalton, a hard working young fisherman, and Capt. Tyson, of the Fish Patrol. An order is issued forbidding the fisherman from using seines. Myra's father, being poor, breaks the law and is fined $100. His sboat is confiscated. Capt. Dyson offers to pay the fine if Myra will marry him. She refuses. She loves Pat. Pat buys a new boat, secures a permit for "Myra Benson," pays old Benson's fine and gives him the new craft and license. A month later the lovers are married and sail away on a pale pink sea as the picture fades.

NESTOR

HIS STRENUOUS HONEYMOON (May 8).—Gentleman Jack is a general favorite at the summer hotel—until the arrival of Eddie and his new and fickle wife. Each time Eddie looks at his wife and conceives her smiling at another man he immediately sees visions of a tragedy. Affairs go on until one day Eddie sees his wife smile at Gentleman Jack, who occupies the apartment across the hall. He leaves for work and as he goes along he thinks. Then he turns around and hotfoots it to his wife.

In the meantime the young wife has locked herself out of her apartment and can't find the janitor. Gentleman Jack obligingly offers her the use of his apartment while he finds the janitor. An old maid sees the young wife enter Jack's room. When Eddie arrives he is met by the old maid. "Your wife, sir," she whispers, "is in that room." Presto, all his suspicions are verified. Eddie gets his gun and goes after his imaginary rival. Jack does not stop to explain matters. After a half dozen bullets have sung their little song in his ear he concludes to move on down the street. Mutual explanations are exchanged and Eddie goes on beating his wife, even more violently than before.

THE MAN WITHIN (May 20).—A man is a fugitive from the law. A reward of $2,000 is offered for his capture. A large posse is on his trail. Weary, hungry and haunted, the refugee is slowly but surely being hemmed in. His capture is only a matter of seconds when he staggers up to a hut. He is confronted by a girl. He appeals to her for aid. She sends him inside the hut and when the members of the posse ride up, she misdirects it as to the direction the fugitive took.

The criminal feels a great dog-gratitude to the girl for his deliverance and giving her a whistle, he tells her to blow it three times if she ever needs him. The girl's father is the cashier for a mining company. One day in a moment of foolishness he gambles the payroll money away. He attempts to take his life to wipe out his dishonor, but his daughter deters him. She goes to the appointed place and the fugitive comes to her in response to the signal. She explains her father's predicament to him. He weighs the matter carefully and then tells her that he will save her parent from the anger of the miners. Against her will, he compels the girl to lead him, at the point of his gun, to the sheriff. She receives the $2,000 reward and saves her father.

COULD YOU BLAME HER (May 22).—Bob Brown plans to buy his wife a birthday present. He decides upon a gown of the prevailing mode, and selects a modiste for the task. A model is physically fitted to Mrs. Bob's measurements is advertised for. Simultaneously Mrs. Bob decides that she needs a new gown and fate leads her to the same purveyor of things feminine that has been selected by hubby. She accepts the offer to become a temporary model and incidentally learns that "Mr. Brown" is having a gown made for his wife as a birthday surprise. Hubby is summoned for his first inspection of the finished gown as displayed on the living model. He is delayed and wife seeks to turn the tables by flitting to his office arrayed in her new finery. The modiste notifies the police that the gown has been stolen. Mrs. Bob is arrested and lodged in a cell. She is ultimately rescued by hubby. The moral is, "Don't try to fool your wife."

FRONTIER.

JOHNNIE FROM JONESBORO (May 21).—Old man Jones has a grocery store. His son, Johnnie, works for him. In delivering groceries, Johnnie meets and falls in love with Mrs. Jones, a widow. May, the widow's daughter, goes to the grocery store and meets old man Jones, and the two are soon in love with each other. Johnnie urges the widow to elope. She is afraid of her daughter. The old man Jones wants to elope with May, but he, too, is afraid of his son. A plot is arranged. Old man Jones comes to the widow's house in disguise. The widow, thinking it is Johnnie, comes out and the two drive off. Johnnie then arrives, and May, thinking it is the old man, steals out and they hurry off to the minister's. Old man Jones and the widow arrive at the ministers and are soon married. Then Johnnie and May arrive, and another speedy ceremony is performed. All parties now feeling safe, the two women remove their veils, and the discovery is made that the wrong couples have been married. However, they decide to let it go as it is.

THE SHERIFF'S STORY (May 23).—After thirty years, Edythe returns with some Eastern friends to the Western town in which she was born. In touring about the country they meet an eccentric old character. He tells the following story: "Thirty years ago he was sheriff of that country. He was engaged to one of the belles of that region. Their wedding date had been announced. A notorious bandit had long terrorized the country, and one day he was caught. He proved to be the sheriff's own brother. The sheriff, holding the posse at bay, allowed him to escape. That night he received a letter. It was from his brother, thanking him, and adding that Edythe had left with him, and that they would not return. Since that night, added the Westerner, "All he has done is to keep looking over and over again at the girl's picture."

The story finished, the machine is about to drive on, when Edythe stops them. She goes over to the old sheriff, and recognizes in the old delapidated photo herself. Willis is finally brought to realize that his girl has at last returned to him.

UNIVERSAL IKE.

UNIVERSAL IKE IN PURSUIT OF THE EATS (May 19).—The even tenor of Universal Ike's life is interrupted when, by the will of a dead relative, he is left a hotel in Alkali City. Thus the cowboy becomes a landed proprietor. However, wealth does not always bring happiness. A circus is holding forth in Alkali City. Mr. and Mrs. Fourpaw, the lion trainer and the tatooed woman, abandon the sawdust and take an elephant with them as security for their back salary. They take up their abode at Ike's hotel. Later, they decamped, leaving the elephant on Ike's hands, but taking his pet donkey. Not alone did the elephant threaten to eat Ike out of house and home, but he could not bear to lose his donkey. He mounted the elephant and set off in pursuit. In the meantime the circus people had missed the elephant and set off to follow its footprints. Ike was found in possession and the revenge they took was horrible. To top it off, they chased Ike and his wife into the lion's cage.

THE DANCING CRAZE (May 19).—Gladys Longacre, the beautiful companion of Prunella Long, the long, lean, lanky and homely tango teacher, gives out Prunella tickets, advertising her dancing classes. She gives them to several men and they, thinking that Gladys is the teacher, decide to join the school. They call and Prunella starts to teach the first. Gladys collects the money and then turns them over to Prunella. They are startled and though angry are forced to go through with it. Big Bill finally takes Gladys bodily and forces her to dance with him. A wild scramble results. The police are called. Purnella blames Gladys, but when that lady shows her the money and divides she is satisfied.

THE MASHERS (May 19).—The justice's daughter is molested by the mashers as she walks in the street. On returning home she tells her father. He sends the constable after them. She goes out again and the mashers again speak to her. The constable again arrests them. The justice fines them ten dollars apiece. The third masher that talks to her is beaten up by the constable's assistant. One of the mashers then disguises as a woman and induces the constable to flirt with him. They imagine they have the laugh on him, but they are again arrested. They are put in jail this time and set to work shoveling snow.

THEIR NEW LODGER (May 24).—Vivian and her ma decide to take in boarders. Charlie, a tramp, is sleeping in the field. A lunatic being chased by guards throws away his valise. Charlie opens it and finds a new suit of clothes, which he dons. He finds a card in the pocket belonging to the

THE EXPOSURE OF THE Delaware Whipping Post

A Remarkable 3 Reel Drama

A defense of the lash as a crime preventive and a defiance to the Sentimentalists who would abolish it. The State of Delaware is the only State in the Union that whips its criminals at public whipping posts, and also pilliories them.

It has done this ever since it became a State. There have been periodical waves of agitation throughout the Nation for the abolition of these forms of punishment. The most violent wave of this kind culminated recently in a demand before Congress for Federal action compelling Delaware to discontinue its whipping post.

Very attractive line of advertising matter. One, three and six sheets; heralds, photos, slides, etc. Don't delay to procure this money-making feature. Ready for immediate shipment.

Baron de Gozac and decides to impersonate him. He arrives at Vivian's house and decides to take a room there. When Vivian and her ma learn that he is a Baron they both fall in love with him. There is a battle between mother and daughter as to which will win their illustrious guest. Later ma concocts a scheme to win Charlie. She writes a letter telling a man she has $20,000 to invest. Charlie reads the letter and immediately transfers his affection to ma. Meanwhile the guards are looking for the lunatic Baron. The lunatic reads the sign, "Boarders Wanted," and also takes a room with Vivian and her ma. The two men are introduced and each claims to be the Baron. Then comes trouble for all. Charlie is captured in mistake for the lunatic. When released he vows never to impersonate a Baron again.

IMP

VASCO THE VAMPIRE (May 7).—Si Sleuthound, a handsome young detective, has gained so much in the way of rewards that he retires to raise roses. The criminal bands are pleased, but thrown into a panic when they are warned to flee, as Giant Archis, the old detective, is about to trap them all. In a panic, they apply to the aged King of Crooks, who tells them Vasco, the mysterious Vampire, is the only one who can save them. Vasco is summoned. Vasco hypnotizes the sleuth and carries him to the den. The sleuth's daughter appeals to Sleuthound. Won by her beauty, he swears to save her father and capture Vasco.

Then follows many exciting incidents. For weeks Sleuthound seeks Vasco in vain. His one clue is that Vasco frequents the opera in disguise. Sleuthound visits the opera disguised as Salome, the dancer. Vasco is there as a handsomely gowned woman in the box. There is a meeting and a fight. Vasco escapes, but the young detective wounds him and makes him prisoner in the end. Vasco is sent back to a foreign land, where he is disgraced.

LOVE AND A LOTTERY TICKET (May 21).—Billy and Leah, Americans on a holiday, stop at the same hotel in Berlin. Billy receives word that the slump in lumber has almost ruined him. About the same time Leah is notified that her bank has failed. Both are notified that they must pay their bills at the hotel and get out within three days.

Billy spends his last mark on a lottery ticket, the prize of which is fifty thousand dollars. He then places an ad in the paper announcing that he is a young man with expectations of $50,000 and that he desires to meet a young lady of means with matrimonial intentions. However, prior to this Billy and Leah have seen each other and fallen in love at first sight. Leah reads the advertisement and decides to appear on the appointed spot. But she is not the only one present. German women of all ages are looking for a good thing. Billy arrives, looks the women over and is about to give up when his eye lights on Leah. Both believing the other has money, they arrange to marry immediately. They taxi to the church, but haven't enough money to pay the driver off. Each is forced to confess to their financial condition. The driver calls a policeman. The pair are about to be carted to jail when a newsboy rushes past, announcing the winning number of the lottery ticket Billy has won.

Then Billy remembers that he left the ticket on the seat where he and Leah met. He rushes back and is overwhelmed by the waiting ladies. Fortunately though, he is able to find the lottery ticket and through the assistance of the policeman, he escapes with Leah to be married after all, while twelve broken hearts decide to search other fields for useful husbands.

VICTOR.

AS FATE WILLED (Two parts—May 4).—Richard Lee, young, and wealthy, is a good "catch." Inez Carringford, petted and pampered, "sets her cap" for him. Marion Stearns, daughter of an ex-convict, meets Richard and he falls in love with her. Marion, loving Richard, but fearing exposure of her father's past, flees. Richard is unable to find her. Inez, aided by her mother, induces Richard to take her for an automobile ride. On the ride Inez compromises Lee. To save the girl's reputation, Richard asks her to marry him.

The engagement is announced in the newspapers. Marion's father sees it and decides to rob Richard's home while the latter is attending a ball given by Mrs. Carringford. Marion's father forces her to be his accomplice in the burglary. Richard, in love with Marion, forgets to go to the ball. As he remembers his first meeting with her, Marion is compelled by her father to enter the house. Richard is aroused from his dreaming by the advent of the burglar. He lies in wait, seizes Marion and tears away her mask. She begs for mercy. Richard clasps her in his arms and tells her of his love.

Meanwhile, alarmed at Richard's failure to attend the ball, Inez sends her father in search of him. He sees the forms of Richard and Marion, clasped in each other's arms, silhouetted on the window shade. He summons Inez. In a rage, Inez takes off her engagement ring and gives it to Richard. Richard works out the solution of his dilemma when Marion tries to flee from the house, by capturing her and forcing the discarded engagement ring upon her finger.

THE CALL BACK (May 18).—Jack Saunders has more than his share of exuberance. Strong, healthy and handsome, he imagines his mastery extends over the human as well as the animal world. He approaches Ethel, his sweetheart, in the same spirit that he manages his horses and dogs. She calls him a brute; they quarrel. Jack goes to Chicago and falls in with evil companions. One night Sloan, a crook and one of his companions, holds up and robs Henry Forbes. While the police are chasing the crook, he jumps again at Jack Saunders in the street and drops the stolen pocketbook. Jack picks it up and in his attempt to elude the police, he enters an open window in the residence of Forbes.

Mrs. Forbes enters and sits down at the feet of the man she believes to be her husband, for the lights are low. An instant later Forbes arrives and finds his wife in this compromising position. Jack's position, however, undergoes an immediate change when Mr. Forbes gets a good look at his face. Ethel is a niece of Mrs. Forbes and has written to her that she still loves Jack and hopes that some day he will return to her. Jack's picture was enclosed in the letter. Mutual explanations follow, with the final result that the kindly Mr. Forbes furnishes Jack with a check with which to speed him westward to the woman he loves and who is waiting for him.

BROKEN VOWS (Two parts—April 27).—Through all the years of their childhood they had been the best of friends, this boy and girl. Their parents were neighbors—the girls father is a minister. Time went on and as the children developed into manhood and womanhood, they loved and became engaged. About this time the young man came into possession of a large fortune.

An actress, a cousin of the young man, came for a visit to his father's house. She was of the world, with a full knowledge of how to enchant the youth. He became fascinated with her. While the actress wearied of the hum-drum surroundings and longed to get back to the excitement of the stage, she learned that the boy had become rich and decided to win and marry him. By her arts she won him, and he forgot all about the little girl who had loved him through the years.

The wedding arrangements are made and the minister, the cast-off girl's father, is sent for. But the ceremony has hardly commenced in the little village church when the girl, the bride that was to be, pushes her way through the crowd to the altar clothed in her wedding finery. Heartbroken, she accuses the boy of his infidelity, and then leaves. Time passes and she decided to enter a convent to find rest and solace from sorrow. But the man, like many of his kind, forgets.

JOKER

THE BUCKET SHARPERS (May 2).—They are brokers all the time and broke most of the time. Their only treasures are frankfurters and limburger cheese. Any time they lose the combination to the safe, they starve to death. Billy, the kid, now a respectable policeman, gives the brokers $500 to invest for him. They lock the money up with the limburger. A burglar enters and steals the safe. Mike pursues the burglar and regains the money.

However, he falls an easy victim to a girl's seducing charms. She relieves him of the major portion of his money. Jake gets the rest of the roll. Returning to their office the two unhappy men find Billy, the kid, awaiting them with blood in his eye. Providence, however, saves them from the policeman's fury. Fanny decides that she will invest her ill-got cash in stock and for this purpose she enters the office of Mike and Jake. The policeman's rage, Mike's chagrin and Jake's shame are all centered upon poor Fanny.

ROLL YOUR PEANUT (May 6).—Green was dignified. He was (before election) an alderman and a light in his community. Mistakes, however, happen in the best of regulated families. Green's undoing commenced when he became a party to a bet with a friend. "If Bryan loses," swore Green, "I'll roll a peanut every time you ask me." Bryan lost and Green began rolling it up in the street. He was arrested. When released he rolled the peanut out of the police station.

About this time his friends concluded that Green had paid his bet. They found him in the street in front of the house rolling his peanut. "Good boy!" they cried, "the bet is off." But Green continued to roll the peanut. They expostulated with him. They shook him, but he never ceased to roll the peanut. He had become what he rolled—a nut.

THEIR VACATION (May 20).—It happened at a seaside hotel frequented by the idle rich. Ernest's arrival caused quite a sensation among the marriageable girls because he was the pink of fashion. Also the arrival of Louise caused no less a sensation among the men; judging from her haughty manners and aristocratic bearing it was fair to suppose that she likewise was one of the inordinately rich. Louise and Ernest paired off as a matter of course. She awed him with the few light remarks she let fall concerning her social position. But he, not to be outdone, had a telegram sent to himself supposed to come from an uncle, leaving him a million. But at the end of the week they part: Ernest to return his clothes back to the store where he rented them and Louise her silks and satins to the friend who owned them. Louise went back to her job of waitress and Ernest to his clerk's desk. And thus it might have ended had not Ernest dropped into a chop house for lunch. Louise faced him with a soup plate. They had deceived each other once, but they never could again, so they got married.

MIKE SEARCHES FOR HIS LONG LOST BROTHER (May 23).—To settle an inheritance, Mike goes West in search of his long lost brother, Jake. Arriving in a frontier town, Mike makes an impression on Keyboard Annie, the telegraph operator. On the other hand, he gets in bad with the cowboys. The news is flashed through the town that Sure Shot Schultz, bandit, is in the vicinity. Mike is mistaken for the bandit; every one he meets throws up their hands and insists upon being robbed. Later, Mike is captured by the outlaw himself. He forces Mike to rob the stage, unaware that Mike's and Jake's inheritance is aboard, guarded by their mother.

But Mike escapes without finishing the job. Schultz moves to complete it, only to find that he is stealing his own money, for Schultz and the long-lost brother are one and the same person. There is a pathetic reunion between mother and son. Mike arrives in the village and finds out that he held up the stage carrying his own money. The boys are about to lynch him when Annie goes for aid. The family is reunited, the inheritance saved and Mike is furnished with a wife in the person of Keyboard Annie.

BISON.

THE TRIUMPH OF MIND (Three parts—May 23).—The hinge of the story is a crippled old lady, Mrs. Trill, who is an angel of the alley. The power of her mind cures a child's illness and finds a lost purse. The neighbors are impressed. Among them Fannie. Later, Fannie's husband, Ben, enacted by Mr. Smalley, loses his job in the Bell Mills, has a tilt with one of the owners, draws a gun and is thrown out of the place, leaving the gun behind. This is pocketed by Daily, another owner. Ben's wife tries to instil faith into him, but the saloon seems to bring him more cheer.

Daily, one of the owners, is blackmailed by a street girl, who has discovered his relations with Daisy, a wayward girl. Daily, his resources drained, tries to rob the office safe. He is discovered by his partner, who kills him with Ben's gun. Daily escapes undiscovered to his hotel. Ben, drunk, takes the wrong road home and is caught at the mills as the murder of Earle is discovered. Circumstantial evidence condemns him and he is sentenced to be hung.

Fannie appeals to Mrs. Trill and together they visit Ben's young lawyer. He scoffs at the idea of psychic phenomena as evidence. Mrs. Trill, in directing him to the death-bed of his sister whom Daily has ruined, convinces him of her power and sets about to convict Daily. Visions of the hangman's noose, helped along by mental suggestion, annoy the murderer and at last, when Mrs. Trill tells of her vision in which she sees Daily committing the crime, the guilty man convicts himself. The final scene shows Ben free, believing at last that "Faith is victory."

A MAN, A GIRL AND ANOTHER (April 30).—In the present story, a miner, a man of sterling heart, but crude manners, wins the love, but not the admiration of Suzan, his partner's daughter. The girl plights herself to the young miner, yet she yearns for the things that will never be his. She dreams of the city, the bright lights and the music.

One day a young woman and her fiance come to the retreat. The man is struck by the freshness of Suzan. He becomes acquainted with her and paints to her those fake pictures of city life which have deluded so many.

The outcome of it all is that she agrees to elope with him. All preparations are made when the young miner intercepts the eloping couple. He tells the city man to go his way. He gives the command in such a tone that the fellow obeys. Then he takes the girl by the arm and tells her they are going to get married. They go and get married. It is the harsh action needed to win her respect.

AURORA OF THE NORTH (Two parts—May 7).—The story opens when a party of Indian trappers bring the news to the fur trader that a stranger, a white man, is hunting in their territory. Soon afterward the stranger, unaware that he is transgressing the traditional rights of the trader, is captured and brought to the post.

Aurora, the trader's motherless daughter, has been raised to womanhood at the post and has associated with few people other than redskins. At her first meeting with the stranger she is deeply impressed. Their acquaintance soon ripens into love. The trader does not know exactly what to do with the poacher, and so holds him at the post.

The stranger attempts to obtain a gun, some matches and a knife, that he may leave. His attempts are unsuccessful.

The trader finally decides that the stranger's punishment shall consist of being turned out in the trackless forest without food or weapons. Aurora learns of her father's designs. To save the stranger she sparits a gun, knife and matches and gives them to the stranger. He escapes into the forest. He sprains his ankle, however, and is taken prisoner by the trader's Indians.

"Tell me who gave you the rifle and I'll send you safe on your journey," offers the trader. But the stranger declares that he will submit to death before divulging the secret. To save his mistress, Saskatche, a young Indian, declares that he gave the stranger the rifle. When the trader flies at him in an angry rage, Aurora confesses and that her action was prompeted by love for the young trapper.

The anger of the old trader is mellowed by his love for his daughter. His mind reverts to the romantic days of his own youth and he ceases to be the despot. He becomes a father. He forgives the stranger and his daughter and consents to their marriage.

THE FOX (2 parts—May 21).—Richard Stedman, an aged pioneer and trapper, dies, leaving the little money he has saved during his life to his three children, John, Dick and Anna. While John and Anna are mourning the loss of their parent, Dick sneaks away with the small amount of money and squanders it over a gambling table. This undignified act is characteristic of his whole life. He is an unworthy son. A year elapses and during this time John has lost track of his brother, Dick. He is now a trusted member of the mounted police. John's partner in his work is called Fredericks, an admirer of Anna.

The country is over-run with a band of outlaws led by a desperado known to the police as the Fox. The evidences of his crime show the outlaw to be a criminal of the most unscrupulous type; but plan as they may to trap him, he always escapes. Finally, John comes to the conclusion that there is a traitor among the members of the mounted police who keeps the Fox informed as to their plans. John investigates and learns that it is his companion, Fredericks, who is in league with the bandit. By watching Fredericks he locates the Fox and his band.

The outlaws are surrounded and such a battle ensues as can take place only between fighters possessing a thorough knowledge of wood craft. The majority of the members of the band are either killed or taken prisoners and only the Fox escapes, with John hot on his trail. When the battle is over Fredericks is dishononably discharged from the service. In the meantime while Anna is anxiously awaiting the return of John, she has a visitor. It is the Fox, whom she finds to be no other than her brother, Dick. He appeals to her sisterly love and she hides him in the loft of the house an instant before John enters. John hears a noise overhead and upon investigating sees the Fox escaping over the roof. He gives chase and a moment before Anna catches up with him he fires at the fleeting figure. His aim is good and the Fox lies dead at his feet. As he surveys his work Anna runs up. "It's your brother Dick!" She cries. His victory has turned to defeat.

THE WOMAN IN BLACK (May 24).—Three cliques of people, each unknown to the other, are making plans at their respective headquarters and their eyes are all turned to a common point. Jack Darrow, operative of a private detective agency, and his sides are planning a crusade against a band of clairvoyant fakirs. The Jeffersons are to give a ball masque, introducing their daughter, Hope, to their social set. It is rumored that she will wear the Pompador diamond necklace recently purchased by her father.

In another part of the city Prof. M. Byrd, an alleged clairvoyant, is planning to attend the ball and steal the jewel. Through Crawley, his confederate, Byrd procures an invitation for himself and lady. Mildred, a dupe of his, offers her services in stealing the necklace. Byrd plans to attend the ball disguised as Mephisto. At the proper time Mildred is bring out the necklace and pass it to a confederate. However, on the evening of the ball there is a second guest disguised as Mephisto—no other than Darrow, the detective. The lights in the ballroom go out. There is a few moments' confusion and when the hall is again illuminated, the diamond necklace is gone. It is soon recovered, however. Darrow is waiting for Byrd in the conservatory and when he arrives he is overpowered and placed under arrest. Mildred's liberation comes swift and completely when she turns back the lapel of her jacket and shows her badge. She is not only Darrow's assistant but his sweetheart as well.

LOST—A UNION SUIT (May 10).—Mab, hastening to dress, dons a union suit that has begun to unravel and doesn't take the time to repair it. Tom, a new doctor in town, sees Mab at a dance, but, as no one is present to introduce them, he leaves without knowing the woman he has fallen in love with. But at the dance, Tom, noticing the piece of yarn that lies across Mab's shoulder thinking to do her a service, starts to lift it off. His attention attracted by a friend, he leaves the room, winding up the yarn. Thus Mab loses her union suit, but Tom returns it that night when he's called to attend her for a cold contracted at the dance.

THE MOHAMMEDAN CONSPIRACY (Two parts—May 12).—Lord Trevor and Nan, his ward, England's famous diplomatic agents, receive word that there is something wrong going on in Egypt, but that the English government has been unable to learn anything tangible. Abdul, Trevor's faithful follower, is sent to investigate, and after six months had made considerable headway, but through an unfortunate discovery of his identity his usefulness is lost. Nan determines to go in disguise as an Arab boy. So arrayed she runs a little fruit stand in the streets of Cairo. She succeeds in winning the confidence of the natives, and is taken in as a member of the conspiracy where she learns to her horror that the plan is to poison the food supply of the English and other foreigners by skillfully injecting germs of various deadly diseases. These germs are to be confided to water carriers, provision dealers and other humble servants, the idea being on a certain designated day to strike a deadly blow at all the English. Nan is able to foil the plot, but her identity is detected and she is in danger of losing her life, being only saved by the bravery and resourcefulness of the faithful Abdul. The two then destroy all the bottles of disease germs, and congratulate each other upon having foiled "The Mohammedan Conspiracy."

THE COURTING OF PRUDENCE (May 19).—Ezra Benton, a farmer, by hard work and severe economy, has become moderately prosperous. His wife died years before the opening of this story. Benton now lives with his daughter, Prudence. It is Benton's ambition to marry Prudence to his wealthy neighbor, Zekiel Hendricks, who is fifty years of age and a widower. But Prudence is in love with Larry Neil, an industrious young man, and a hired man of her father's.

Benton encourages Hendricks to call upon Prudence. He leaves the widower and his daughter together before the firelight and slips away to bed. The master of hearts (Cupid) does get in a good evening's work, but not until old Hendricks has gone home and Neil has taken his place on the settee beside Prudence.

Benton is sleeping soundly when a cat stirs up a rumpus. Benton makes his way downstairs to stop the disturbance and on his way back he passes the door to the sitting-room; it is closed; curiosity masters him. He stoops and peers through the keyhole. Benton is delighted, for cuddled close, their faces toward the fire, their backs toward him, sit Prudence and a man whom he believes to be Hendricks. Larry turns his profile toward the door, and Benton recognizes his farmhand. An hour later Larry is walking a lonely road on his way to the nearest village, and Prudence is gazing out into the moonlight night sobbing a prayer asking God to send back to her the man she loves. Wearied by weeks of harassing, Prudence consents to marry Hendricks. Larry hears of the forthcoming marriage and tells his troubles to the kindly squire, who is justice of the peace, and the good man promises to help him. With the aid of the squire and his wife and two boy friends, Larry concocts a bold plan to thwart the proposed marriage.

It is the night of the wedding. The squire is already pronouncing the words that are to make Prudence and Hendricks man and wife. There is a sudden commotion at the doorway. Larry rushes through the crowd and before anyone can stop him has snatched the bride from the bridegroom and hurries her out of the house. Hendricks and Benton rush out to the road to see a man and woman, mounted on a black horse, dashing away in the moonlight. They mount horses and follow, when they have overtaken the fugitives they find they have followed Larry's boy friends, one of them disguised as Prudence.

In the meantime, Larry and Prudence, who didn't run away at all, but only stepped around the corner of the house, come from their hiding place, explain the trick to the good humored guests and are married by the old squire.

When Benton returns and learns of the trick he is thrown into a frenzy. Slowly the muscles of his face relax as he is glaring at his daughter, for a wonderful change is going on within him. The scene fades. In its place is a dying mother and a little girl. The mother, with a great effort, places one arm about her husband's neck and with the other draws her child nearer. She speaks to her husband, "Don't make her a slave to money, Ezra. Give her heart a chance. Love is greater and bigger than all the money in the world." And the mother dies. Benton draws Prudence to him and kisses her. A miracle has come into his life.

AMERICAN.

FOOTPRINTS OF MOZART (Two Parts—May 18).—Hopelessly, Stanton works with compositions returned manuscripts together with his sweetheart's ring, which Ruth's aristocratic mother forced her to surrender, crushes out his ambitions. An aged neighbor enters, seared with evidences of life's struggle and speaks: "Tell me not in mournful numbers, Life is but an empty dream ..."

The old man's tale of being saved by Stanton's music awakens Stanton to hope and courage and saves his life. Alone, Stanton gazes at the silent features in the bust of Mozart and recalls the tragedy of his world's master of 624 operas, masses, etc. Mozart, in dying hours, writes the "Requiem" by special order, praying that it bring fame and money. Mozart sings this "Requiem" with his dying breath and passes away and is buried in an unknown grave in the Potter's Field.

"Lives of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime," Stanton sees Mozart's feeble wife laying a tiny wreath at the foot of the cross and believes that heaven's choir is singing the "Gloria" chorus beside the brokenhearted wife. He gazes at the "Gloria" chorus, recalls the one which sang it as all choirs have done, takes courage, and with heart opens his window as of old and plays his violin with all his soul. Outside the aged neighbor is waiting for these tones. "A stranger, passing, stops, is charmed; finds the originator of the marvelous music, discovers in the discarded mss. that for which he seeks, and through him fortune smiles and Stanton looks up: "With a heart for any fate."

Ruth turns from her mother, declares she shall starve with Stanton rather than turn from him. She goes to him, declares her purpose. Stanton puts the half-eaten loaf of bread aside, shows Ruth money and his turning tide. Stanton clasps the girl to his breast. The old man looks in, smiles his blessing as he sees Ruth take the tiny dried wreath of leaves from Mozart's picture and lay it on the brow of her lover.

BEYOND THE CITY (May 20).—John Doran, a rugged mountaineer, has an only child, June. She has given her heart to a young mountaineer known as "Cliff." They have the consent of her father, who tells Cliff to "come for her when the gentle hand of time has ripened their love."

Jack Rance, of the city, an unscrupulous villain, visits the neighborhood of John Doran. He meets June and is attracted by her. June is taken by the manners of the city gentleman. They meet clandestinely. He persuades her to leave her home and go with him to the city. June writes a letter to her old father and leaves with Rance. Rance, on arriving in the city, takes June to a house of the underworld. Here the vice of the underworld opens her eyes and she realizes what a man this Rance is. By the help of a woman, she escapes the same evening and starts for home.

June arrives home and sees through the window her father seated by the table reading his Bible. She hesitates, knocks and patiently waits until the loving arms of her aged father draw her back into the modest cabin. Cliff, through the window, can see June clasped in the arms of her father. He passes out into the night, but there is a happy smile on his face.

THE MAN IN THE COUCH (May 17).—Ronald, the villain, upon proposing to Mabel and receiving no encouragement, leaves, vowing to discover his hated rival. He conceals himself in a folding couch and has himself delivered to Mabel, so that he may learn who is the object of her affections. In due course he arrives at Mabel's and raising the lid, finds Mabel entertaining the one man.

Jack, during his visit, smokes many cigarettes and accidentally sets fire to the couch. To assure Mabel there is no cause for fear, he throws couch, including Ronald, out of the window. It goes through a roof landing in an anarchists' den, who are in league with Ronald. They in turn throw it through the window and it lands in a police station, starting a fire on each visit, calling out the fire department and police. Eventually all is calmed, but poor Ronald is much upset and convinced that it is better not to force oneself where they are not wanted.

RELIANCE

OUR MUTUAL GIRL (No. 17—May 11).—Walking on the morning of the day after her rescue of the burglar's sister from an East Side dive, Margaret, "Our Mutual Girl," was confronted by the problem of what to do with the waif whom she had brought home. The situation became more complex when Margaret's aunt entered. "Who is the girl and what is she doing here?" asked the aunt. "Get her out of my house at once."

But "Our Mutual Girl" stood firm in her defence of the girl she had befriended. The outcome of the whole thing was that Margaret and her aunt took the little outcast down to one of the big department stores and secured her a good position. As the elevator shot upwards with its human freight "Our Mutual Girl" showed considerable excitement for it was her first ride in an elevator and the sensation was entirely new to her.

On reaching her aunt's house "Our Mutual Girl" became very homesick for the little old farm house in the hills. So she decided to steal away and, leaving a note, took a train for the little country town from which she came. On the train a nice appearing young man seemed familiar to her, but neither spoke. "Our Mutual Girl" was met at the station by her mother. Then she found that the young man of the train was an old sweetheart of hers who had been living in the city. "Our Mutual Girl" went straight to the farm and renewed her acquaintance with all her dumb friends. The horses, cows, kittens, chickens, cats, pigs and pigeons were all glad to see her. That evening "Our Mutual Girl's" old sweetheart came to call. The reunion was pleasant. As the sun set "Margaret" and her sweetheart were seen, silhouetted in embrace against the evening sky.

THE GIRL IN THE SHACK (May 15).—Jim, a miner in a frontier town, gets mixed up in a saloon brawl while drunk and wounds a man. He makes his escape and, after a long chase, manages to evade the sheriff and his posse. He travels some distance on foot and finally, tired and hungry, comes to a little shack. He knocks on the door and an uncouth frontier girl answers. The girl, Jenny, hospitably invites him in and gives him coffee and food. Then, while she sits across the table from him and watches him eat, the two strike up a pleasant, easy-going friendship, as people do in frontier communities. Jim has completely forgotten his troubles when the sound of approaching horses brings him in terror to his feet. He looks out of the window and sees the sheriff at hand. The girl, dazed and frightened, does not know what to make of his actions and stands stupidly by while Jim hides himself behind an old curtain that is hanging on the wall. The sheriff enters, greets Jenny, whom he knows, and asks her if she has seen the fugitive. Jenny, still dazed, answers "No." As she is a good and trustworthy girl, the sheriff delays no longer. He and the posse ride off.

Jim, rather crestfallen, comes forth from his hiding place. He starts for the door, then turns and shame-facedly offers Jenny his hand. Jenny turns away and says, "I'm not used to shaking hands with fugitives from the law." Jim goes out the door, but on the outside he stops. He has decided that it is very important that he stand right with the girl in the shack. He hesitates but a moment and then, putting both hands to his mouth, he calls aloud after the departing sheriff. The posse wheel their horses about and come back. Jenny, who has watched them from the doorway, goes up to Jim and offers him her hand. He holds it solemnly for a moment, and then goes away with the sheriff. It is some time later. Jim, who only wounded his man, is turned out of jail after a moderate sentence. He rides back to the shack and finds Jenny sitting in the doorway. He asks her if she has waited for him and she says "Yes."

THE HUMAN BLOODHOUND (Four Parts).—Bill, Tom and Tickey Childs, two brothers and a young sister, are living on a large tract of timberland to improve it. The land is the property of the younger brother, Tom, who takes his business away from the hands of a scheming lawyer, who designs to defraud him of his property. The lawyer has a friend noted as a grafter. The grafter's daughter, Kate, overhears her father accused of being a notorious grafter. She is horror stricken. The father is threatened with prison for his nefarious dealings.

Failing to secure money to cover his misdeeds, Kate is persuaded by him and the scheming lawyer to go to the woods and induce Tom and his younger sister to come to the city. She does not realize that her father and the lawyer mean to trick Tom. Brother Bill does not like the idea of their going to the big city, but Kate promises to shield and protect the little sister. Time passes on and not a word is heard from either side. The grafter sees that all the letters are intercepted. Bill goes to the big city only to find that his brother Tom is leading the pace that kills; gambling and drinking. He finds his little sister in a cabaret. Tom is kept drinking at the big city club, by the grafter's friends. He is invited to become one of its members. He thinks he is signing a membership certificate, but they change the papers and he signs away his entire timber land.

Kater overhears her father's conversation with the scheming lawyer, when he tells him what he has done and that he will get his share of the money. She realizes that she is the cause of Tom signing away his property and immediately starts to assist him in recovering it. She confesses to Tom the unintentional wrongs she has done him, which caused the loss of his timberland. Tom is very much infatuated with Kate and asks her to marry him. She denounces the grafters and begs Tom to take her to the log cabin, as his wife. Kate, the sister, and both brothers arrive at the log cabin and are immediately pursued by the scheming lawyer and his followers, who claim the timberland. Tom drives them off. During the night, forest fires start, and in trying to fight the flames, Tom falls into a blazing bear pit. Bill jumps in to save him and they both have to struggle for their lives. The forest fires are creeping all over the land and here you see one of the greatest blazing fires ever conceived in a moving picture. Kate and the little sister save them.

When they arrive at the cabin they are thrown off their land by the scheming lawyer. Bill calls the lawyer a human wolf and swears he will be the human bloodhound to track him to his last lair. He succeeds in securing considerable evidence against the lawyer. The lawyer feeling safe in his possession of the property decides to go to the city. Bill tracks him to the hill-top. They fight over the rocks and cliff. As Bill is about to throw the lawyer over the cliff, the little sister arrives just in time to prevent him from committing murder. Bill drags the lawyer to the court house and there, with the evidence he has gathered, succeeds in convicting the lawyer, denounces the rest of the grafters and adjusts all wrongs.

THE RED FLAME OF PASSION (Four Parts).—Jim Borden, a big loving, good natured fellow lives in the woods with his wife, Alda, his crippled brother, Jack, and his baby, who is the apple of his eye. He struggles to keep up the expense of the land which he is trying to improve, by working at Taxidermy and selling his specimens. He also studies medicine and chemistry in his spare moments. Jim has a great affection for Jack, who became crippled in his early youth, in saving Jim's life. Jack, the cripple, is very fond of Jim's baby. Alda, the wife, however, denies Jim the joy of romping with the baby, contending that his crooked shape will have an ill influence on the child. She refers to him as an imp. The very first quarrel between Jim and his wife is the defense of Jack, whom he hears his wife speak ill of. Jim declares that Jack's poor bones were twisted in saving his life, and no one; not even she—his wife—shall speak ill of him.

Hardy, a hunter, is accidentally shot in the mountains while hunting. He is found by Jim, Jack and their dogs. He is brought to Jim's home and cared for. The wife falls in love with Hardy. Jack surprises them in embrace. He refrains from exposing them, knowing the pain it would cause Jim. He orders Hardy from the house. The wife induces Jim to turn all his property over to her. She and Hardy leave together, taking Jim's baby. The property is sold and Jim and Jack are driven off. Jim, who adores his wife and baby, is crushed beneath the mighty blow. Gradually there comes through the daze of the terrific blow a desire for revenge upon the guilty pair. Jim records an oath, but he does not call upon high Heaven to witness that oath. He starts about it in a secret, systematic, subtle manner. He labors arduously with his medicine and chemistry.

Ten years pass; Jim is in Spain. He is a wonderful doctor, having won the world's highest honors. Under another name he is loved and respected. Through his great skill he has been able to correct his brother's misshapen bones. He meets a Spanish woman of great beauty, who has a crippled arm. He operates, correcting the condition, thus winning the Spanish beauty's undying gratitude. Jim, still with the thought of vengeance most prominent in his mind, takes advantage of her gratitude to extract from her a sacred oath at her shrine, to do his future bidding. A short space of time has passed. A terrific epidemic of spinal meningitis has broken out in the South. Jim having a specific cure, starts for America with Jack. Alda, Jim's former wife, and Hardy are living in a southern city. Jim and Jack arrive in the South. Jim works day and night to relieve the suffering of the stricken. Like an angel, worn and weary, never thinking of himself, he works on, on. He gathers up the stricken, carrying them through the streets to the improvised hospital, where he operates. When others fear, he is at hand to aid.

Hardy, the snake in the grass, is stricken. Alda reads of Jim's phenomenal cures. Not knowing he is her former husband, the man she has wronged, she goes to Jim to help Hardy. Here comes a great surprise when she recognizes Jim. He consents to see Hardy. He meets his own child. Jim consents to save Hardy's life for two purposes, one condition being that Alda tell the child that he —Jim—is its father, and that she also tell the child of her own shame and guilt. She does this in order to save Hardy's life. The child shrinks from her. Jim saves Hardy's life for future vengeance. He sends for Marcia, the Spanish beauty, who in time wins Hardy away from Jim's former wife, so she suffers the same pains she inflicted upon Jim. Alda, deserted by Hardy, becomes poor and wretched. The child leaves her, seeking a home with Jim, her father. Later, Jim takes the Spanish beauty from Hardy; thus, he, too, feels the hand of vengeance. The wife seeks peace beneath the hood of a nun. Jack becomes happy in the arms and love of the Spanish beauty. Jim, after years of suffering, gathers his precious baby within his big arms and silently thanks God for the one blessing bestowed. When not employed comforting the ill and suffering, his thoughts wander back into the purple past of what seems so long ago, and he thinks of what might have been.

FACING THE GATTLING GUNS (Four Parts).—Gill Howe, while riding on a business trip through the country for Mr. Stacey, his employer, accidentally falls from his horse and is seriously injured. John Adams and his daughter are driving along the roadside and discover Gill Howe lying in the snow drift. They take him to their home and nurse him. Gill requests Kate Adams to notify his sister of his accident and to come to him. The two girls meet and become friends. Gill falls in love with Kate. He is the chief advisor of Samuel Stacey, a millionaire promoter.

Kate's father is a big contractor for the great dam in the wilderness and meets with financial difficulty. He thrashes a thieving half-breed for trying to steal from the works. The half-breed becomes very angry and threatens to have revenge. John Adams is very much worried over the works being shut down and not being able to pay any money to the laborers, who have become very angry, and threaten to blow up the dam. Through a stray bullet John Adams is accidentally shot. Unable to go to the city to borrow money on securities, he sends his daughter. She arrives in the city and seeks to borrow from Stacey. She waits later in his office. Gill, overhearing the insult to the girl who has been so kind to him, resents it. Through his interference, he is discharged by Stacey. Gill then assists Kate in borrowing the money. They are continually blocked through Stacey's interference, so finally Gill arranges with several friends to defeat Stacey until they get the money. Being tricked, Stacey swears revenge and follows the girl and Gill to the dam.

Gill, who has proven himself to be loyal, is now made manager of the dam. This displeases the present foreman, who conspires with Stacey to overthrow Gill. The laborers continue rioting and howling for their money. Through Mr. Adams, Gill secures aid from the governor of the state, to protect their large holdings and investments. Gill pleads with the rioters and begs them to keep quiet and promises that all salaries will be paid in due time. Through jealousy, Stacey with the assistance of the foreman urges the crowd to wreck the great dam. The militia arrive in time, with their Gattling Guns. Gill instructs the militia that if they are forced to fire, to use only blank shells to frighten the mob away. Stacey, who overhears Gill, surreptitously substitutes real bullets and then incites the men to riot.

A moving picture man, scouting for scenes of interest, is photographing the dam where these labor disturbances are taking place. He sees Stacey substituting the bullets and photographs the dastardly deed. He runs off to hide his camera and, returning to the spot, sees the militia firing upon the rioters. He hastens to Stacey's office and accuses him of murder through his substitution of the bullets for blanks.

Stacey and the foreman attack the cameraman, carry him into the dam and turn on the water. Gill hears his cries and rushes to the rescue. Being unable to turn off the water, he secures dynamite and blasts the dam. He succeeds in rescuing the cameraman, and takes him to his home. Gill is is arrested and accused of being responsible for the murder of the rioters. While the trial is proceeding the cameraman enters the court with a moving picture machine, and after darkening the courtroom, shows the picture of Stacey substituting the bullets. He then tells the story to the court, resulting in the freeing of Gill and the militia officers, and the conviction of Stacey.

THE TOWER OF TERROR (Four Parts).—In Bombay, Count Adolphe elopes with Vasca, although engaged to a lady in Rome. In that city two years later the Roman lady's father hears of Adolphe's wife and child. He sets the Black League to work. As a result, the young wife is met by death. The baby daughter is abandoned. The deed is committed by Michael, a confidential servant of the Roman lady. Adolphe eventually marries the Roman lady and Michael becomes their butler. Twenty years later Adolphe, now the Duke of Torini, for the first time receives news of his daughter. He sends his secretary to Bombay to fetch her. The young couple fall in love. The mind of Michael is unhinged by the sight of the young lady, and in his temporary insanity he tells the Duke where the proofs of his crime are to be found. The Duke finds the papers, sends them to his secretary, Genovo, makes his will in favor of his daughter, Zania, and dies of heart disease. Michael, having no knowledge of what he said or did in his delirium, thinks the proofs have been taken by Zania. The father

From Review of May 2d "World" By Mr. W. Stephen Bush

This feature is a superb picture telling a story of tender and intense human interest. The settings are beyond all praise.

One of its greatest merits consists of its winning the sympathy of the audience from start to finish.

The acting is strong and natural and much above the average.

of the duchess is compromised by the missing papers, so Michael confides in her. They seek the help of the Black League. Zania cannot give up the papers she has not got. She is kidnapped and taken to the Tower of Terror. Then next morning Genovo, her lover, sets out to rescue her. He discovers where she is and has a terrific fight with her jailer. In the struggle a lantern is upset, and the place set on fire, and the jailer meets his death. Genovo reaches his sweetheart, but escape is cut off by the fire. They get free by climbing down a tower over 200 feet high. The most sensational feat ever shown in a film. The Duchess and Michael arrive at the Tower of Terror just as the fire reaches some powder barrels, and the guilty couple are blown to bits.

THE MASTER OF DEATH (Four Parts).—Col. Von Hoff holds a reception, at which Captain Bassenheim is present. Bassenheim makes a slurring remark against Mrs. Von Hoff, which is overheard by the Colonel and his son, Peter, a young lieutenant ant. Bassenheim is called to account and offers an explanation which satisfies the Colonel, but which Peter does not believe. The Captain is insulted when Peter refuses to shake hands.

Later, at the Officer's Riding School, Bassenheim again incurs Peter's dislike by lashing his horse each time he passes. Unable to control himself, Peter runs Bassenheim down with his horse. He is dismissed from the army. Colonel Von Hoff feels his son has disgraced him and resigns from the army. Peter is cast off by his parent.

Peter determines to go to America. On the massive ocean liner he stokes to pay his passage. Arriving in America without funds, and unsuccessful in finding employment, he becomes despondent. He is intercepted from committing suicide by John Smith, an inventor, who persuades him to become the performer of a dangerous leap, known as the "Death Curve." Peter successfully performs the feat before the reporters at a private rehearsal. His fame spreads; he becomes the star of a circus in Berlin, and is known as "The Master of Death." He visits his mother, telling her he is the representative of an American shoe manufacturer. While at his old home Ada Merta, a former sweetheart, now married, calls. It takes only a short time to rekindle the old love. Later they decide to elope. Peter tells his mother he has been recalled by his firm, and bids her goodby. He resigns from the circus, and his last appearance is to be the following day. Ada becomes conscience stricken and refuses to go with Peter.

Next day he goes to perform his farewell leap. His thoughts wander; he takes the leap, makes a wrong turn; his body rushes through space, and the performance, indeed, proves to be the last of "The Master of Death."

AMBROSIO.

THE MAGIC NOTE; or HOW THE CLOUDS OF DARKNESS ROLLED AWAY (Three Parts).—Anna, once the only heiress of a rich family, is now obliged to work day and night at her sewing machine. Her strenuous work is enlightened by her dream of love. Robert, her fiance, meets an old friend of his who tries Anna's voice, which he thinks is very promising. She is now left under the instruction of her tutor.

One day Robert, who works in a bank, is sent on a very important mission to St. Marseilles, but before leaving is presented with a snuff-box by Anna, on which she inscribes the first words of "Mignon"—"Don't you know the beautiful land—."

Morton, a friend of Robert, having overheard the conversation between Robert and the manager of the bank, plans to steal the large sum of money which Robert will cash in St. Marseilles. That night, with the help of other villains, Morton succeeds in stealing the money from Robert and throws him into a sewer. Not hearing anything from Robert everyone thinks that he ran away with the money.

Anna has forgotten her lover and is now on the stage triumphing wherever she plays. During her tours she is invited to sing before the insane men in the asylum of the town. Robert is among the unfortunate men, having lost his reason by the shock he received when robbed. Anna arrives at the asylum and when he hears her beautiful voice, his memory is restored. Anna recognizes him and together they plan to find the guilty man. One day Morton, who is one of Anna's most ardent suitors, shows her the snuff-box she gave Robert. Recognizing it, she understands how he had obtained it. Shortly after, accompanied by Robert and the police, Morton is arrested, and Anna and Robert live happily together.

LIFE AND WORKS OF VERDI (Six Parts).—Giuseppe Verdi was born in the little village of Roncola, Italy, during the stormy period of a revolution. Verdi's parents are forced to seek refuge in a church, and upon their return to their home, they find that the house has been ransacked and nothing spared. The young Verdi grows up in Roncola, and at the age of seven years displays his love for music. He goes daily to the church, where he is attracted by the beautiful tunes of the organ, and he watches the old organist with intense interest. Verdi's father, realizing his son's musical instincts, buys him an old spinet, and upon this instrument young Verdi commences his rise in the world of music. To further advance in his studies, Verdi leaves Roncola and goes to Buzzeto where he is cordially received by the Barezzi, who endeavor to help him. He leaves for Milan, to join the Conservatory, but he is met with a refusal to his request for admission. He returns to Buzzeto and is consoled by the kind people with whom he lives, especially by their daughter, Marguerite, who soon afterwards becomes Verdi's wife.

During financial hardships, and the oppression of his jealous fellow musicians, he composes his first opera, "Oberto, comte di San Bonifacio." But while he dreams of glory, his dearly-beloved wife dies, and he becomes inconsolable. For a time he forgets his art. But soon the fire of his ambition again arises, and he composes the opera "Nubucco," which marks the beginning of his fame. For the second time he marries, taking as his wife the charming Giuseppina Strepponi, the first interpreter of the main character in "Nubucco." Verdi's name now becomes popular, and his fame is gradually becoming world-wide. From Milan, Verdi goes to the principal cities of Italy, where he adds new laurels to his increasing popularity. Thereafter, the larger part of Verdi's life is spent in Genoa, in the Doria Palace, where through its large windows, he views the mighty sea, which inspires his musical soul with the charms of its majestic scenes.

And as he dreams, he hears the trumpets of Aida in the distance; here is Rigoletto, court jester to the Duke of Mantua, who swears to avenge himself, while Azucena, the gypsy girl, is lulled in Manrico's arms; and now comes the impassioned Violette, who gently dies near her beloved Alfredo; here is the jealous Othello, the Moor of Venice, who bewilderingly kisses the unfortunate Desdemona; and here is Falstaff, duped by the Merry Wives of Windsor—and the old man's vision disappears. He then decides that all the wealth which he had amassed through his art should help other poor composers and artists of the great musical family. He builds in Milan the House of Musicians for which the world of art owes him everlasting gratitude. And as the majestic sun sets on the horizon, Verdi's earthly life is extinguished, but his name and fame will survive him through all eternity.

LIEUTENANT ROSE AND THE SEALED ORDERS (Three Parts).—The story opens with Lieut. Rose in the company of Lady Mary, who is very anxious to attend the Admiral Ball that is going to be attended by the powers of all nations. He promises to escort Lady Mary to the ball. At the reception, the representatives wish to speak to Lieut. Rose, and the latter is enjoying a tete-a-tete with Lady Mary, for the evening being warm, he prefers conversing to dancing, and is notified that he is wanted. Before entering another room, one of the gentleman makes sure that the doors are closed. He leaves the room to tell the party of representatives that everything is in order. In the meantime, a spy, an accomplice of a Count, who is a foreign spy, enters the room, opens the door that had been closed, and goes into another room. He disguises himself as a waiter, and while the admirals are talking about the war, he enters, and hears the whole conversation.

Lieut. Rose discovers the spy behind a screen, but the latter, quick at action, stands there with a tray, and says, "did you ring, sir?" They all stand astonished, for they were sure that the door was closed. He is sent out of the room with an order for drinks. He quickly runs to the Count, who is waiting for him, and tells him that there is war in the air, and that Lieut. Rose is in charge of the Sealed Orders. The spy entices the driver of the Lieutenant's carriage into the woods, and after beating him, he succeeds in taking off the driver's clothes. He dons them and takes the place of the driver. The reception being over, the party is leaving. Lieut. Rose enters his carriage without noticing the change in the driver. After driving a little way, he makes believe that there is something the matter with the coach, and while the Lieutenant and his escort get out to see what the trouble is, the spy goes on the other side of the coach, takes out the Sealed Orders, puts them in his pocket, goes around to the couple who are waiting and tells them to enter the carriage, that it is all right now.

He drives up a big hill. At the top he unloosens the horses and lets the carriage go down hill. They go down in a terrible speed, and are thrown from one side to the other. They realize the terrible position they are in. There is no way of them getting out, and they try to make the best of it. The carriage comes to a halt, but they have fallen into the water. We see Lieut. Rose coming out of the windows, dragging Lady Mary out, who has fainted, and he walks to the banks, the water being up to his waist-line. He spies the camps of the boy scouts, lays his companion in a row boat, and runs to the camp for help. While there, he notices a wireless apparatus, and sends a wireless to the dockyard, telling them of his predicament.

The spy in the meantime delivers the Sealed Orders to the Count, and they decide to leave port immediately. They decide to leave port by boat, and when they arrive at the dockyard they see that it is closed and nobody allowed to leave, by orders of the Admiral; so they decide to leave by road. The Lieutenant, in the meantime, gets a few police guards to watch the bridge. The two spies, coming along in an auto, see that the bridge is guarded, so they turn back, followed by the police and Lieut. Rose. The spies manage to jump on a train, just leaving, and elude their pursuers. Lieut. Rose makes a short cut. He arrives at the track that the train will shortly pass on and gets into the mail bag. The train comes along and he is thrown into the train. The mail notice that the bag moves. They call a guard and empty the bag. The lieutenant falls out, badly hurt, so he explains his position and asks for a train guard uniform. He is given one, and manages to reach the coach that the spies are in. They are both looking over the papers when the lieutenant comes in. He awaits his chance, and when they are busy over the papers, the lieutenant grabs them out of their hands. A struggle ensues, in which the spies manage to get away. And after a sensational chase, the lieutenant and the police have their prisoners in their power. The next day, the lieutenant, having recovered the Sealed Orders, is seen sailing away with high honors, and Lady Mary bidding him good-bye.

THE DISHONORED MEDAL (Four Parts).—"The Dishonored Medal" is a very powerful, tragic story of the French occupation of Algeria. It is the story of a French officer with whom a native Algerian girl becomes infatuated, and to quiet her conscience he gave her his medal, presumably of the Legion of Honor. The girl's Algerian lover throws himself from the cliff and is killed. The French officer leaves the country, and the girl with her child searches through the mountains for trace of him. She eventually loses her life in a struggle to protect herself from a native libertine, and an old Algerian adopts the baby boy, raising him with his own son, as brothers. The two boys grow up, fall in love with the same girl, and the French officer comes back with high authority to rule over the district. He sees the girl and has her brought to his tent. This so enrages the two boys that they incite rebellion, and war takes place.

In the battle the Algerians are almost entirely wiped out, but the two boys survive, gain the officers' tent, and while the adopted boy, the son of the French officer, fatally stabs his father, the other youth escapes with the girl. As the father dies he recognizes the medal suspended from the boy's neck, and dies with the knowledge that justice has reached him through the hands of his own son.

MONGREL AND MASTER (Three Parts—Essanay—Released during week of May 11).—Woman's devotion, or the lack of it, placed Frank Mitchell and Bill Denton in the wider path of life, where they shifted about, fought and taught each other the part of life which is wrong. It was easy to learn, to teach, they enjoyed it, they thought, so lived on as they should not have lived. This day they planned to pull a big job—to rob one of the homes of wealth, and started out in the daylight to get the lay of the land. And a little child shall lead them—'tis better so—it is so. A child of ten, a daughter of wealth, they met. She passed them on the street. Frank dropped a small tool from the kit of his pocket, but walked on. She picked it up, called him back and was curious. Frank came to her and she asked childish questions about the tool. Never before did he see a child—not as he saw this one; a messenger she was, probably from Heaven, or at least from Fate. They chatted while Bill, the pal, dubbed it all foolishness. This child hoped that Frank was a good man and said so, as she selected the prettiest rose from a beautiful bouquet and presented it to the burglar. Frank That night, or in the wee small hours of the morning, they entered the mansion to steal. Bill paraded through the house gathering the booty. Frank was about to open the safe when he discovered a photograph of the child—the very same child. All the good in him came to the surface. He was saved. New life was his gift. He wrote a note to the child telling that she had saved him and that he would be a good man as she had hoped. He left the note with the guns and burglar tools on the table, and left, forcing his disgusted partner before him. Frank labored for years, and during these years he studied law, while Bill associated himself with a clique of rascals that bought and sold votes and made themselves rich on questionable contracts. The two pals did not meet and the little girl grew to young womanhood. Frank became the clerk in her father's law office. Then he met her. They did not recognize each other, they never met before—they thought. It was not long before a strong and vital love was theirs. Her father, Mr. Stone, was elected mayor of the city. He was elected by Bill's crowd. Then Bill fell in love with the mayor's daughter. This affection was not mutual, the girl told Bill that she did not love him and was not the least interested in him—wished him well and told him to go. Bill went to the mayor and demanded that that official speak to his daughter in his favor. To do this the mayor refused. Bill was angry and immediately began his planning. He discovered that Frank, now the mayor's secretary, was no other than his partner in crime and then he compelled Frank to live in fear of him.

Then came the "frame-up." A newspaper owned by Bill came out with strong stories accusing the mayor. Although he was innocent, the mayor could not, in the face of the system, prove it. So the girl's father stood open to impeachment and disgrace. The love affair between the girl and Frank was found out. Bill threatened Frank, said he would show him up in his old life. This held Frank in check. Now, just at this time when the town was completely up in the air over the fearful news regarding their worthy mayor, Ruth decides to sacrifice her happiness to save her father. She went to Bill asking for time until Saturday to reconsider his offer of marriage. You can guess Bill was elated—he was winning in a walk. So he promised her to hold off his fight on the mayor. Then the newspaper bows and begs the mayor's pardon.

Frank musters up courage enough to ask Ruth to marry him. He almost insists. Then she tells him of the planned sacrifice. Frank is sorrow-stricken, but can do nothing. So life wore wearily until Saturday. Bill's crowd of grafters are hot on his trail. They are after their share of the money derived from swindling the city government of funds which had been appropriated for the Poor-house. Finally they meet him and make their demands. With the display of all the cunning of a fox, Frank manages to hear the time, place and date for the distribution of the graft money by Bill. With Ruth, a gang of detectives and a stenographer, and not without a lot of trouble, Frank gets evidence complete enough to put Bill and the gang away and rid the city of a lot of bad men. This was Saturday night. Bill was to call at the mayor's home for his answer. And he did, too. Little Ruth greeted him. For his answer, Frank and the detectives marched in his gang of grafters and confronted him with his crime. This all takes place in the room where years ago Frank and Bill were going to put over the robbery. Bill is placed under arrest. He sees his game is up, then he plays his only card against Frank, knowing that he can at least deprive him of the girl. He explains to the mayor that Frank was his pal in the old crook days and that they had attempted to rob his house and that they had committed many other crimes. The old tools are taken from the library, where they have been kept as a great family novelty. The mayor looks to Frank to discredit the statement made by Bill. Frank only stands with head bowed and ashamed. Then it happens—Ruth brings the note in to play its part—and it does. Why, yes, they were happily married, that girl and the remade man.

A STRUGGLE FOR LIFE (Pathe—Released during week of May 11).—Jean Morvin, a talented draughtsman, having won the favor of a woman with whom his superintendent is smitten, is forced by the latter into a quarrel over some work and is discharged. Not content with this, and to forestall Jean's wreaking vengeance upon him, the superintendent uses his influence among officials of other manufacturing plants to discredit Morvin and prevent his securing employment and as a result Jean is forced to forsake his profession and seek work of any kind. Going into the country, Jean secured a job as a farmhand, but here his ability and willingness, labor set jealous hearts and heads to work to undermine his success and when he becomes the bone of contention and threatens to disrupt the family relations of the farmer and his two sons, Jean leaves the farm. The little money Jean has saved, soon is spent, but still faithful to his ideals and with head high with hope, he journeys to the great City of Paris, where he lands penniless, footsore, ragged and hungry. Many opportunities to steal present themselves to Jean in his hour of need, but he remains firm in his intent to be honest and honorable and watches eagerly for the little chance that will give him a chance. Suddenly he sees it.

At the railway depot a traveller emerges loaded with luggage and boards a cab. Jean follows the cab through the principal streets of Paris, past beautiful monuments, many of which he has helped to design, until the cab reaches its destination. Jean carries the baggage up stairs and is rewarded with a few pennies. Greatly delighted, Jean returns to the heart of the city, where he invests his small fortune in an extra edition of the Paris Herald. The papers are quickly sold and Jean finds himself the proud possessor of a pocketful of pennies. For two long years Jean struggles for success and is gaining ground, step by step. Hurrying along the street one day Jean finds a wallet. It contains a fortune in bank notes, some valuable papers and the business cards of the owner, Ernest Preval. Without hesitation, Jean journeys to the address of the loser of the wallet to find it a magnificent villa. Mr. Preval is delighted to have recovered the wallet and declaring his admiration of Jean's honesty, offers him $100.00 of the money that the wallet contained. This Jean refuses, but intimates his desire to secure steady employment. Preval gladly accedes to his request and gives him a note to the manager of the Preval manufacturing plant. Within a year Jean has attained the secretaryship to Mr. Preval, which position brings him in such constant association with Preval's beautiful daughter, Claire, that he is soon violently in love, but hesitates to speak his dreams. On the occasion of one of Claire's more or less frequent visits to her father's factory, one of the buildings takes fire and the girl is trapped within. Several men, including Jean, go to her assistance, but Jean is first to reach her side and after struggling against smoke and flames, he succeeds in reaching the street with the girl in his arms. Ere the next day's sun has set, Claire gives the life that Jean has saved, into his keeping forever.

APEX.

THE DEAD MAN WHO KILLED (Four parts).—Viera waits, as is her custom every morning, at the gate of her home to greet her lover, Boris, on his way to the university. As they are speaking to each other a dashing officer, Lieutenant Gobrinoff, passes by on horseback. Gobrinoff greets Viera most courteously, but eyes her companion disdainfully. Boris much hurt by this treatment withdraws immediately. Viera is furious with the lieutenant, but conceals her wrath, knowing that he would seize every available chance of making love to her if she were to show signs of discontent.

Later, at her birthday party, she repulses Gobrinoff and seeks Boris' company in preference. Gobrinoff resents this and vows vengeance on Boris. When departing for military service, Viera presents Boris with her picture. The soldiers are marching toward Karabutak, the new garrison. In the yard of the fortification the troops are presented to the commanding officer, who afterward inspects them in company with his adjutant-lieutenant, Gobrinoff.

The lieutenant is to select a personal attendant, and in passing judgment discovers Boris and is greatly surprised. Seeing a chance to revenge himself on one who had been preferred to him, he chooses Boris. The young soldier is obliged to wait upon the lieutenant, who seizes every opportunity of tormenting him. A sabre drill is called among the soldiers. Gobrinoff, who is an inspecting officer, takes up his position as Boris' combatant. Boris is rather unskilled in fencing and almost succumbs to the dexterity of his opponent a number of times. At last he becomes utterly exhausted, and throwing down his mask and sword, leaves the grounds. Boris unheeds the commands of the adjutant-lieutenant to resume sabre practice and keeps on going. Gobrinoff has him arrested and a court-martial sentences him to three days of imprisonment. He is chained by the knees, thus forcing him to be in an erect position during his incarceration period. At the expiration of his term he is found to be in an unconscious condition, but is soon revived by two sub-lieutenants, who lead him out of prison. One day the commandant of the fortification receives instructions to dispatch an order to the Kaschgar-Post. Lieutenant Gobrinoff is assigned to the task and is ordered to take his attendant with him and food supplies for six days. Boris is commanded to prepare for the trip, but before departing he manages to send a farewell letter to his beloved.

On the eve of departure, Gobrinoff is advised by his comrades to select some other than Boris, on the theory that he might attack him. The lieutenant shows them his sword and pistol and assures them he can well take care of himself. Soon the two are on their way riding through the Kaschgar desert.

On the evening of the third day after Boris had set up the tent, Gobrinoff bids him retire. The latter, uneasy of the thoughts of the young soldier, chains his pistol to his wrist before retiring. The officer thinks right, for soon Boris is seen cautiously making his way to the now fast asleep lieutenant. Reaching the commander's pistol, he manages to get hold of the case with the charge. Taking the compass, field glasses and a map, as well as the officer's food and supplies, he makes a bonfire of them. He cuts open the water bags, and rides away, leaving the adjutant-lieutenant with no hope of salvation.

Morning arrived, the lieutenant discovers and understands the situation. Fortunately he still has his pistol and handcuffs and quickly mounting his horse chases along the vast desert in the footprints of Boris' horse. From a distance Boris sights Gobrinoff approaching. He pulls himself together and jumping off the horse, takes off the saddle and bags and throws away his gun. Boris' horse, failing in strength, soon dies.

The soldier, seeing his enemy nearing, takes to his heels. Gobrinoff's horse becomes fatigued from the strain, and he is compelled to dismount. The men come nearer and nearer to each other. At length they are within pistol range. The pistol snaps. Gobrinoff throws it away and goes for his adversary with all his might. A fierce struggle ensues between the two men.

Gobrinoff manages to get hold of the handcuffs and puts one around Boris' wrist. Boris gives a jerk, and endeavors to re-commence the fight with Gobrinoff and is successful in putting the other handcuff around the hand of the officer. He now feels utterly exhausted and knows that the same fate awaits both of them. From sheer exhaustion he dies.

Gobrinoff suddenly spies a photograph of Viera lying on Boris' chest. Terror and fright seize him at the thought of the unspeakable loneliness and desolation surrounding him on all sides. He holds the photograph up in the air over his head and falls down slowly on the dead body of Boris.

TREACHERY (Four parts).—Enrico Fiori, a sailor, finds himself on a raft, the only living survivor after a shipwreck, and after drifting several days without food or water, he at last comes upon a desert island, where he sustains himself by eating grass and drinking from a tiny stream. Wandering about the island for days he discovers a cave in which he finds several skeletons, also a book that tells about a Spanish fort where some red diamonds are hidden. In order that he may be rescued from this island, he cuts his arm and writes a note for help with his blood, and throws it into the sea. A fisherman finds Enrico's note in the body of a fish and goes to his rescue. When they reach the island, they find him turned into a savage, who fights them, but they at last subdue him by smoking him out of a cave; tying him up, they bring him back to civilization, put him into a hospital, where in time he recovers.

On his recovery he tells the doctor and the nurse about the red diamonds and they both agree to start on a search with him for the diamonds. In the course of time they find the fort and secure the diamonds, which are given into the keeping of the doctor, who falls in with a gang of bandits. In order to escape he tells the bandits that Enrico Fiori and the nurse have the diamonds, and upon hearing this they let him go and start a search for Enrico and the nurse, whom they soon capture. The doctor, after escaping from the clutches of the bandits, meets a bear and in order to get away in a hurry, falls over a precipice. Meanwhile, the bandits not finding the jewels on Enrico and the nurse, tie them up and get drunk on the liquor they had stolen, and fall into a drunken sleep. While they are sleeping Enrico gets one of the robber's knives, frees the nurse and himself, lights a fuse that leads to a barrel of powder underneath the fort, and escapes while the robbers are blown up with the fort. As they are escaping they suddenly meet the doctor, who in order to right himself gives the diamonds to Enrico, but while they are sleeping he tries to steal the diamonds again. Enrico wakes up and struggles with the doctor, but is knocked unconscious with a limb of a tree. When Enrico gains consciousness he starts in search of the doctor and finds him near a stream. They again quarrel and in the excitement which follows both fall into the stream, where under water he takes the diamonds from the doctor and comes to the surface, while the doctor, who cannot swim, drowns. Enrico Fiori swims to the bank with the gems, climbs out and brings the nurse to the spot where the doctor had drowned.

GAUMONT

THE OPIUM SMUGGLERS (Three parts).—Two coast guards discover traces of smuggling on the seashore. The district is infested by Chinese opium smugglers, but the Orientals are so cautious that it seems impossible to catch the gang or find out their haunts. The coast guards take the packet of opium they have discovered to headquarters, and it is decided that a stop must be put to the smuggling without delay. Arizona Bill is communicated with and promises to do his best to aid the government. Bill has already had a good deal of experience in dealing with Chinese, and he disguises himself very cleverly as an Oriental and haunts the port, making the acquaintance of several of the gang, and eventually being taken on as an extra hand on one of the boats. One night a mysterious ship is visited and bales of goods taken off. Bill assists in landing the cargo, and shouldering his share, follows his companions through narrow streets and alleys to an apparently deserted house. A password is given and our hero finds himself in an opium den. An old hag receives the Chinese and supplies them with pipes. Bill accepts his and pretends to inhale the poisonous fumes, while thinking out a way to escape without discovery. The old woman's suspicions are aroused, however. She steals behind Bill and pulls off his pigtail and then strives to rouse the opium-soaked men around. Meanwhile, Bill rushes to the door, but a trap-door before the threshold has been opened and he falls into a cellar beneath. After some hours he discovers an exit through a disused drain and emerges on the sea front exhausted, where Betty, his wife, who has accompanied him to the town, is anxiously looking for him. Bill, however, is determined not to be beaten and hires a boat to explore the coast. Betty insists on going too, but the Chinese gang know everything, and arrange for several of their number to be included in the boat. A few days later the yellow demons seize their opportunity and take command of the boat. Bill is bound and a bomb placed by his head, with a fuse connected, which will blow him and the boat to pieces in a short time. Betty is carried off in one of the lifeboats in spite of her struggles. Bill's position is desperate, and it seems that his last hour has come. An idea occurs to him, and as the burning fuse comes within his reach, he burns his bonds in the tiny flame, and, free once more, leaps from the doomed ship just in time. A terrific explosion occurs and the boat sinks beneath the waves, watched by the exulting Chinese, who have landed. As they drag Betty with them, she manages to lose her footing and falls over a precipice. Feeling sure she is killed, the Orientals make no attempt to rescue her, but Betty rolls down the height, and beyond being stunned and having a severe shaking, she is unhurt. She manages to crawl up to a rock, and, mounting this, spies the Chinamen entering a hut near at hand. She has discovered their hiding-place! Down on the seashore she finds a man's body washed in by the waves, and with a cry of anguish recognizes Bill. Thinking he is dead, she lifts his body on to her shoulders and starts to walk inland. After a time she fancies he stirs and to her delight life is in him still. Little by little Bill revives and hears with joy that Betty has found the retreat of their enemies. Next day Bill reports to the coast guard-in-chief, and asks him to send an armored boat to blow up the hut on the coast. This is immediately done, and the opium den utterly destroyed by cannon. Thus a public danger is wiped out by the intrepid bravery of Arizona Bill and his wife.

THE NORWEGIAN SPY.—Members of the Norwegian cabinet have trumped up charges against their ambassador in Berlin, whom they want to get rid of. The ambassador has secured a certificate copy of the evidence of the "fake" charge. He is visited by the Countess Helgska, a spy, who pretends to be his friend, and she steals the papers to prevent the exposure of the cabinet members. Th ambassador discovers the loss and gets Detective Burnes to work on the case. The ambassador faces trial on the morrow, and unless he can refute the charges, with the evidence he has secured, he will be ruined.

Burnes gives chase after the countess, who is escaping in an automobile. She throws off her pursuer by assuming a disguise and changing from one automobile to another. The detective halts the first car and by bribing the chauffeur picks up the trail. The countess is on her way to the railway station. Arriving, she telegraphs the foreign bureau that she has the papers and they should have a special train ready to take her to the Helger Danske decks, from where she will resume her homeward journey. Burnes arrives at the station in time to see the train pull out. He reads the countess' message in the telegraph office. He wires ahead to his men to waylay the special and hold the countess.

There is but one route to the Helger Danske decks and he is sure of getting her. In the meantime Burnes, by a short route, reaches the ferry. She fools the detective by assuming a disguise and gets her special train. The detective attempts to follow her, but she loses him. He takes a cab to the scene where he sees the waiting train of special train. The train is held up, but the countess escapes from the rear, through the underbrush. Burnes arriving, finds the bird has flown and in the meantime the countess has bribed his driver and rides away in his cab. Burnes improvises a telephone in mid air and phones for an aeroplane, which is the quickest way to catch the countess. He flies away and arrives at the Helger Danske decks, where he changes roles with a stoker. The countess walks into his arms when she enters a tugboat which is to take her to the steamer. On board the Helger Danske, Burnes enlists his fellow worker to help him get back the "fake" evidence. Together the men go aloft and Burnes, peering into the countess' cabin, sees her with the papers. His helper gets a lifeboat ready and Burnes, entering the cabin, attempts to get the papers. The countess struggles and he pulls her to the deck, where he finally gets the papers. The lifeboat is lowered and the detective and his man escape. The countess is beaten and must proceed to report failure. In the meantime the lifeboat sinks, and the men after a struggle in the stormy sea, are washed ashore. Burnes has but a few hours to return the papers, as the trial will be held. He rushes back and safely delivers the "fake" charges that will clear the ambassador.

WORLD SPECIAL FILMS CORPORATION.

THE BRASS BOTTLE (Four parts).—For a certain offense Fakrash-el-Aamash, a Jinnee of the Green Jinn, is sealed up in a brass bottle by order of Suleyman, and cast into the sea. Three thousand years later the bottle is drawn up in a net by some fishermen on the south coast of England. Horace Ventimore, a struggling architect, is in love with Sylvia, the daughter of Professor Futvoye, a collector of curios. The professor favors the suit of Maurice Pringle, a prosperous architect, in preference to his poorer rival.

The professor sends Ventimore to a sale of antiques to bid for certain lots. Ventimore fails to secure them, but on his own account purchases an old brass bottle in the hope that it may interest the professor. The professor rejects the bottle with scorn, and Ventimore takes it to his office and opens it with alarming result. The Jinnee emerges from the bottle and, in gratitude for his release, promises Ventimore all that his heart can desire.

Through the mysterious power of the Jinnee, Samuel Wackerbath, a wealthy merchant, who is about to build a country residence, mysteriously appears and engages Ventimore to carry out its construction. At Ventimore's lodging camels arrive with bales, caskets of treasures and precious stones, and each fresh favor of the Jinnee increases his embarrassment. Hearing that the Futvoyes are expected to dinner, the Jinnee converts Ventimore's rooms into an Arabian Hall and entertains his guests with an Eastern banquet most uncongenial to modern palates. Musicians assail their ears with hideous discords, and dancing girls shock them with their lavish display—and when the leading dancer falls at his feet and declares her devotion, Ventimore's discomfiture is complete. The guests leave in disgust and Sylvia is handed over to the unwelcome attentions of Pringle.

The simple Jinnee is deeply grieved at the failure of his plans for Ventimore's welfare, and promises to persuade the professor to give him his daughter. Arrived at the Futvoye's house in city garb, the Jinnee demands the hand of Sylvia for Ventimore. The professor indignantly refuses, whereupon the Jinnee turns him into a mule. This does not improve Ventmore's chances. Wackerbath is horrified to find a Moorish palace erected on his property, and vents his wrath on Ventimore. Sylvia throws over Ventimore and accepts his rival. Ventimore in despair asks the Jinnee to leave him and go back to Suleyman.

The Jinnee journeys through the desert and finds Suleyman is no more. Angry, at last he turns on Ventimore and carries him off to slay him, but with fiendish malice, changes his plans and resolves that his ungrateful victim shall be bottled up as he has been. Ventimore accepts his fate, and, as a last favor, implores the Jinnee to make the Futvoyes, Wackerbath, and the Rapkins, forget all that has happened, but he forgets to mention Pringle. The Jinnee grants his request. Ventimore finds some difficulty in getting into the bottle and begs the Jinnee to show him the way. The simple creature does so and before he can escape Ventimore has sealed him up once more, and throws him into the Thames. The Futvoyes have forgotten all they have suffered, but Pringle, who remembers, resents their renewed friendliness to Ventimore. In his furious indignation Pringle is mistaken for a madman, and retires, discomfited, and all ends happily for the devoted couple.

IN SEARCH OF THE CASTAWAYS (Five parts).—As Lord Glenarvan and his wife, Lady Helena, are cruising in their yacht, "Duncan," off the coast of their native land—Scotland—the crew harpoon an immense whale which discloses when it is disemboweled a bottle with a message referring to Captain Grant, who had set out in quest of land to colonize and who had lost his ship, the "Britannia," in latitude 37 degrees off the coast of South America. The interpretation of the message is rather uncertain, as the writing had been nearly obliterated. An advertisement in a daily newspaper to the effect that data concerning Captain Grant has been found brings Robert and Mary Grant, children of the shipwrecked captain, to the residence of the lord to entreat him and his wife to sail for Patagonia to see if their father cannot be found. Lord Glenarvan assents, and, when on the ocean a few days, a stranger, who had mistaken the "Duncan" for the good ship "Scotia," upon which he was to sail to India, makes himself the laughing stock of the crew by speaking of the "Scotia," of its captain and of India. The stranger is recognized by the lord and his wife as Panganel, a learned geographer. He consents to accompany the expedition, and forty-two days later the yacht arrives at Conception, in Chili. The party are unable to obtain any data from the British consul concerning the shipwrecked captain, and they are in despair. Their sorrow is allayed, however, by Panganel who, after trying to make a more correct translation of the message, says that Grant must have been taken prisoner in the interior of South America. While Lord Glenarvan starts to cross the continent, following the 37th parallel as the document indicates, Tom Austin, the mate of the "Duncan," will double Cape Horn and await the party in the Atlantic at the 37th parallel.

Forgiven, or The Jack o' Diamonds

A BROADWAY SUCCESS

A MELODRAMA, which was so meritorious as to warrant its continuance for years and was known as one of the famous dramatic successes on Broadway, has been adapted for the screen.

THE thrilling story enfolded in this drama has been told time and again, and long after other features have been forgotten, "FORGIVEN, or THE JACK O' DIAMONDS" will be remembered as a masterpiece.

THIS wonderful feature has been acted by an all-star cast, headed by EDWIN FOSBERG, who starred for several seasons on the dramatic stage as the JACK O' DIAMONDS.

THE critics say "This photoplay has dramatic merit, the story holds the audience, the photography is excellent and the entire SIX PARTS are perfect."

OUR paper in one, three, six and twenty-four sheets, as well as a full line of advertising matter, is ready. Wire for your territory.

Abandoned by the guides at the foot of the Alps due to their fear of recent earthquakes, the party is led by Panganel. Toward night they take refuge in a hut which stands upon a glacier which later starts moving down the precipitous mountain side. They all escape with their lives, but discover that Robert is missing. Suddenly a condor soars through the air and they perceive Robert in its talons. They do not shoot for fear of killing him, but a peasant, with unerring aim, brings the bird to the ground and thus saves Robert's life. The peasant is found to be a Patagonian chief and he offers to guide the party through the vast wastes of land. Thalcave, the Patagonian chief, assists them in purchasing horses and supplies. The water supply gives out as they are crossing the desert, and Thalcave, who knows where water can be obtained, leaves the party in company with the lord and Robert. They come to the stream, but find that it is impossible for them to get back to the camp before night comes on, so they repair to an abandoned hut, where they are not long afterward disturbed by a herd of wild cattle. Robert essays to go for help. Mounted on his fleet-footed horse he out-distances the mad cattle, which are in pursuit of him, and reaches the camp safely. Thalcave and the lord arrive a short while later with the water. Heavy rains follow the drought and the surrounding country becomes a veritable lake. The adventurers seek safety in a tree, which is uprooted by the hurricane that comes on with nightfall. The party still clings to the immense tree and are thankful when the wind, which has subsided considerably, blows it upon a hill. From the top of the hill they perceive the "Duncan" and it is not long before they are on board. The party has crossed South America, but no trace of Captain Grant has been found. The message is again interpreted and it is found that a mistake had been made; the party should have gone to Australia instead of to South America.

Arriving in Australia, the lord is accosted by a person named Ayrton, who offers his services as guide. He shows the lord a paper which states that he was once the quartermaster on Captain Grant's ship, but had left before the shipwreck. As a matter of fact he was discharged for inciting mutiny. As Ayrton, he is known as a peaceful miller; as Ben Joyce, he is the leader of a band of pirates. The lord, unconscious of his true character, hires Ayrton, and the party sets out for Melbourne, the men on horseback, the women in wagons drawn by oxen, while the "Duncan" is to sail to Melbourne under the command of Tom Austin. When an opportunity presents itself, Ayrton begins to put into effect his malignant scheme and starts in by poisoning the horses and oxen. The lord escapes on horseback to the nearest railway station to go to Melbourne to bring the crew of the "Duncan" to the assistance of the party. Ayrton, fearing discovery, secretly leaves the camp, but is shadowed by Robert to the rendezvous of the convict band. There he learns that they are to wreck the train in which the lord will be traveling. He rushes back to the camp, takes a swift steed, and dashes after the train. He catches up with it, climbs from the saddle of his horse on to the platform of the train, uncouples the car in which the lord is riding from the rest of the train and saves the lord's life. The lord and his young rescuer go back to camp only to come face to face with Ayrton, who thought that he had killed the lord. There is a struggle, in which the lord is wounded. Ayrton escapes. The "Duncan" must be reached and the lord, unable to use his right arm, dictates a letter to Tom Austin instructing him to sail to the 37th parallel on the east coast of Australia, from where he is to send a relief column to succor the party. But Ayrton has been eavesdropping and has heard the contents of the letter, so when the messenger, Mulready, who is to deliver the letter is on his way, he is intercepted by the pirate and seriously wounded. The party sets out a little later than the messenger, and they come upon him just in time to hear his dying words: "Stole—the letter—Ayrton."

After several days of hard and tedious traveling the party reaches the east coast of Australia, but no trace of the "Duncan" can be found. The lord charters a ship to reach Melbourne, but as she is in the hands of a drunken crew she founders off the coast of New Zealand. The adventurers escape by swimming, but upon coming ashore are made prisoners by the Maoris. The lord kills one of the tribe and in the melee that follows Panganel and Robert manage to escape. The prisoners' day of doom arrives on the morrow, and as they are cheering one another so that they may take their fate calmly, Robert and Panganel effect their rescue. They seek shelter in the temple of Tabou, but are pursued by the Maoris. The captives blow up the sanctuary and escape by a subterranean passage to the sea. In the distance they observe a ship and embarking in canoes make for it, with the natives in hot pursuit. Death seems to threaten the lord and his associates by land and by sea. As he approaches the "Duncan," it would seem as if the ship were in the hands of pirates, for they open fire. But they aim at the pursuing Maoris, who are annihilated. Ayrton is a prisoner aboard the yacht. No trace of Captain Grant can be found and there is nothing for Lord Glenarvan to do but to return to Scotland.

In the evening as the yacht is lying at anchor, Robert, who is walking the decks with his sister, sees in the offing a light. A cry of "Help! Help!" is then heard. Robert tells the man at the helm, but he ascribes it to the imagination of the youth. Morning breaks with the children disconsolate. A rocky promontory heaves in sight through the morning mist. Boats are lowered and directed toward the shore. Suddenly there bursts from the lips of Robert and Mary a cry of triumph. Upon a rocky headland stands a pathetic figure stretching out his arms to the children. It is their father. Their hearts are ready to burst with joy. Ayrton is marooned on the desert isle. As the "Duncan" sails homeward, the bandit can be seen silhouetted against the sky. The foiled desperado cannot deny a parting salute to the victims of his baseness, and the cannons of the yacht vomit forth a parting salute in reply, and that is the last of Ayrton.

Film Quality

Quality in the film—quality from a technical photographic standpoint is as important to the Exhibitor as is interest in the story that the film tells.

There's one film that's recognized the world over as the standard of quality—that is always used by those whose effort it is to give the Exhibitors the very best goods and the very best service—Eastman film.

And it is identifiable. Look for "Eastman" on the perforated margin.

THE PLAYERS' PICTURES

are of great interest to the public. Your lobby display proves this. Isn't it a reasonable deduction that the greater part of a moving picture audience would like to possess a picture of their favorites? Give them away as an extra inducement for patronage and you'll get it. Do it Systematically and you'll reap good results.

Our Big Lobby Pictures of the Stars Draw Crowds of Admiring Fans

Pay Your Bookkeeper for His Brains—Then Use Them

Not the kind of brain work that is required to add "two and two." A machine can do that better and relieve your bookkeeper of this detail, so he can do more important things.

A Burroughs adds, subtracts, multiplies, divides. It helps a man all day if he is handling figures. With the Burroughs he carries on the office work as before, but he becomes distinctly more efficient in four ways, viz.:

The work is done in much less time—the work is done mechanically correct the first time—the bookkeeper takes more pride in his work and learns accurate short cuts—you (the manager) can quickly get viewpoints of your business from any kind of summary you wish.

We will send the book "Bossing Your Business" on request. Would you like us to make a demonstration of the Burroughs' efficiency in the day's work of your office?

are universally conceded to be the World's Best Projection Surface, Bar None. Still it is sold for 33⅓ cents a square foot. $3.00 a square yard.

It is the only screen on earth that is sold under a positive bona fide 5-year Guarantee—not to Peel! Crack! or Turn Black! It can be washed with soap and water.

Made in three different tints—Pure Silver White! Pale Gold! Silver Flesh! It's canvas, coated with a metalized glass, finished in medium rough or matt finish. Consequently, no haze! glare! or eye-strain! Perfect Projection, regardless of how close or how near your seats are placed.

Get the benefit of your doors and windows by way of real ventilation. Light has very little effect on MIRROROIDE.

Watkins' Kinematograph Exposure Meter

Solves the Exposure Problems of the Motion Picture Operator

¶ This wonderful little instrument tells the correct lens aperture for any condition of light, any time of the day or year, for any shutter opening. Made of metal, nickel-plated and polished, with a ball and chain half-second pendulum for taking the tinting time without a watch. It is a human impossibility to always correctly judge the photographic intensity of the light. Can you, as a progressive operator, afford to be without this infallible guide?

THE PHANTOSCOPE

A motion-picture projecting machine, for school-room, club-room, traveling salesmen, or for home entertainment. Its performance is a delight, and in appearance would grace any drawing-room. The Phantoscope weighs but eighteen pounds. You carry it into parlor, office or class-room, accept conditions just as you find them, and then go right ahead and give your exhibition. There is no special wiring, no preliminary preparation, no waiting. Isn't it significant that the large industrials are buying so many Phantoscopes—six, twelve, seventeen, twenty-five, and one concern has already bought fifty-one. This last order would have given any of you camera men or exchange men a nice commission, wouldn't it? Sharpen your pencil and figure how much you are missing. Then send a ten-dollar deposit and have us send you a Phantoscope C. O. D. The price is but $100 for Phantoscope, complete, in carrying case. The motor-driven Phantoscope is $125; and the big order referred to above was for motor-driven Phantoscopes.

ACTION

THERE is something inspiring in a battle between two great dreadnoughts.

Something sinister in the movements of the long, lean torpedo boats and destroyers.

They steal upon the enemy unawares and aid in the work of annihilation and destruction.

Many such scenes as the above have been acted for the camera and are today depicted in motion pictures.

When projected on the screen by Power's Cameragraph No. 6 A, perfect definition of the action is shown.

Meeting of the Black Hundred | The Balloon is Wrecked and Falls Into the Ocean | Group of Principals in The Million Dollar Mystery

The Million Dollar Mystery

Story by Harold MacGrath. Scenario by Lloyd Lonergan.

Thanhouser's Newest Million Dollar Production

THIS most costly serial motion picture production ever brought out will soon be ready for exhibitors. First release date is June 22nd. Two-reel installments will be released each week. The Chicago Tribune, Boston Globe, Cincinnati Enquirer, New York Globe, Buffalo Courier and 200 other leading newspapers will print this stirring story simultaneously with the appearance of the films. And, remember, $10,000.00 will be paid for the best solution of this startling mystery.

You never have seen a serial production of such magnitude as the Million Dollar Mystery. In this wonderful, new photo-drama you will see scenes never before attempted.

The falling of a balloon in mid-ocean—the actual pictures of the sea bottom's mysterious life and vegetation—scenes of very rare quality and value will be shown in this stupendous, million dollar production.

Exhibitors must act quickly to receive early bookings. The Million Dollar Mystery is an independent release and may be had regardless of the regular program used. For full information apply to

Wolfe, or The Conquest of Quebec

In Five Parts. Produced at Authentic Locations

Said W. Stephen Bush, in reviewing this feature: "I sat enthralled by the spectacle. * * * Once again two great nations fought on land and water. Once again the daring souls of Wolfe and Montcalm were embodied on the bloody field of battle. Once again the fight raged about the gentle and beautiful falls of Montmorenci. * * * At times the realism was overpowering."

A Celebrated Case

In Four Parts

Alice Joyce and Guy Coombs portray the leading roles in this photoplay adaptation of the famous French drama. The Battle of Fontenoy, one of the awe-inspiring incidents.

Francis Marion "The Swamp Fox"

In Three Parts

The great Revolutionary General's raids against the British, his rescue of Gates from the English, and other famous adventures, fill this with stirring action. Guy Coombs and Marguerite Courtot in leading roles.

The Other Half of the Note

In Three Parts

Irene Boyle and Robert Ellis are the stars who portray the principal roles in this story of the combat waged between Secret Service detectives and smugglers.

The Death Sign at High Noon

In Three Parts

A classic of the West. The Indians' attack upon the settlement and a minister's superb sacrifice to save his flock make this of absorbing interest.

THE EXPOSURE OF THE Delaware Whipping Post

A Remarkable 3 Reel Drama

A defense of the lash as a crime preventive and a defiance to the Sentimentalists who would abolish it. The State of Delaware is the only State in the Union that whips its criminals at public whipping posts, and also pillories them.

It has done this ever since it became a State. There have been periodical waves of agitation throughout the Nation for the abolition of these forms of punishment. The most violent wave of this kind culminated recently in a demand before Congress for Federal action compelling Delaware to discontinue its whipping post.

Very attractive line of advertising matter. One, three and six sheets; heralds, photos, slides, etc. Don't delay to procure this money-making feature. Ready for immediate shipment.

ANITA'S TRIUMPH IN THE OPERA "MIGNON"

PUBLICITY

One, Three and Six Sheet Posters,
Heralds, Photos,
Slides, Etc.

Robert, a bank clerk, is entrusted with a large sum of money. He is followed by a fellow clerk, robbed and thrown into a sewer to cover all trace of the crime. After many days of wandering through the darkness underground, he finds an opening and staggers out, an insane man, and is taken to an asylum, where he remains many months. His former sweetheart, who has become a celebrated prima donna, comes to sing to the inmates her famous opera, "Mignon," and her voice restores to Robert his lost memory. Through a cigarette case which she had given Robert she locates the criminal and he receives his just rewards.

IN THREE REELS

AMBROSIO AMERICAN CO.

15 East 26th Street New York City

As usual, this week's release of Our Mutual Girl is full of the interesting intimacies of the moment.

She meets Katherine B. Davis—famous Commissioner of Correction of New York—the woman directly in charge of the City Prison on Blackwell's Island.

You go with Our Mutual Girl and Miss Davis to help the burglar's sister out of prison,—see with her things of vital interest that it would be next to impossible for you to see yourself.

This reel like those it follows is full of intensely dramatic, but very real things.

Somehow when you see Our Mutual Girl it is like being yourself a part of the life she lives.

It is this quality of intimate reality that has given to Our Mutual Girl series something no other moving picture ever had,—something that gets hold of people the first time they see the picture and strengthens its hold with every successive release.

When you spend your money advertising Our Mutual Girl pictures you are not spending it for a single release.

Every effort you make on one reel helps to build a permanent clientele for your theatre.

Our Mutual Girl series is only one part of the Mutual service, which helps to make a moving picture "fan" out of the most random patron.

This series is included in the Regular Service for which there is no extra charge.

It is just one indication of the fact that the Mutual Film Corporation considers the exhibitor's interest as its interest—

That its every effort is not only toward bringing money to the box office once, but sending customers away from the theatre feeling that they want to come again.

Facts and Comments

THE notion that motion pictures hurt the eye, we thought was by this time well-nigh exploded. If even a small portion of what the alarmists predicted some years ago had come true, a very large portion of our population would by this time be hopelessly blind. Though alarmist articles of this sort are now no longer regarded seriously, there is an occasional revival of the old cry. Recently a paper in Texas devoted considerable editorial thunder to denouncing motion pictures as a menace to sight. The writer suggests that all reels over thirty days old be discarded entirely, and that there should be not less than three minutes intermission between reels. There are thousands upon thousands of reels over thirty days old in use all over the world, and they impose no strain upon the eyes whatever. Intermissions of three minutes after every thousand feet were the custom some time ago; nowadays it is nothing unusual to run a four-reel feature without any intermission, and there has been nothing from the public except commendation. The large number of reviewers here and elsewhere have no trouble with their eyes, although the poor martyrs often have to look at as many as thirty thousand feet of film in one day. They do at times get a headache, which, however, is not traceable to the eyes, but rather to the cheapness of the stuff Fate compels them to look at.

PROTESTS against "snake-films" constantly find their way into the editorial mail-bag. A recent correspondent complains of snakes as aids to comic films. He asks this very just and pointed question: "Is it right or fair to throw a snake picture of that sort on a screen before numerous women and children without warning? In the case of women and children, the mere sight of a snake is sufficient to throw them into convulsions. It was a disgusting and loathsome spectacle. I saw several men get up and leave the house solely on that account. Are such things necessary?" We cannot see the necessity. It is difficult to understand just what connection there is between snakes and motion picture comedies. Whatever feelings the sight of a snake may evoke, there is no fun in the spectacle. There must be something wrong with a sense of humor which tries to find food for laughter in crawling serpents.

THE hearings on the Smith-Hughes Censor Bill before the House Committee on Education have been ordered printed, and thus will the arguments of the friends and of the opponents of the proposed measure be at the disposal of the public. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, in sending a representative to the committee, was actuated by the desire to have both sides of the question presented to Congress and to the public at large. We did not want it to appear to the legislators and to the public that there was no other side to the question than the side submitted and most ably submitted by the Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts. Producers and exhibitors who may by this time have awakened to the fact that the issues involved are of the utmost importance to the industry, now have a chance to help in distributing and circulating the printed report. Copies of it may be obtained free of charge on application to James L. Fort, Clerk of the House Committee on Education, Washington, D. C., or by communicating with the office of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD. The arguments against censorship will be found in concise form. That part of the report which shows how the members of the committee looked upon the question is especially interesting and instructive. At a later hearing before the same committee, attorneys for two of the organized groups of producers also appeared before the committee and submitted strong and eloquent arguments against the bill. It is not likely that this bill will become a law at the present session of Congress, because national affairs of pressing importance now overshadow all matters of routine legislation. The fight, however, is by no means ended. It behooves us all to watch any further attempt of the misguided advocates of censorship.

WE take special pleasure in commending the action of a New England exhibitor, whose policy is to enlist the friendship of the best classes in the community where he has his theater. He was requested by the Ladies' Civic League of the city to appear before them and explain how pictures were made, and, in fact, all about pictures, including the question of censorship. He was quick to comply with the ladies' request, and not only spoke himself, but called upon THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD to help. All possible aid was given. Our exhibitor occupies an enviable place in his community. There is no surer way of disarming criticism than taking your public into your confidence.

The Demand for Variety

By W. Stephen Bush

THE curious notion that motion pictures are chiefly intended for the tired business man and for the transient passer-by, who have neither the time nor the inclination nor the perhaps the price to see a regular play, is still an article of faith with many of the brethren in the industry. They cannot help praising and admiring the great multiple reel features which have lifted the production of motion pictures into the rank of a true art with an enviable future, but they are greatly distressed over the mental agonies of the man who goes into a motion picture theater and happens to arrive in the middle of a feature. He will either have to miss part of the show entirely or see the first reel after the fourth. In either case he appars to our friends a terribly abused man.

"Let us," our friends say, "standardize our art and industry by the special needs of the tired business man or the occasional visitor, who more likely than not is in somewhat of a hurry." For the sake of these two types of motion picture patrons our friends would scarcely hesitate to return to the day of the single reel, when tragedy and comedy were "split" on a thousand feet and sometimes on even less than that.

You may say that the motion picture is an art whose limits even our utmost skill and our happiest inspirations are failing to explore; you may maintain that the multiple reel of the genuine feature grade has helped to attract a public, which up to then had looked down upon the picture; you may point out that the great film classics have opened a thousand new theaters to the producer of quality; you may try to emphasize the fact that the splendid new blood which is coming into the art has been attracted by the possibilities of the feature. Our friends will say: "What has all this to do with the imperative demand for variety without which the men who come to the theater in a hurry are likely to withdraw their valuable support."

This line of reasoning it seems to me is distinctly a thing of the past; the echo of a day which has vanished forever.

No one sympathizes with the tired business man more than I do, and no one recognizes the value of variety more quickly than I do, but I am not quite prepared to set all my clocks by the particular needs and wishes of just one kind of patrons. Who will contend seriously that the man who comes to the motion picture theater for just half an hour or so constitutes anything like the majority of the regular patrons of the motion picture theater? The motion picture has some time ago outgrown that humble stage, when it was taken seriously by but few. Today the picture is taken seriously everywhere. It is paralleling the stage and often surpassing and improving upon it. There is scarcely a name among the world's lights in the drama and in literature but has been made tributary to the screen. There is no civilized country but its foremost exponents of the art of acting have courted the glories and advantages of the motion picture camera.

We may well doubt the further progress of the picture if the very first step on the ladder which leads upward is to be retraced because of the casual delectation of the man who only has thirty minutes to spend at the theater. The motion picture is the most catholic of amusements, it is capable of furnishing variety to the degree of satiety, but it is capable of other and greater things as well. An art which has, for instance, visualized the deep spiritual strain in Browning with the same ease it displayed in depicting the spectacular is destined to do more than merely fill out a half hour with the pleasures of variety.

Even in the days of the single reel, when artistic aims and ambitions were not any too high, producers were not afraid to venture on great subjects; now in the days of the new masters no subject is too vast or too intricate for the screen and splendid adaptations vie with magnificent original conceptions. We certainly will not break up or neglect and abandon what we have so far accomplished and what the future bids fair to increase and multiply merely for the sake of ministering exclusively to the demand for variety.

While we are on this subject would it not be well to toss overboard this most hideous of all bromides: "The ordinary moving picture audience." Newspapers and magazines and debating clubs and careless talkers generally are ever ready with this phrase, but no one has been found bold enough to attempt a definition. "The ordinary moving picture audience." What arrant and grating nonsense and what a snobbery! The ordinary moving picture audience in our day is no different in essentials from any other "ordinary" American audience. The ordinary moving picture audience is in point of intelligence and the power to discriminate between good quality and inferior productions the peer of the best audience anywhere. The "ordinary" moving picture audience is capable of assaying to a nicety the offerings provided by the management.

Every time a producer has come before our public with a truly great film, appreciation has been instantaneous. What better evidence do we want to prove that the great American public and not any tagged or ticketed fraction thereof has constituted and will continue to constitute the audiences of the screen.

I hope that nothing in this article will be construed as a plea against either the single reel or against the charm of variety. Different theaters will have different audiences. The short entertainment with a popular price will never go out of fashion. Nor will it ever stand in the way of the grander development of the industry. There will be a healthy growth in every part of the great Tree of Kinematography and the little branches will be as much part of the tree as the larger ones.

It must be evident to any careful observer that the development of the great feature with an original screen-theme has just begun and that its progress will bring us an entertainment the like of which has never been known in the world's history of amusements. The adaptation of popular plays will probably go on while there will be popular plays, but it is altogether likely that the playwright of the future will pay the closest attention to the screen value of his dramatic inventions. He will probably weigh the advantages which the screen offers him as a medium of appealing to the world as an audience as against the limited prospects of the speaking stage. It is plain that the big theme can only be told effectively in multiple reels. A big theme thus effectively told challenges the old conventional stage not only in the matter of a greater facility of expression and an infinitely greater originality, but it will need no translation or adaptation for other countries and for other nations. The loss of moral values, dramatic strength or literary beauty in all translations is notorious. In a creation on the films there is no possibility of such a loss. The author will naturally write not from the French or the German or the American point of view, but with his eyes fixed on humanity for an audience. We have had promising glimpses of this new international film-play, and all our progress in big things seems to lie along such lines.

Picturing Thought

By Louis Reeves Harrison

"IT is easy to build castles in the air; one may spend whole days in that seductive occupation; and it is almost equally easy to lay one brick upon another without giving thought to anything except the mortar between them. But he is master of the world who can both plan and achieve, who keeps his plans within bounds of the achievable, and brings his achievements up to the requirements of his plans. His castles are projected in Spain, but he sees them reproduced, perhaps after long years, from the solid ground before his eyes." So says Bliss Carmen.

It is beautiful to have ideals and it is profitable to so materialize them in moving pictures that they shall delight millions of picture fans, but there are few men who embrace within themselves the creative imagination such as Bliss Carmen describes, in addition to constructive knowledge necessary to produce great film representations. Rather is the drift to combination of author and producer, one providing the best that grows in the garden of his imagination, the other translating it into action, the whole constituting what we are beginning to recognize as a distinct art, that of picturing not only movement but the thought behind the action, the impulse that makes movement possible.

Walter Prichard Eaton was among the many critics so deeply impressed by Tully's magnificent acting in "Paid in Full" that he was led to say of the drama, "A play that started hopefully as a social study was to be in the end nothing but the fulmination of a young dramatist trying to write a strong scene." Yet Eaton was puzzled, as were many other critics, for he admits later, "It may well be that the Captain is the most intricately human character in the play."

The Captain was, in truth, a diabolically accurate portrayal of man, in his unstable equilibrium, a complex of emotional impulse, fervent and intense, yet forever the scene of conflict between his better and his baser nature. The vibrant personality of this "intricately human" old Adam really dominated the whole play and furnished the keynote of every movement it contained. What were the thoughts behind all this action? The tragic conflict, deeper than the movements of characters, was one of human nature.

There is a bright side to the picturing of mental phases, quite as well as the tragic one I have used in illustration. Perhaps screen presentation may throw light upon those mysteries of the human mind which arise in sex relations. There are the inconsistencies of those we love, the God-bless-them creatures who wear such strange-looking clothes these days. We certainly love them, even when they rouge and powder to deceive us, feed us on mother's cooking set forth as their own to delude us, wear their tight skirts and open smiles to beguile us.

We certainly love them, else why do we step up to the altar and sheepishly swear away our consciences and go forth overcome by rice, old shoes and bewildering sense of doubt as to where we are at. Can any builder of castles in Spain for screen production portray what is passing in the minds of those Twentieth Century Angels and Ministers of Grace, who so devoutly long to attach "Mrs." to our names, before and after they wear a gold hoop on one of their fingers? Why are they so different? What mental process effects the transformation?

From the time that woman pushes a man's hair back from his forehead in supreme delight at being both engaged and in love, to the moment she begins to cast longing eyes on his best ties and figure up where he stands in the commercial world, she is a puzzle. She is an enigma to herself, unaware of why she dispels the very illusions she used to win a husband, though quite capable of reasoning out the effect of listening appreciatively while he brags of himself or preaches to her. She is a delightful mystery, shifting from simplicity to subtlety in the flash of an eye, quite worth the study and portrayal of creative and constructive genius.

Then there is man as he really is, not as a hero, nor as a villain, though he be the greatest comedio-tragedian in the star-sown universe! Who can picture his mental workings when he comes home swelled to the bursting point with what he has read in the papers and itching for a chance to expound on any subject suited to the display of his superior intellectual grasp? Who can do him justice? By force of circumstances the greatest of humbugs, he can put up so brave a front in time of stress and storm, fight so game a battle against superior odds in an emergency, that his mental construction is well worth analysis.

I would not eliminate, or even replace, melodrama, but, for those of us not ordinarily engaged in shooting at one another or falling over cliffs, it would be refreshing now and then to view a cardinal study of Nature's anomaly, man, and her greatest mystery, woman, in their varied mental phases. It would be cheering to have the light of creative and constructive genius shed on subjects and characteristics nearest and dearest to common humankind. It is in thought-picturing that the photo-drama may set forth life-like denotements of forceful personalities, tensely alive, strenuous in emotional revelation. It would almost seem, at this stage of development, as though it is with the complex character of present existence that the dramatist, as a true interpreter of life, has to deal.

This may be called into question. The quality of any artistic production is very much a matter of the temperament or temperaments through which it filters, but it seems to be a better calling for the screen dramatist to give his temperament natural expression on subjects with which he is familiar than for him to renovate the soiled linen of old stage plays or repair the reputations of dramatic works in which the public is no longer interested. If a man really loves to write plays, he will write according to his opportunities for a while, but it is only a question of time when he will write according to his inspiration. He is a servant to his profession when he merely deals with what is past and gone—he will be master of his fate when he can tell us in storied form something interesting about the vital truths of today.

If it is so that the dramatist, as a true interpreter of life, has to deal with the complex character of present existence, it becomes an important part of his role to go deeper than showing us what people do or what they say. It is the finest sort of art in novel writing to indicate through action approximately what is passing through the mind of the actor, and it is equally fine, though less difficult, to actually portray thought on the screen in much the same way, the advantage being that there is no confusing intervention of words in the latter case. We want to get beneath the husk of action and character into motive in dramas of large human concern, those dealing sincerely and naturally with normal human existence. It may be in picturing thought that this form of imaginative interpretation will reach a development which will finally establish its rank on a plane with the older arts of expression, their equal in scope, their peer in direct appeal.

Cabiria.

Italia's Big New Twelve-Part Spectacular Masterpiece, a Worthy Successor to Illustrious Predecessors.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS is the day of the new masters. We are witnessing a new style in dramatic kinematography. Within the last four weeks there have been splendid manifestations of a new art on the screen. The skill and the inspiration of the director, the skill and the patient striving of the camera man, a deep and conscientious study of screen possibilities, a new school of actors who have fathomed the mysteries of unspoken language—all these elements working toward the harmony of the whole have in part been responsible for the new school, which is opening the eyes of the world. I have not mentioned the keystone of the success of the new art in this hasty enumeration. The keystone is the story written for the screen and for the screen alone. The freest adaptation imposes restraints on the producer. In the novel we are confronted by the problem of what to leave out and what to leave in, in the adaptation of the speaking stage we are still in the bonds of tradition. How different is the free untrammelled flight of the Muse of the Screen. She conquers every obstacle which is insurmountable to pen or stage.

In Cabiria a genius furnishes the theme—Gabriel d' Annunzio. He wrote the story directly for the screen. Nobly does the screen respond to every touch of the gifted hand. D'Annunzio is a very wizard of description. In this film-drama his thoughts and images stand forth as vividly as the summer landscape in a prolonged flash of lightning. The tremendous moral of the play, the keenly dramatic and the broadly humorous, the historic facts—are all absorbed in an incredibly short time. Of course the spectacular features help—with all due respect to its classic predecessors I must confess that in the portrayal of the spectacular this film creates new records. The torrent of fiery flakes, the mouth of the volcano a veritable furnace of the Inferno, spewing forth unceasing sheets of fire, the rush of the fugitives lit up by a ruddy glow which half conceals and half reveals, the temple of Moloch with its worshippers and its fearful rites, the hero of Carthage passing over the Alps, the siege of Carthage, the burning of the ships which the aged Archimedes fought with the power of the sun, all these and a hundred other marvels of the spectacular make this feature pre-eminent among the spectacular successes in all the history of spectacles. It is true that the classic theme always carries the spectacular element best and this advantage the producer has pressed to the limit.

It would be a grave mistake however, to emphasize the spectacular in this film above the dramatic. The spectacular is all the more impressive because an artistic masterhand has subordinated it to the dramatic and poetic moments of the play.

"Cabiria" is the name of the child whose strange salvation after cruel perils forms the skeleton of the story. The plot takes us to the days when the dominion of Rome was threatened by the growing power of Carthage. To this day the site of Carthage has remained more or less of a mystery. We know that the plough of the Roman conqueror passed over the site of the fated city, but no mortal even in our day knows where the site is. Carthage magnificently situated on the Northern coast of Africa was sending her ships and her soldiers into every part of the world, her trade and the martial spirit of her people made her a conquering nation. At last she threw the gauntlet down and challenged Rome. Rome in later years achieved a magnificence never equalled in the chronicles of man, but at no time in her career was she as rugged, as noble and as brav as in the third century before the Christian era, when the hordes of Carthage set their foot on her sacred soil. In the midst of this struggle between two nations and two civilizations the little girl Cabiria was born in Italy of noble parents. The city in which her parents lived was overwhelmed by a fearful eruption of a volcano and when the wretched survivors looked about themselves even as Nature seemed at last to have tired of her anger, little Cabiria could not be found. She was believed to have perished in the general destruction. Such however, was not the case. She and others were captured in their flight—Phoenician pirates brought them into the slave market at Carthage. She was with her nurse and the man who bought Cabiria also took the little girl's faithful nurse Croessa. The sweetness and purity of the child attracted the notice of the High Priest of Moloch, the horrible idol to whom little children were sacrificed. He places little Cabiria with the children in the temple where they are being prepared for sacrifice. In spite of all the protests of Croessa little Cabiria is selected as a victim for the next day of sacrifice. Croessa in despair looks about for means of rescuing the little child. Fulvius a Roman patrician and his slave, a huge black, named Maciste are wandering about the outer temple when Croessa begs them to save Cabiria, giving the Roman a charm which she promises will never let him perish.

The Queen's Dream of Love.

The Death of Sophonisba.

Just as in the midst of the worshippers in the temple little Cabiria is offered to Moloch the monster that glows and shines and devours, Fulvius and Maciste defy the priests by seizing the child in the moment of its supremest peril. They flee and the black slave escaping offers the child to the queen into whose protection Cabiria is now commended. She grows up to be a beautiful young woman. In the meantime the arms of Carthage have suffered defeat after defeat, the noble Scipio has risen up to grapple with the armies of Carthage and the mighty Hannibal the hero and the hope of Carthage perishes. The priests seeking to divine the cause of the anger of their gods discover that a victim has been hidden from Moloch, hence the impending destruction of Carthage and her people. Cabiria is found and her sacrifice demanded by the priests. How Cabiria is saved again and finally re-united to her parents and joined in wedlock to Fulvius who has dared so much for her is the theme of the last part.

I have only mentioned the more prominent parts of the story, which has many episodes too numerous for detailed recital here. I must at least allude to the tragicomic part of Maciste and the wine-merchant in whose shop so many of the strange adventures of the knight and his servant took pace.

Summing up it may well be said that Cabiria ranks in the very first flight of the masterpieces of kinematographic art. Nor must I omit a tribute to Italy, the country which has given us all our greatest classics in films. Those of us who remember the Italia Company's first ambitious effort "The Fall of Troy" will be in a good position of judging of the giant's strides with which the art is approaching its summit. "The Fall of Troy" was considered a new departure in 1910, four years later it is eclipsed by Cabiria. Who knows what the next four years may bring?

"In Search of the Castaways."

Five Reels. The World's Special Films.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THERE is enough of the boy left in most of us to be interested in all the romantic and improbable tales of Jules Verne. The World's Special Film Corporation has presented in five parts a filmed version of "The Children of Captain Grant," under the title of "In Search of the Castaways."

Scene from "In Search of the Castaways" (World Special).

The cast of actors and actresses is composed of members of many well-known artists attached to Parisian theaters. There is plenty of action in the film and the incidents of a sensational nature are not lacking. Undoubtedly, the best actor in the cast is Mons. Daragnan, who gave a fine artistic rendering of the dual role of Ayrton and Ben Joyce. Comic situations are freely interspersed with the adventures in which this story abounds. Most of the comedy is supplied by the younger of the Grant children and by Mons. Delamercie, who played the part of the funny geographer, Jacques Paganel, with evident relish.

The film is rich in attempts at realism and the outdoor settings are, without exception, well chosen and many of them quite impressive. The photography is good throughout. Perhaps here and there the acting and the groupings especially might be less obviously theatrical and stagy, but then that is a fault in the fiction of Jules Verne himself and the adapters are less to blame.

"The Horrors of War."

A Three Part Adaptation of Goeffroy's Famous Story "The Apprentice"—Released by the Leading Players.

THE need for a striking title is largely responsible for the use of this one, "The Horrors of War," over an adaptation of Gustave Geoffroy's interesting story "The Apprentice", which has its beginnings in the seige of Paris in 1870 and relates many sanguinary episodes of the period. For the purposes of his narrative Geoffroy takes the misfortunes of the family, Pommier—father, mother, two sons and two daughters. The subject is in three parts and is released by the Leading Players Film Corporation.

The first reel gives many warlike scenes—the marching of troops, the camp of the soldiers and devastation of war. Interspersed with these are scenes of the home life of the Pommiers, the family about the frugal board, the leave taking as the men go forth to the defense of the embattled city. Then comes the civil war in which the citizens without respect to sex engage in a fierce but brief struggle with the forces of the government. There are the barricades, the burning of the city by petroleuse, that desecration of Pere Lachaise cemetery when tombs were destroyed and the corpses of the dead strewn about in horrible ghastliness.

Scene from "The Horrors of War" (Leading Players).

It is in these scenes that the mother Pommier goes forth to find her sons who have been killed and narrowly escapes execution.

When peace has been restored the once industrious Pommier becomes a dissolute drunkard, the result of the loss of his sons, and the burden of supporting the family falls upon little Cecile, who is an apprentice to a dressmaker. At first she is assisted by her sister Celine, but the sister elopes with her lover and Cecile is left alone in her struggle. The father continues to drink and eventually dies from the effects of over-indulgence. Then Celine returns, a pitiable wreck of her former self. But it is not for long, for the old life is too quiet for her and she again runs away. The shock kills the mother, already weakened by sorrow and privation, leaving poor little Cecile, the apprentice, to pursue her way alone.

A notable cast was engaged for the portrayal of this story. M. Duquesne of the Vaudeville theater, Paris, took the part of Father Pommier; M. Bosc and M. Mardor of the Antoine and the Vaudeville theater were Jean and Justin Pommier, the sons; Madeleine Grandjean of the Ambigu theater was the mother; Marise Dauvray of the Cinema theater, Celine, and beautiful Mlle. Renee Sylvaire of the Renaissance theater was Cecile.

Photography and acting is splendid throughout this subject, which is a particularly timely one.

A CORRECTION.

On page 874 of the issue dated May 9 a synopsis of the Leading Players Film Corporation's three-part picture entitled "The Calvary of a Mother" was published. Since this story was printed the company has changed the name of the subject to "Horrors of War." Exhibitors will please observe the change in title.

"The Good-for-Nothing."

Four Part Comedy Drama by Essanay, with G. M. Anderson in a New Role.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

G. M. ANDERSON and the Essanay Western Company at Niles, Cal., have provided not only a surprise but a strong photodrama in "The Good-For-Nothing," a four-reel subject that will be released June 8. The surprise will be sprung at the very outset; for Mr. Anderson has shed his "Broncho" clothes, as have all his associates, and appears as the spoiled younger son of a wealthy broker.

It is a long time since Mr. Anderson has been seen without chaps or a ponderous revolver encased in holster; but the contrast in this instance does not betray any lack of easy manners or self poise on his part. As the gay, young sport, togged in most approved claw-hammer garb and out for a good time with a bevy of fair chorus damsels, he carries the part with all the abandon and dash of a Broadway "Willie" boy.

But do not deceive yourselves. Mr. Anderson does not go through the mazes of these four reels without a visit to his beloved West. He makes it the far off country where the prodigal son reaps the harvest of his follies, and he makes it also the El Dorado that furnishes wealth in the end. But while "Broncho Billy" is not permitted to appear in person, one can catch glimpses of him now and then in spirit, especially in that scene where he rescues the sick Indian from a band of cowboys who are about to hang him.

Many a good laugh will be raised by Mr. Anderson's impersonation of the good-for-nothing Gilbert Sterling. Through all the waywardness and consequent hard luck of the spendthrift, there is an audacious good humor and buoyant good nature that will appeal to everyone—in themselves an earnest of the better self that will dominate his character some day. The tenderness shown his heartbroken mother, when his father expels him from the home which he has forfeited by his excesses, somehow raises the hope that the good in him will finally prevail. The loyalty and affection borne him by his father's gentle old clerk also point to the same end.

There are several very affecting scenes in this photodrama, notably the one showing the discovery of the Good-for-Nothing's parents in the almshouse. His delight and pity on finding them are so sympathetically expressed that one is moved to tears. The scene between him and his brother Ralph, who had cast them into a friendless world, stands out in powerful contrast.

The cast has been capably sustained throughout. The old clerk is made one of the most prominent roles by Victor Potel. The delicate shading of this fine character is worthy of discriminating praise. Few will recognize in the make-up of the old clerk Slippery Slim or Snicklefritz in "Pie for Sophie." The chasm between the broad farce comedy of the Snicklefritz and Slippery Slim types and the gentle pathos of the loyal old man in "The Good-for-Nothing" is wide; but Mr. Potel has bridged it by artistic conception and subdued acting. Another well-drawn character is that of the old broker, John Sterling, by Carl Stockdale. Ralph Sterling, the heartless brother of the "Good-for-Nothing," is well represented by Lee Willard.

John Sterling, an aged, wealthy broker, has two sons, Ralph and Gilbert. Ralph is ambitious to be wealthy and assists his father in the business of the firm; Gilbert is a sower of wild oats and thinks only of pleasure. To raise funds, he signs numerous promissory notes which find their way to his father for payment. In addition, he drinks to excess, and his follies culminate in his expulsion from the parental home. Ralph is secretly pleased at Gilbert's misfortune, and still more so when he is made the sole partner of his father.

Gilbert goes out to the West to better his fortunes, but they sink to the lowest ebb. Through it all his sunny disposition and kind heart never forsake him. One day he discovers a sick Indian by the wayside and carries him to his own room in the hotel. A doctor is brought to the bedside and pronounces the case a malignant attack of smallpox. The hotelkeeper is seized with panic and rushes off for disinfecting powders. On his way to the store he meets a band of cowboys and tells his story. The cowboys rush to the hotel and drag the sick Indian into the open. They are about to hang him when Gilbert appears and puts them to flight.

Once more the Indian is carried to the hotel by Gilbert, who immediately sets out again for the doctor's home and forces him to attend to the case at pistol point. It is found on their return to the hotel that the Indian is in death throes. The doctor is then allowed to depart and Gilbert watches at the death bed alone. Before expiring, the Indian gives him his claim to a gold mine. Time passes, and Gilbert finds himself a millionaire.

Away in the East great changes had taken place in the fortunes of John Sterling, the broker. His son Ralph was instrumental in forcing him into bankruptcy, and, in their hour of need, refused to assist his parents. Without a roof to cover them and without bread they are forced to take refuge in the almshouse.

One day, in the midst of his busy prosperity, Gilbert receives a letter from his father's old clerk telling him of the woes of his parents and of Ralph's ingratitude. A few days elapse and he is in the old home city. There he recovers his parents and succeeds in breaking his unfilial brother, Ralph. Then, at the entreaty of his mother, he forgives Ralph, and the old Sterling firm once more embarks in business, under the title of John Sterling & Sons, with the name of the loyal old clerk underneath as general manager.

ADAPTED from one of the "Tales of My Landlord," by Sir Walter Scott, "Heart of Midlothian" is based on the injustice of preserving old laws that have little else to recommend them than their age, and that work great wrong where they should stand for what is right in their enforcement. The particular law in this case was a Scottish statute enacted 1690, as follows:

> ". . . . any woman who shall have concealed her condition and shall not be able to show that she called for help at the birth, in case that the child shall be found dead or missing, shall be deemed and found guilty of the murder thereof . . . and shall sustain the pains of law accordingly."

The screen story is a powerful one, presenting every phase of the novel worth retaining and rejecting the superfluous to which the famous Scottish novelist and poet was occasionally addicted, especially in his prose works. It is beautiful in setting, strong in types chosen, and so admirable is the construction that we are carried up to the high points by gentle degrees, without forcing or attempt at melodrama. It is a clean presentation of a story, probably better than the original in many respects, and so gradual in its development that we find ourselves in strong sympathy with true-hearted Jeanne, who could not lie to save her sister, but who could brave all things, dare all things, do all things to prevent that sister's ignominious execution.

Most fortunate is the type selected for "Jeanne Dean." She is without the exaggerations and theatricalisms that mar the performance of Miss Morris as "Effie." She is serenly simple in appearance, but there is a depth and sincerity in her impersonations that fascinates us from the moment Jeanne takes off her shoes at the beginning of her long tramp to London, that she may save them for the city, to the moment, after many perilous adventures, she reaches the presence of the Queen and pleads for her sister's life.

Charm of treatment and diversity of incident are contributing factors in a photodrama of five reels, but the success of the play depends very largely upon the subject chosen. It cannot be trivial. It must be strong enough to carry sustained interest to the end. The precious thing is to engage sympathetic feeling at the earliest possible moment and intensify it as the principal character approaches the desired end. Exactly this is done in "Heart of Midlothian."

The opening scenes clarify the situation of Effie without making it prominent, and the development is one of true dramatic action up to the time Jeanne is called upon in court to lie for her sister and refuses from utter inability to adjust her conscience to the call of her natural sympathies. She is the incarnation of truth, but we feel that she might have strained a point under the circumstances until her great nobility of character is shown by her subsequent conduct.

The theme in a general way suggests what is now going on in our midst. The attack on old laws; upon the ability and integrity of those who make and enforce laws; upon all that is inequity masking as justice, is going on actively at the present day. Hence it is that the deep-lying purpose behind this photodrama is wholly in accord with progressive ideals of our present generation.

With a strong theme, admirable characterization; abundance of dramatic incident and setting of great beauty, "Heart of Midlothian" should score a decided success.

LITTLE MARY A STANDEE AT "TESS."

Miss Mary Pickford saw herself in her greatest success, "Tess of the Storm Country," produced by the Famous Players Film Company, for the first time recently at Loew's Circle Theater. In spite of the rain the crowd was so great that several hundred admirers of the dainty star were "locked out," and when Miss Pickford arrived she couldn't even buy her way in. Anxious to see the picture that the critics had unanimously termed her greatest effort, she boldly told the doorman she was Mary Pickford, and asked to be admitted. The doorman's eyes widened perceptibly, but he called the manager, Mr. Oppenheimer, who instantly recognized the star and admitted her and the party accompanying her, including her mother, a young-appearing little woman, intensely interested in her remarkable daughter and her phenomenal talent.

Once the party was inside the theater, they found hardly room to stand—much less to sit down. "Little Mary" had difficulty in seeing over the heads of people standing in front of her, until Mr. Oppenheimer brought her a chair to stand upon. Judging from her inimitable and famous expression, Miss Pickford enjoyed the picture almost as much as did the audience—but, unlike the others, she did not applaud.

A Six-Part Hefco Film—An Italian Setting with Dustin Farnum in the Lead Role.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THERE are many charming bits of scenery in this film. The world has few regions more bewitchingly beautiful than the maritime Alps between the southern coast of France and the north of Italy. We get glimpses of the wonderful "chateau country" and of the eternal glories south of the Alps. There are views of the ever attractive Lake Como and fleeting portrayals of French and Italian cities. The list of performers is a formidable one, led by Dustin Farnum, who is no stranger to the camera. The rest of the actors and actresses are all well known on the speaking stage, and acquitted themselves well, though there were unmistakable evidences of a lack of camera experience.

Brown Pawns His Watch to Buy a Dinner for Molly.

The story has some dramatic value and some really comic situations, but the direction has not made the most of either. The line of least resistance led the producer into inordinate padding; what might have made an excellent two-reel feature has been expanded into more than six thousand feet. No audience will fail to recognize that fact, whether it is an audience in a first-class theater or in a house of less pretentious character. Motion picture patrons are perhaps spoiled with costly realism; in automobile accidents they have been led to expect "the best"; in scenes showing attacks and rescues, and in all desperate adventures, they look for accurate detail and for strict adherence to probabilities. Judged by these standards the burning up of the automobile and the scenes in the den of the Apaches are unquestionably below par.

The most serious defect in the pictures is the uncertain quality of the photography. In some scenes, especially those showing the trip to Northern Italy by way of the Col de Tenda, the photography is excellent, while in many others it is shockingly poor. On the whole, the photography is unsatisfactory, a rare blemish nowadays, even in ordinary releases, and almost unheard of in feature productions. The titles are very good and help the picture over many a gaping hiatus. It would be well perhaps to translate some of the Italian documents, which lend such an air of genuineness to the latter part of the picture.

In the Hands of London Crooks.

An Apex Five-Reel Offering That Is a Thriller, Yet Follows the Best Traditions of Motion Picture Art.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

IT is often hard to say just why a given picture interests. There are several perfect reasons why this offering by Apex, "In the Hands of London Crooks," is sure to prove a fine entertainer and even a popular hit. It has liveliness and sense of freshness. It is filled with interesting human types many of which are drawn with a skill and sympathy that suggest volumes, making the whole full of hints, full of the undertones of life like a busy street. Then the backgrounds are as rich in things that amplify the story and provide an atmosphere always substantially explaining how it comes that its human characters are what they are. It tells a romance not a story of actual life; there are no sordid details in it and nothing offensive. Its very attractiveness comes largely from the fact that, from first to last, it is making clear to us how pleasant it is to sow wild oats and yet how expensive to the sower and to his relatives. It keeps its hero pleasing and makes us see how his character, strengthened by experiences, becomes at the close able to overcome his enemies. The plot and incidents are not new in themselves; but are made convincing enough and the whole is most certainly likable.

In an excellent opening scene we are introduced to a high-toned swindler. Captain Bland, quite a slick article, who is planning to "trim" an unsophisticated young son of Sir James Linley who has lately come to town with money to spend. Frank Linley is affable and has a whole hearted desire to taste life and know it. He makes friends too easily; but Bland makes himself affable and has a whole Frank behind the scenes to where a pugilist is training. This incident wouldn't be half so noteworthy if the prize fighter, his trainer and his friends hadn't seemed to be just what they wanted to represent and first-class actors too. It is mighty interesting to watch how they behave to Frank and to each other. Bland's object is to get Frank interested and have him put up a large sum on the fighter and then to bribe all concerned to "throw" the fight. This happens; but a good stiff match is pictured before the champion gets a fall and pretends to take the count.

Outside Influence Winning Over Home Influence.

Frank pays up, smiling, and Bland lays another trap to get the rest of his money. The decoy this time is a pretty dancer. No one will blame Frank for falling in love with this woman. It is all as natural and as pleasant as real life. The scenes around it are graceful and convincing and, as in the prize fight, there is a good deal of suspense when Delilah the dancer takes Frank to a gambling house that the police are ready to raid. Frank gets his picture in the morning papers and his father, Sir James, a dear old man, delightfully acted, comes to town, finds that his son has been indiscreet, yet half enjoys the boy's frank confession, and leaves a check with him to pay his I. O. U., held by Bland. Sir James doesn't know that the dancer is in the room behind the curtain. It is she who steals the young man's check book for Bland. Bland now has the signatures of both Sir James and of Frank who indorses the check. He takes these to one, "Nobby", a clever pen-man and has him make out a few checks which are easily turned into ready money. Nobby keeps the book.

The scene now shifts to the country home of the Linleys. It is the birthday of Frank's sister, Hilda, and one of her presents is a horse "Sunflower," which will have much to do with the denouement of the tale. During the party, on the lawn (all these scenes are charmingly chosen) the forged checks are brought to Sir James's attention. Frank is called apart and asked to explain. He is dumfounded and the old man believes him guilty—this is finely acted. Frank, cast out, departs; the old man has a stroke and dies. The son joins the army and goes to India, while the mansion is sold at auction to meet the debt to the bank.

We now have another fine picture. It is two years later and shows us just a corner of a hill battle in which Frank, now an officer, does a heroic act, saving his superior officer's life at great risk. He later comes home on leave just at the time of the royal ascat races, some clever views of which are shown, not leaving out the King's coach and other sights of much interest. Bland is betting against Sunflower and tries to dope the horse and succeeds in doping the jockey; but is shown up with the help of Delilah who has been supplanted in Bland's fancy and seeks revenge. The story is complicated by many good minor things, but is as clear as one could wish all through. The photography is beautiful and there is, broadly speaking, nothing in the picture that is not natural and convincing. A very entertaining offering.

FRITZI SCHEFF IS SCREENED BY UNIVERSAL.

For the first time in the dozen years which she has been a stage celebrity, Fritzi Scheff, today was the subject of the motion picture camera. Miss Scheff made her premiere as a film performer at the Hollywood studios of the Universal company on April 25. First she was an interested spectator of the staging of a scene by Al. E. Christie's Nestor comedy company. As Christie's camera man cranked away, Miss Scheff watched from just beyond the stage lines. While she watched, a second camera man from the Universal's Animated Weekly kept his camera clicking away with Miss Scheff as his subject. As the aftermath the famous little prima donna stood directly in front of the camera and registered a choice assortment of smiles.

Mme. Scheff at the Universal Studio, Los Angeles.

"It ez eenteresting—so-o eenteresting" declared Miss Scheff, with just a trace of an accent which is a blend between French and German. "There ez are where I had expected burlesque. An there ez no 'faking'—which I had expected. The furniture, the piano, the vases are real,—not ze painted scenery."

Miss Scheff is anxious to see herself as depicted by the films. "It ez seeing one's self as others see them" she declared. "W'en will ze films be completed—we'n can I see them?" She was told that it would take a couple of days to prepare the films for projection on the screen. "O-o-o, so long? You must hurry. I am so anxious to see them."

Jenkins Improves With Age.

By F. H. Richardson.

In March, 1913, I described the Jenkins' Phantoscope, a motion picture mechanism invented by Mr. C. Francis Jenkins, of Washington, D. C. At that time I pronounced the machine a successful home projector and predicted for it a wide market. Recently Mr. Jenkins invited me to come up to his hotel in New York City and inspect the improved Phantoscope. This I did with pleasure, since Mr. Jenkins is not only an able inventor, but also what we call a "good scout." The machine remains essentially unchanged. By this I mean, the general construction is practically the same as it was in 1913, but Mr. Jenkins has smoothed things up and improved both the appearance, and the performance of the machine to a considerable extent.

When I first viewed the machine, while an effective projector, it was somewhat crude in appearance. Now, however, it is a handsome looking machine which will not look out of place in the finest home or office. The resistance of the arc lamp has been improved and the intermittent movement has been changed and made materially better and stronger. A motor has also been added so that the machine is now motor-driven, although it can, of coure, be hand-driven if preferred. Taken altogether there is no question but that the Jenkins Phantoscope is a successful projector, either for home projection of for use in offices and by traveling salesmen. I am glad to be able to say this, for friend Jenkins has worked hard and is one of the old-timers in the moving picture art. He is likewise the "author" of a very neat motion picture camera which is also on the market and has many friends. I am of the opinion that the home projector field is just beginning to develop and that within the next five years there will be literally hundreds of thousands of machines of this type put into use.

The homes of the great majority of wealthy people will undoubtedly contain a projecting machine, and the time is fast approaching when the manufacturing institution which does not equip its salesmen and its local agents with an office projector will be out of date and behind the times. Looking at it from this point of view, and I think it is unquestionably the right point of view, one sees what an enormous field there is for projectors of this type. And it must be conceded that the Jenkins' Phantoscope is a pioneer in its class.

Send-off Porter and Ford.

Members of the Famous Players Organization Give Farewell Beefsteak Party for Directors Going Abroad.

Last Wednesday night, at the beefsteak parlor at Reisenweber's, twenty-three members of the Famous Players Film Company's organization gathered at a beefsteak dinner, given as a farewell tribute to Edwin S. Porter, technical director of the Famous Players, and Hugh Ford, who sailed Thursday morning, May 7, for a tour of Europe, during which they will produce a series of spectacular feature films. Those present besides the guests of the evening were President Adolph Zukor, Daniel Frohman, Directors J. Searle Dawley, Francis Powers, Thomas N. Heffron, Frederick A. Thompson, and James Kirkwood; B. P. Schulberg, head of the scenario department and advertising manager; Richard Murphy, Jack Stricker, August Kramer, William Reilly, representing the scenic and mechanical departments; Cameramen William Marshall, William Martinetti, Lyman H. Broening, and Emmet Williams; Al Lichtman, sales manager; Al Kaufman, studio manager; Frank Meyer, laboratory manager and Arthur Lehing.

The gathering was unique in many respects. It was the eve of the inception of one of the greatest international tours ever undertaken for film purposes. Mr. Porter, who has been responsible for so many notable successes of the Famous Players, was about to cross the ocean, seeking new worlds to conquer. Hugh Ford, distinguished producer of a long list of theatrical successes, after an exhaustive study of the camera and the screen, was undertaking his first practical film work. The subjects selected for production abroad are some of the most notable plays ever secured for the screen. So that altogether, as regards the Famous Players and the industry in general, the event was one with a great big E. Daniel Frohman acted as toastmaster, and his brilliant quick-wittedness contributed greatly.

Of course, there were speeches and orations and attempts at them; but the keynote of the evening was struck by Mr. Zukor when, in response to a toast to himself as the guiding power and spirit of the Famous Players' success, he arose and delivered, not a speech, but a heart-to-heart talk that will long be remembered by all those present. In simple words that were all synonyms for sincerity and earnestness he denied the statements, expressed throughout the evening, that the success of the Famous Players was directly due to him, and asserted that the achievements of the concern were due only to the harmony and co-operative spirit of the entire organization. He stated that the idea which he had conceived of presenting the famous players of the day in their foremost successes in motion pictures would never have been realized but for the splendid and faithful support of all the members of the Famous Players Film Company. For the first, and probably the last, time in the history of the Famous Players, everybody present contradicted its President.

Al Lichtman's recollection is that after the dinner, or as soon after as he can remember, the entire party escorted Messrs. Porter and Ford to the boat, but Schulberg told his wife the reason he stayed out until 5 o'clock was because the subway was flooded.

MUTUAL RELEASES COMING.

Among the Mutual releases announced for May are the following subjects: "The Deputy Sheriff's Star," by W. A. Frost, the well-known novelist; "The Miniature Portrait," by Frank E. Woods; "The Girl in the Shack," by Anita Loos and Russell E. Smith; "Golden Dross," by Russell E. Smith; "The Stolen Radium," by R. E. Smith; "The Soul of Honor," by Frank E. Woods; "The Horsewrangler," by George Pattullo; "The Rebellion of Kitty Belle," by the same author; "The Stolen Code," by Frank E. Woods; "A Pair of Cuffs," by Russell E. Smith; "The Song of the Shore," by M. T. Jacobs; "Dan Morgan's Way" and "Dad's Outlaws," both by Mary R. Mechtold; "Her Birthday Presents," by George Hennessey; "Silent Sandy," by H. R. Durant and R. E. Smith; "The Angel of the Gulch," by Peter Tomsen; "Nell's Eugenic Wedding," "The Man in the Couch," "The Last Drink of Whiskey," all comedies, by Anita Loos; "The Rose Bush of Memories," a two-reeler, by Russel E. Smith and others.

LECTURE ON MOTION PICTURES.

At the request of Samuel Kantor, an exhibitor at Norwalk, Conn., W. Stephen Bush appeared before the Ladies' Civic Club in that town on Friday, May 8th, to speak on motion pictures, their history and their uses. The session of the club was held in the Auditorium of the Library Building and was well attended despite the unfavorable weather. Mr. Bush gave a history of the motion picture and described its origin, its rise and its development at some length. He also went into the question of censorship, contending that no more censorship was needed than the healthy public sentiment of each community. He called attention to the evils and the ineffectiveness of all kinds of legal censorship. The ladies were thoroughly interested and showed, by their questions, how familiar they were with motion picture conditions. A vote of thanks was given to Mr. Kantor and to Mr. Bush.

FAITHFUL SERVICE HIGHLY APPRECIATED.

During a quiet little dinner recently at Los Angeles, Wm. N. Selig was the host, and Thomas Santschi, the actor, was the guest. It was a nice little modest affair, but had memories to make it notable. Just before the black coffee was brought in, Mr. Selig carelessly handed director Santschi, a broad, black ribbon which was folded with the well known Selig "Diamond S" brand, the gold outline of which held in its dazzling embrace, forty-two diamonds. This elegant souvenir signalled the completion of Thomas Santschi's fifth year with The Selig Polyscope Company, and a similar line of tokens will be presented to other faithfuls at the end of like periods with this picture corporation. The gentler sex will receive brooches of similar design.

Candler Theater Opening.

New Forty-Second Street House Has Auspicious Premiere —Gay Assemblage Applauds "Anthony and Cleopatra."

THE opening of the Candler Theater on Forty-second Street, near Broadway, New York City, on the evening of Thursday, May 7th, was a most auspicious event. The house itself was a veritable dream of loveliness and was materially beautified by the presence of a "first night" audience that has seldom been equaled for class and distinction in this city. Managers Sam Harris and Sol Bloom were present and were busy receiving congratulations. George Kleine, who is interested with Messrs. Harris and Bloom in this venture, was not present, nor was there a noticeable presence of motion picture men, but it was a highly appreciative audience and thoroughly enjoyed the big Kleine-Cines production, "Antony and Cleopatra," with which remarkable motion picture feature the theater was opened. The only picture men seen were Nicholas Power and John F. Skarrett, of the Nicholas Power Company, and several other members of the Power Company staff.

Considerable time was given the guests to wander about the house before the performance commenced, and they improved the chance to observe the beauties of decoration, of which there are many, and which were mentioned in last week's issue of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD. This showing of "Antony and Cleopatra" was the first time the production had been seen in New York. It was shown with appropriate music and amid a special stage setting of some pretentions. The unfolding of the pictured story was followed with the closest interest, and frequent applause greeted the more beautiful scenes.

Newspaper comment on the new theater and the picture in the morning papers of the following day was most liberal in point of space and high in praise of both theater and picture.

Candler Projection Room.

By F. H. Richardson.

By invitation of the management, the writer attended the opening of the Candler Theater, George Kleine's new New York house, Thursday evening, May 7th. It is with pleasure that I am able to say that its projection room shows a distinct advance in several items, though some of the hoary-headed old errors, which have obtained ever since operating rooms came into existence, are perpetrated in the new house. In the first place the room is high enough above the curtain to produce quite a decided keystone effect, which, of course, means some distortion, though not sufficient to be measurably objectionable. In the second place the room is reached by an iron ladder set against the wall, for which, with all due respect to the architect, there is no legitimate excuse. This cannot be called an ideal condition, for a narrow stairway could easily have been arranged.

The operating room walls are thoroughly fireproof, and the floor is of cement. The ceiling is 8½ feet in the clear, and the room is 8 x 16 feet, with 4 feet at one end partitioned off for the rewinding room, making the actual operating room 8 x 12. This is large enough for the two machines, but, of course, a little more space would not have come amiss. The ports are very well arranged indeed. The lens ports are about 15 inches square and are covered on the inside by a fireproof shutter two inches thick, having an opening just large enough to accommodate the light ray. This shutter slides in grooves and can be raised or lowered to suit the position of the machine, which eliminates the necessity of chopping a hole through the brick wall after the wall has been built.

The observation ports are similarly equipped and the port shutter can be raised or lowered so that the operator can stand up or sit down, and still have the port right in front of his eyes. But right here a mistake has been made, and one which will tend to injure the projection unless the mistake is remedied. The observation ports are only about five inches wide. Of course, the operator can do good work through such a port, but the main point is he won't. It is not in the nature of things that an operator will put the highest class work on the screen when he has to view his work through a port of this kind.

Ventilation for the operating room is provided by two vents, one 19 inches square, located immediately over the machines, and one round, 18 inches in diameter, located to one side of the machines, which gives more than ample vent flue area. In the front wall near the floor are two inlet openings, but these open directly into the auditorium, whereas they should be brought in from the outer air.

The rheostats are located on a shelf near the ceiling just under the round vent flue, so that the heat from them will go up and out, as it should.

The projection equipment consists of two Power's Six-A machines, and it must be conceded that these two mechanisms projected practically a rock steady picture on the opening night.

The picture is 16 feet 6 inches in width, and the screen is plain, white muslin. The light, on the opening night, was fairly brilliant, and was well handled by J. R. Gibbs, chief operator, and his assistant, Eddie Fitzgerald, both members of Local Union No. 306.

I was informed, at the end of the show, that the current strength would be increased on the following day, but even as it was no severe criticism could be made on the projection, particularly in view of the fact that it was the "first night."

In closing, I would sum this whole matter up by saying that, while the Candler operating room lacks considerable of being an ideal room, still it has points of excellence which are deserving of commendation. I sincerely hope that the time is not distant when those erecting buildings to be used for moving picture theaters will oblige their architects to call into consultation either a projection engineer or a thoroughly practical projection man, and thus avoid the mistakes, which, although have been pointed out time, time and time again, we still find perpetrated in practically every operating room built in New York City.

FRANK BATES.

A Pioneer Film Man.

FEW men are better known in the film market of the world than Frank Bates, who is at the head of the Eclipse Company. Mr. Bates has recently arrived in New York "to take soundings" as he puts it. The Eclipse has long had an enviable reputation for quality. Mr. Bates has come over from Europe to do what he can for the advancement of his company's interests. He will visit Chicago as part of his program while in this country, and expects to have a friendly conference with George Kleine, who represents the Eclipse in this country and has represented it here for years.

Frank Bates.

Mr. Bates has brought with him a filmed version of Marie Corelli's famous story, "Vendetta." In the opinion of experts, this feature, about six thousand feet in length, is one of the finest screen productions ever brought to this country. Another splendid Eclipse has just been released by Mr. Kleine, entitled, "Anne Boleyn." This production was reviewed in last week's MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

Mr. Bates is making his headquarters in Albert Blinkhorn's office in the World's Tower Building while in New York. He is renewing old acquaintances daily and closely studying conditions of the market here.

"In England," said Mr. Bates to a WORLD representative, "there have been great changes in the film market. The drift seems to be away from the really big, long features. The showman has overplayed himself paying fancy prices for big features and has surfeited his public with just that kind of offerings. To-day the average exhibitor in England looks askance at any feature above two reels in length. The single-reel and variety seem to be getting back into vogue. Just how long this condition will last it is hard to say, but there is no doubt that the rush of big exclusives over there has brought on a reaction which must spend itself before there can be another adjustment of conditions. The overproduction and the over-importation of multiple-reel features in England has been almost beyond belief. Conditions on the Continent resemble conditions in England with slight modifications, due to local causes. I am greatly impressed with your splendid market here, and I hope to be able to something which will secure to the Eclipse its proportionate share of the new growth. I have been received courteously and hospitably everywhere and I am greatly pleased and thankful. I do not know just how long I am going to stay; that, of course, to some extent, depends on circumstances and developments, but I am in no great hurry and will stay for about two weeks or more at any rate."

CHARLES ELDRIDGE RETURNS TO VITAGRAPH.

The veteran actor, Charles Eldridge, has returned to his first love, the Vitagraph Company, after nearly a year's service with the Universal Company. Mr. Eldridge has many admirers in and out of the profession who are always interested in him wherever he may be.

The Barrier of Ignorance.

Kalem Two-Reel Picture Brings Up a Human and Interesting Situation. Both Novel and Worth While.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

IF the picture reviewer could only assay his picture and accurately determine its amount of pay quality to the linear foot, his job might be more difficult; but his results would surely be more satisfactory. In this new picture, "The Barrier of Ignorance," soon to be released by the Kalem Company, there is equality, and the reviewer feels sure that it will be acceptable to all kinds of people. It tells a simple story clearly and deals with the lives of common people deeply and with a good deal of truth. It isn't "high-brow," but human. A "high brow" picture is every whit as reprehensible as a "low brow" picture. Both the typical "high brow" and the "low brow" have scrambled brains. What the rest of us want is something real; coin of the realm that will ring true on the counter. The bigger the denomination the better, but every penny is good. Not all of us have worked in a bank and not many have even seen a thousand dollar gold certificate; but what would we think of the poor creature that wouldn't recognize one if it came out of his pay envelope. We don't want to call "The Barrier of Ignorance" a thousand dollar note; but it is good money and substantial.

Scene from "The Barrier of Ignorance" (Kalem).

The central character of the story is a mountaineer so ignorant that he can't realize how much his daughter will be benefited by knowing how to read and write. He, himself can't do either and "what is good enough for him ought to be good enough for her," so he reasons. Now this idea that the picture presents to us rings true. We think that no other picture has so shown it and it surely is worth while. The love story its producer has utilized to "make it go with the people" does not seem to us wholly justified. Just such stories have been seen very often. Yet, although it isn't really significant or true, it is secondary: the picture's main theme stands as its chief asset and gives it value enough to make the whole safely commendable to exhibitors as an offering. Perhaps, if it had been condensed to a single reel, it would have been even more commendable.

In the incidents that the development of the story brings out there is a good deal of freshness and many a good chance for acting. The leading roles are played by Paul Hurst (unlettered mountaineer), and Marin Sais (his wife) on one side, with George H. Melford (rich doctor) and Jane Wolfe (his sister) who by some villianous work manages to keep him from marrying Marin on the other side. All these play the climaxes well; but all, with the single exception of Jane Wolfe, are conventional at times and even mechanical now and then. One might safely doubt the naturalness of that scene in which the doctor brings the barefooted and rather unkept mountain girl home to introduce to his proud sister as his acknowledged sweetheart; but no one will so surely doubt the truth of the feelings in all three as the ambitious sister turns from her in proud contempt. Least of all will he doubt the feelings that the sister expresses. Miss Wolfe plays this sister as a true type; the spectator will hardly count her as a villainess, the more because the love interest is not quite true enough to make us wholly sympathize with the doctor in his falling in love. The ambitious sister persuades the girl that his career will be ruined if he marries her—a stock situation. Yet there is good stuff in the interview that Jane has with Marin, and more good acting in the scene at the old tree when Marin gives back the ring and again in the scene at the cabin door when she makes good her purpose by taking as her lover the mountaineer who also loves her while the doctor stands by and sees it all. At this point, the doctor would naturally have passed out of the girl's life; but she and her mountaineer husband have a daughter, played by Cleo Ridgeley who was not so long ago popular in Rex pictures and who, many will remember, mare recently took a horseback ride across the continent with her husband. And this girl, in a not wholly convincing incident, is the means of bringing the doctor into the story again to perform a surgical operation that saves the life of the mountaineer's wife. Yet this brings about one of the freshest and most interesting minor situations in the picture. Te wife and mother has been accidentally wounded when trying to protect her daughter who is running away from the father who won't let her learn to read. in the protection of a circuit rider, she comes to the doctor,and this brings him back to save the woman's life in spite of the violent opposition of both husband and an ignorant country doctor. The photography is clear and has a pleasing tone.

SID OLCOTT IS BACK FROM FLORIDA.

Miss Valentine Grant and Sidney Olcott, who recently returned from Jacksonville, Florida, where they have been producing three-part films for Warner's Features, Inc., are jolly glad to get back to New York, although they declare that Jacksonville's hospitality is splendid.

Miss Grant tells a thrilling story of a train wreck that occurred while she was posing in "The Brute" that outclasses the best fiction a press agent ever conceived. Mr. Olcott adds his confirmation of the incident, so it must be true.

Leaving their headquarters in Jacksonville at seven-thirty one morning, the Olcott Players rode thirty miles to a lumber camp for their day's work. Miss Grant, dressed as the orphan of the camp, climbed into the cab of a dinky engine used to haul flats loaded with logs, and at a signal pulled open the throttle. Everything moved according to schedule, while the train was getting under way, but no one, not even the real engineer, could foresee the events of that memorable morning. Suddenly, and without a warning of any kind, the engine gave a lurch and the next instant was bumping along the ties at a great rate. Miss Grant screamed and jumped from the engineer's' seat as her companion leaped for the throttle and the air brake.

Fortunately for everybody, especially the cameraman pearched on top of the coal tender, the brakes worked and no harm was done. It was afternoon before the engine could be lifted back to the rails and the rest of the scenes completed.

ABE WARNER BACK FROM EUROPE.

A. Warner of Warner's Features, has returned to the States after having spent the winter promoting the sale of Warner's Features in Engand and on the Continent. He reports conditions very satisfactory to the marketing of the Warner output. Mr. Warner will locate in Chicago and keep in touch with his various branches from there.

EXTRAORDINARY in showing how skillful treatment can occasionally provide interest when it seems to be lacking in the scenario, "With His Hands" will set the nerves of the uninitiated on edge and puzzle not a few who are familiar with methods of production. Every incident of the story leads up to a struggle between two desperate men on the top girders of an incomplete skyscraper in the lower part of New York City, with a background no studio in the world could realistically reproduce. But even this realism is subordinate to a new pattern of background which will d light the eyes of all who behold it.

The stage director may sit down and sketch a design historically accurate or cantaining certain intrinsic elements of beauty, but the motion picture director can sweep the seas, scale mountain crags, or even ascend into the heavens for his effects. Director Brabin has taken us to the top of a tall building in lower New York from which there are panoramic views of East River bridges, of the Woolworth and Singer towers, of the city from an elevated viewpoint, even to an elevated train winding far below on its devious course.

He has brought into harmony the scenes, characters and sense of the drama to be pictured. The struggle in midair, though we know it to be acting, is now so perfectly in tune with the wondrous background that it acquires an actual thrill from its intense realism. One can scarcely help thinking that the performers are taking terrible chances in enacing their roles, so cleverly placed are the scenes, outranking any others of the kind ever shown in moving pictures. It seems almost a pity to have such treatment lavished on a story so lacking in intrisic novelty. It is the outworn narrative of the honest workman and villainous boss with a detective thrown in for good measure on the villainy side. The detective schemes a frame-up on the honest workman where the "goil" can hear every word of it—all stage schemers are overheard—and the "goil'" foils the villain, the kind of story that is founded on one of Yorick's six plots, made while you wait.

Fine treatment elevates it to a picture story of strong interest, thanks entirely to the accomplished director and his company, not excluding the camera man.

HARRY J. COHEN.

UNDER the corporate name of The Popular Plays and Players Company, Harry J. Cohen, best known from his popular connections with the General Film Company and general manager of the feature department, and associates have launched what purports to be an important addition to the recent group of high class producers of famous plays in screen form. The new organization is housed in the Mecca Building, and from the busy appearance of the offices the first announcement of the concern is meeting with a responsive chord.

Harry J. Cohen.

Harry Cohen, general executive of the company and a part owner, began his theatrical career as advertising manager for Hooley's Theater (now Powers'), Chicago. Graduating from this, he launched into the theatrical end and for seventeen seasons handled the various heavy productions throughout the West, his last being that of "The Burgomaster." For seven years with Harry Davis of Pittsburgh, he entered the film field, and while associated with Klimt & Gazzola he opened the first film show in Chicago. Mr. Cohen was among the first to realize the importance of exploiting films by means of lithographic paper. He opened the first exchange at Toronto for George Kleine and then became manager of various branches for the General Film Company, with which concern he remained until March 17 of this year, when he decided to strike out for himself.

The first production of the Popular Plays and Players Company will be "Michael Strogoff," now being produced by Lubin with a star cast of Lubin players headed by the eminent character romancer, Jacob P. Adler. This initial production should be a classic in that Mr. Lubin is devoting his best players and directors to the making of it and the company is making every effort to turn out a gigantic production.

Following "Michael Strogoff," Andrew Mack will be presented in "The Ragged Earl," and then Margaret Anglin in one of the most popular successes. For "Michael Strogoff" the Popular Plays and Players Company is using fifteen Tartar soldiers loaned them for intermittent periods by the Russian Ambassador at Washington. Quite a little territory has already been disposed of.

"POP" LUBIN BACK IN PHILADELPHIA.

Siegmund Lubin, the motion picture manufacturer returned to his office in Philadelphia, May 11th, after a trip to Europe which lasted six weeks. Mr. Lubin was the recipient of several testimonials in which several of his executives shared. Chief of these was the presentation of a poem from the pen of Hugh A. D'Arcy, the advertising manager of the firm which was endorsed by 565 of Mr. Lubin's employees and studio artists. As a special surprise the manufacturer found upon his return that General Manager Ira M. Lowry, had ordered rushed to completion a new office building, two stories in height, which was entirely constructed during Mr. Lubin's absence abroad.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

The Dignity of Moving Pictures.

IF BOSTON exhibitors have shown a tendency to belittle moving pictures by offering so many films on their programs at so small admission prices, Boston society women—judging from the latest reports—have united to give pictures dignity.

These reports convey the news that the Boston Four Hundred have now their own picture theater at Newbury and Exeter Streets, and that the first presentation was a big success. This theater was formerly the First Spiritual Temple, which has been remodeled.

Miss Phyllis Abbott and Miss Pauline M. Dodge, popular members of Boston society, have been active in the movement, and both are overjoyed that their efforts have been crowned with success. "It is something we have needed for years. Everyone enjoys moving pictures," Miss Dodge is quoted as saying. Mrs. Frederick L. Abbott has declared that there are many elderly people in Back Bay who do not feel physically able to attend a show, but who can enjoy an hour viewing moving pictures. "The rich need this house," she affirmed with emphasis.

"But where does the dignity come in?" the reader asks.

Listen!

Only men and women in evening dress are admitted to this novel picture theater. And, moreover, the prices are 10, 20 and 25 cents, and no seats are reserved. Furthermore, attractively-gowned girl ushers, with their other duties, see that all hats are removed while the presentations are given.

Here's to the Four Hundred of Boston, who, not being able to get what they wanted through regular channels, set out to get it for themselves.

But do not think for an instant that moving pictures cannot be clothed with equal dignity in houses where a dress suit is never seen. Just the workmen in their overalls and the women and children in their usual attire add even greater dignity to the pictures, because they owe to them all of entertainment that their means will afford.

The exhibitor who offers too much for little is detracting from the dignity and merit of his stock in trade.

Chicago Censor Board Under Judge Mayer's Sarcasm.

Judge Mayer, of the United States District Court, New York, has caused a flutter among the members of the Chicago board of censors by his recent criticism of their action, after viewing "Brewster's Millions," when they ordered the cutting out of the prizefight scene, the hold-up, the gambling and the abduction scene. The flutter was one of sadness that their action should be so sarcastically construed by the learned jurist, for these men and women truly believe that upon their shoulders rests the great burden of Chicago's future, as well as present, morals.

"I suppose this board of censors is one of those delightful, local arrangements under which a volunteer body of highly virtuous persons attempts to tell other people how to manage their affairs," said the judge.

All the members, who were informed of Judge Mayer's reference to their labors, refused to make comment—all save one, the Rev. A. J. Carey, who has been only a short time on the board. The ermine of the court had no terrors for the reverend gentleman, who is thoroughly imbued with the importance of his work.

"The judge shows his ignorance," said Mr. Carey. "This is not a volunteer body. We are even under civil service. There are members of the board who are serving, not because they want to do so, but because Mayor Harrison has asked them to, because they are especially fitted for the task. When we look upon these pictures we do so through the eyes of little children—the children we are trying to safeguard. We always try to consider the property rights of the film manufacturers, but that is not always easy."

The fuss has been caused by the fact that the Celebrated Players' Film Company, of this city, entered into a contract with the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Film Company last January, securing the exclusive rights to lease films of "The Squaw Man" and nine other photoplays for the states of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin for a period of five years.

The agreement continued smoothly until the board of censors put the ban on "Brewster's Millions," unless the scenes referred to were eliminated.

Judge Mayer, at the present writing, has the matter under advisement.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Theatrical statistics just published in Paris show that the twenty-four moving picture theaters in that city earned $1,720,000 during the year 1913. This gives an average for each house of $71,666.66. No doubt the big Gaumont Hippodrome secured the lion's share of the large aggregate. Note that there are only twenty-four picture theaters in Paris and that Chicago has about 620.

The Gold Theater, 3411-13 West 12th Street, this city, will be opened in about two months, as one of the finest and up-to-date moving picture houses in the city. It will contain the latest ventilating system, and a pipe organ, bought from the Kimble Piano Company. The decorating is being done by the Decorators' Supply Company. The Gold will seat 1,000 people, and admission will be ten cents. Samuel Gold, who is the owner of this theater, called at the office last week, and subscribed for THE WORLD.

James J. Chrissis, owner of the Rex Theater, 817 West 63rd Street, this city, paid a pleasant call to THE WORLD office last week. Mr. Chrissis stated that the Rex was remodeled last February, and now seats 300 people. It has the latest ventilating system. Admission is five cents for a program of four reels of Licensed service. Mr. Chrissis runs the Kathlyn series and Fantomas features, and is doing very good business.

Four women exhibitors attended the recent convention at Springfield. They were: Mrs. A. W. Ackerman, whose husband and herself own and manage the Capitol (Mason City), the Opera House (Green View), the Minier (Middleton), and the San Jose (Green Valley); Mrs. Conrad Striewing, owner of the Crystal, Decatur; Mrs. Eiler Jones, of the Star Theater, Lincoln, and Mrs. L. J. Van Draska, of the Majestic, Ottawa. These ladies are all highly intelligent and belong to the ranks of progressive exhibitors. They took unusual interest in the proceedings of the convention, and two of them—Mrs. Van Draska and Mrs. Ackerman—were elected among the alternates to the national convention at Dayton, in July.

Charles Soutiea, manager of the Vaudette Theater, Springfield, owned by W. W. Watts, was credited with accomplishing a great deal in preparing for the late convention at Springfield. He attended solely to the correspondence sent to outside exhibitors and to various other matters that contributed to the success of the convention.

B. H. Cooper, owner of the Park Theater, Champaign, Ill., was seen during the convention at Springfield. Mr. Cooper is a man of fine business ability and of high ideals. The Park has a very intellectual clientele, chiefly students and professors of the Illinois University, and Mr. Cooper aims at giving them clean, high-class picture programs. In conversation with me he emphasized the importance of higher class and cleaner scenarios for moving picture subjects. The Park seats 600 people and cost $25,000.

I. C. Davidson, owner of the Central Theater, Danville, was also seen during the Springfield convention. He informed me that the present capacity of the Central is 580, and that he is putting in a balcony that will seat 400 more. He reported excellent business, and expressed great faith in the future of the moving picture.

A. B. Carrick, general manager of the Trans-Oceanic Films, Inc., New York City, was in Chicago, May 7th. He had just returned from an extensive trip throughout the Western States, visiting most of the principal cities. "The Life of Shakespeare," his latest feature, was placed in the western offices. While in Chicago he sold "Fedora," a five-part Aquila feature to the Anderson Feature Service, for Illinois, Wisconsin and Indiana.

M. Mannist, general manager of the Gaiety, Princess and Lyceum Theaters in Port Arthur, Ontario, Canada, paid a visit to THE WORLD office last week. The Gaiety and the Lyceum Theaters are being remodeled to seat 780 and 1,000 people, respectively. Admission at these houses is 10 cents for matinees and 15 cents for evening. The programs consist of four reels of pictures and one vocal number. Mr. Mannist takes his choice from the entire product of the General Film Company, Universal, Mutual, Famous Players, etc. The owners of the above-named theaters are now building another theater in Fort Williams, which has a population of 23,000. Port Arthur has a population of 19,000, and claims to have the largest grain elevator in the world, with a capacity of 7,900,000 bushels, owned by the Canadian Northern Railroad. Last month, the W. Grant Morden, the largest freight steamer in the world, 690 feet in length, was launched at Port Arthur.

Mutual and Universal Against Censorship.

Their Attorneys Appear Against the Smith-Hughes Bill Before the House Committee on Education.

At the adjourned meeting of the House Committee on Education last Friday, May 8th, Walter N. Seligsberg, representing the Mutual Film Corporation, and Jacob Schechter, representing the Universal Film Company, made strong and extensive arguments against the proposed law to have a federal censorship. Mr. Seligsberg, who represented the Mutual in their gallant struggle against censorship in Ohio, went very fully into the history of motion pictures, summarizing the principal events in its development. He also gave a complete description of how films were made, accompanying the process at every stage, from the conversion of the white powderish substance into film to the work of the director and the cameraman, concluding with the explanation of the processes of developing, drying, joining, etc. He also went into the question of distribution and dwelt at length on the profession of the exhibitor. He was ably assisted by Mr. Schechter.

Both attorneys were overwhelmed with questions by various members of the committee, and before long an atmosphere of confidence was established between them and the committee. Mr. Schechter went very full into the constitutional questions involved and his arguments were followed with the utmost care and attention by every member of the committee. At the end of the joint argument the members of the committee felt that they needed all the information possible to enable them to consider the bill intelligently, and they requested the attorneys to appear before the committee the next morning and stand ready to answer further questions which the committee might have a desire to ask. The attorneys readily consented and a further meeting was held on Saturday morning.

At the end of the hearing the committee asked both attorneys to submit special briefs covering in a more formal manner the points made by them. The attorneys promised to submit briefs at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Howe, of the National Board of Censorship, also spoke before the committee, showing the fallacies of an official censorship and demonstrating the good work accomplished by his board without the aid of any legal power.

Another speaker before the committee was Mr. Fulton Brylawski, a Washington exhibitor. Mr. Brylawski said that the exhibitors themselves are the best censors.

"An exhibitor does not want to exhibit improper pictures," he said, "for it would drive away his patrons and foot up immense losses during the year. We are opposed to censorship; it is medieval to a certain extent, and the proposed Federal censorship would be injurious to the moving picture industry."

Mr. Brylawski, answering questions of Congressman Towner, said censorship was "unnecessary and un-American," but that, of the two evils, the moving picture people favored the national board to the proposed Federal regulation. He feared that the Federal inspectors would not be men of the high standard necessary, and that they could not do the work properly.

Mr. Brylawski said the utmost precautions are taken by Washington motion picture theaters to prevent the showing of films that would injure the child. He estimated that the attendance of children at downtown theaters is not more than 2 per cent., but in the residential sections runs from 20 to 30 per cent. of the total attendance. Any theater, he said, which permitted improper pictures would lose in the long run, and a strict censorship is unnecessary.

At a meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the District of Columbia, held on May 7th, the following preamble and resolution was unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the District of Columbia, a body corporate affiliated with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, states it as one of the objects of its being "To use its influence to induce manufacturers not to produce pictures that might be objectionable; and

WHEREAS, On May 1st, 1913, this organization publicly went on record as being opposed to the exhibition of any motion pictures which have not been previously censored by the National Board of Censorship; and

WHEREAS, The Committee on Education in the House of Representatives has before it, for consideration, a bill (H. R. 14895) "To Create a New Division of the Bureau of Education to be Known as the Federal Motion Picture Commission and Defining its Powers and Duties," among which are the licensing and censoring of all motion pictures intended for entrance in interstate commerce, and also the prohibition of any motion picture film, not previously so licensed and censored, being exhibited in the District of Columbia; Now Therefore

BE IT RESOLVED, That it is the sense of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the District of Columbia, that the creation of such a Commission is unnecessary, injurious and prejudicial to the interests of the Motion Picture industry of the United States.

RESOLVED FURTHER, That a copy of the resolution be transmitted to the Committee on Education of the United States House of Representatives.

Praise for Harold Shaw.

As Guests of Mr. Cromelin His Friends Throng Strand and Are Enthusiastic Over His First English Work.

JUST before he sailed for England nearly a year ago to become chief producer for the London Film Company, Harold M. Shaw confided to a friend that he realized the great opportunities his new alliance had opened to him—and likewise he appreciated to the full the responsibilities he was assuming. At that time the English film manufacturers were not in the position they are today. It was, if we recall, about June 1 when Mr. Shaw left New York. His first work for the London company was "The House of Temperley." It was not shown publicly in the English metropolis until September 1. The many intervening weeks are silent testimony to the deliberation with which Mr. Shaw went about his new work. Come to think of it, he told us before he sailed that it was the desire of his employers that he take things easy for the first month, that he travel about the British Isles and on his own account learn what the English market demanded in the way of pictures. The marked advance in photodrama on the part of English manufacturers may have taken place just as it did if Mr. Shaw had not so splendidly shown the path in "The House of Temperly." His friends must be permitted at least to call attention to the coincidence.

Harold M. Shaw.

As the guests of Paul H. Cromelin, the American representative of the London Film Company, a large number of the New York friends of Mr. Shaw attended the performance of "The House of Temperley" at the Strand Theater on the afternoon of Monday, May 11. There was only one factor lacking, and that was the presence of Mr. Shaw himself. What he would have heard had he been there would have been worth remembering. All the elements of drama were not portrayed on the screen. To many who witnessed in such elaborate surroundings the initial American showing of Mr. Shaw's first production on English soil it was more than an ordinary triumph. The masterly manner in which he put on the story of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle tightly held the big house and moved it, too. It is a singularly smooth and convincing story—and finely acted. So cleverly has the development been carried forward that even those violently opposed to anything remotely savoring of the prize ring will rejoice at the downfall of the pugilist. In the first reel the artistic backgrounds appeal to the eye as the story stirs the heart. In the succeeding scenes there are many situations that stir the blood. The denouement is splendidly effective.

Harold M. Shaw entered the theatrical profession in 1893, leaving San Francisco with "The German Soldier." His training began from the ground up, and in those days the youngest member of the company always had to act as property man as well as play a small part, which he was doing. After many vicissitudes with various repertoire and one-night-stand companies he joined the Lothrops Stock Company in Rhode Island. Mr. Shaw spent five years in various stock companies. Later in repertoire with Miss Amelia Bingham he played juvenile and light comedy parts. The following season Mr. Shaw played Captain Absolute with Joseph Jefferson in "The Rivals."

On the death of Mr. Jefferson Mr. Shaw left the profession for two years. During that time he engaged in business in San Francisco. At the close of 1907 he played sketches written by himself. He had two successful seasons.

It was about this time that he was induced to join the Edison stock company, where he soon rose to the position of producer. Later he resigned to join Carl Laemmle's "Imp" company, where he remained till the very liberal offer of the London Film Company tempted him to become its chief producer. Those who best knew Mr. Shaw had no doubt he would make good. That he should score so heavily in his first picture will give them deep pleasure. G. B.

Edeson Signs a Contract.

Unusual Document Framed Up for His Star by Jesse Lasky.

ROBERT EDESON, who recently signed with the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, for appearance in the filmization of his former dramatic success, "The Call of the North," has been for years one of the leading dramatic stars of the American stage. One of his most important successes was in the title role of "Strongheart," under the direction of the Henry B. Harris organization, which he followed with a long run in "The Call of the North" and more recently with the all-star cast of "Fine Feathers."

Robert Edeson.

For his appearance before the camera in the play, which, in book form, was known as "The Conjuror's House," Mr. Edeson in agreement with the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, is party to one of the most unique contracts ever entered into by employee and employer. A copy of the obtaining tenets are herewith reprinted:

1. That the company supporting Mr. Edeson in "The Call of the North" are to be selected with a view to having the people as near like the robust types inhabiting the Canadian Northwest as it is possible to procure.

2. That the Jesse L. Lasky Company agrees to send Mr. Edeson and the supporting players to Moose Factory, Canada, during the severest period of the Canadian winter in order that proper locale and the proper surroundings can be secured.

Robert Edeson at "Strongheart House," Sag Harbor, Long Island.

3. That in the event of the weather not being severe enough at Moose Factory, the Jesse L. Lasky Company agrees to allow Mr. Edeson his discretion in securing a location farther north, as far as Meridian No. "50 north."

4. Real Tiger Tribe Indians to be procured by the Jesse L. Lasky Company and outfitted for their appearance before the camera.

5. It is expressly understood that the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company agrees to maintain the entire company in the location selected by Mr. Edeson, until the weather is of sufficient inclemency to make the picture and give to it the proper atmosphere of rigorousness.

6. Mr. Edeson to work at the direction of the producers, in location selected, regardless of the severity of the weather, and to use his best efforts in the making of the picture—even though he risks his life in so doing.

The contract means the outlay of a great amount of money for the Lasky Company, and the probable enduring of a few hardships on the part of Mr. Edeson and his supporting cast, but ever a lover of detail, Mr. Edeson says that he prefers the hardships and additional expenditure to a picture that does not convey in atmosphere just what the author desires.

"The Call of the North," with Mr. Edeson, will be released early in August by the Lasky Company.

Metropolis Has Jubilee Opening.

Lessee and the Manager Inaugurate Latest Method of Picture Presentation—Picker's Weekly to be Permanent Feature.

On Monday evening, May 11, the Metropolis theater, Third Avenue and 142nd Street, Bronx, New York had its jubilee opening. The theater was decorated with flags and flowers, and in the lobby were several floral pieces bestowed upon David V. Picker, lessee of the house, by his friends and business associates. The occasion was the employment of the latest method in picture presentation—that of showing pictures amid artistic embellishment. The house has been in the hands of Mr. Picker and his manager, William Thompson, for the six weeks prior to the week beginning Monday, May 11, during which time the pictures had been presented in the usual way with no exaltation of any kind.

On each side of the screen is a singer's box of romantic design festooned in flowers, and soft glows of different colored lights blending nicely into one another pervade the stage. The orchestra which is in an enclosure of artificial flowers is upon the stage and directly in front of the screen which is elevated. Besides being the lessee of this house, Mr. Picker is also the manager of the Burland at 163rd street and Prospect avenue, Bronx, and Miner's Eighth Avenue theater. The former house is one of the biggest, if not the biggest, exclusive picture house in the Bronx; it has a seating capacity of 2000. Considering the fact that Mr. Picker has been in the picture business for a little less than a year and a half it may be said that he has made much progress for such a short time.

The Metropolis has a seating capacity of 1300 which is divided among the orchestra floor and the first and second balconies. It has a stage about forty feet wide and twenty-five feet deep with a proscenium arch of about forty feet. The operating room is in the rear of the second balcony, and the throw is about ninety feet. The operating room is of the regulation size, well ventilated, and two Simplex machines are a part of the projection battery. The house is steam heated in winter and cooled in summer by cold air coming through the radiators. A number of exhaust fans keep the air fresh. The pictures are projected upon a Radium Gold Fibre screen which those in charge say is giving absolute satisfaction. Neatly uniformed and clean ushers attend to your every need. There is an orchestra of ten men besides a $15,000 Wurlitzer Unit orchestra. Pictures are changed daily. Three shows a day are given, each one requiring two and a half to three hours. In the evening the admission price is ten cents to the entire house while in the afternoon the prevailing price is five cents. The program consists of pictures interspersed with songs rendered by competent artists. Picker's Weekly, a film of local events, will be a permanent feature at the Metropolis. In the weekly that was shown during jubilee week Mr. Picker was introduced in the film to his patrons in coming out of his recent acquisition—the Metropolis—and it was quite evident that he is very popular with his audiences, for the plaudits were prolonged.

In William Thompson, Mr. Picker has a genial and competent manager. Mr. Thompson has had years of experience in the film business, and has been connected with the Fox interests for the past seven years. He has opened and managed houses in Waterbury and New Britain, Conn., and started the recent Fox Crotona theater in Tremont avenue, Bronx, on the road to success. Mr. Picker has leased the Metropolis for fifteen years from F. A. Keeney of the Putnam Bldg., New York City.

Prominent among the many invited guests were M. H. Hoffman, the hustling manager of the Twenty-third Street Universal exchange, and his co-workers, H. Gainsborg and his brother, Lee. In the private box of Mr. Picker were Mrs. Picker and family and several of their friends. Everything points to continued success at the Metropolis.

Doings at Los Angeles.

WHEN the Mexican war scare reached here, everyone from bank president down to the most lowly street sweeper signified his intent of joining the army and fighting for this country. But the most enthusiastic little army was that formed by members of the Photoplayers' Club. A telegram was sent to the President advising him that a good-sized army was available and ready to depart for the border. No call has as yet been made on the recruits.

Fred Mace and his new company is busy making fun pictures. Fred has a full-page ad running in most every paper in the city, asking the people to go into the new company with him, and what's more, he is nearly ready to quit selling stock, so strong is the people's faith in funny Fred.

At the Loftus Features studio in Hollywood a new dressing-room addition has been added to the garden studio. The carpenter shop and property rooms have also been enlarged and improved. A strip of stage 25 by 50 feet has been added and work is progressing rapidly on general improvements.

Escaping while darkness prevailed, a 7-foot python, a pet of "Lonesome" Jack Brown, ran loose in the city, creating much terror among the people. The reptile was harmless and could not have injured anyone, but not heeding this information, some boys saw the big serpent and killed it near the place where it lived The snake had been used in many moving pictures and was valued highly.

Miss Margaret Gibson, the charming little leading lady who appears in Vitagraph films and who was featured in "The Love of Tokiwa," a pretty Japanese special, lives at the beach in Santa Monica, and goes swimming in the surf every day. It was said that she had started a company of her own, but the fact is that she never knew anything about the proposed company.

A box of rattlers from Texas afforded much interest, and—panic at the Lasky studio this week. There were two reptiles in the box, one 6 feet in length and the other nearly seven. The big boy had 15 buzzers on the end of his tail, and the music he made when the box was touched made the dogs around the studio grind their teeth, curl back their lips, and the ridge of hair on their backs stand on end. When inside the offices during unpacking, one of the pets managed to get out while the trainer looked away, a small panic ensued. Manager De Mille was the hero of the day and having his heavy coat on, with gauntleted hands he captured the venemous rascal and replaced him in the box. The stenographer climbed on top of the telephone exchange and Fred Kley, business manager, vaulted over the steel dividing fence and made a hurried exit into the back yard. The morning list of extras looking for work were in a wild scramble for the front yard. The fangs of the snakes will be extracted so they can be used in the pictures for "The Virginian."

It was rumored, only rumored, that Ford Sterling, who has taken pretty Miss Teddy Sampson away from the Mutual, and made her his leading lady, had married her early in the week. When seen personally, the funny man only smiled and said n—o. But there was a queer hesitation in his voice. It would seem rather funny at that. He has dodged the belles of Pasadena society for some time—to become the hubby of a leading lady. Pathe Lehrman has left the Sterling Company and will take a brief rest before finding another location.

Quinn's Superba Theater will be opened on the 25th of June with a big bill of current releases. This is one of his elegant city theaters and is a new feature for our Broadway. A monster electric sign 35 feet high and 72 feet long will grace the top of the building, which has a seating capacity of 800. 6,000 lamps will be used in the electric sign alone.

Rollin S. Sturgeon, who was manager of Santa Monica Vitagraph, leaves the coming week for New York. He will stop off en route to visit his old home. He goes on a business trip, but will not tell anything about what he intends doing. Since leaving the studio work he has been busy with his chickens. He has a regular hennery and "ish ka bibbles" when the prices of eggs elevates.

An ordinance to regulate the handling of film was approved by the police commission and forwarded to the city council of Los Angeles this week. It provides for a concrete fireproof vault for film storage in each exchange, and that not more than 20 reels can be handled while a purchaser is present.

A gay old bird was an ostrich at the Venice farm. The hungry bird was a beauty with an appetite like a goat. He had been in the movies and probably became large-headed as a result. He ate a small keg of nails, so the farmer says, after making an autopsy. Ostriches were thought to have been able to eat anything, but this must be an exception.

At the Midway Plaisance a great amusement week has been magnified by the animals from the Selig wild animal farm. Bernardo, the trainer, was featured with his feline pets. He let a leopard eat raw meat from his mouth, and many other wondrous and thrilling tricks were done. Bernardo was formerly with Hagenback's in Hamburg. The week of fun was given by the Press Club.

After two years of strife and hardship, the Broncho studio, north of Santa Monica, in the mountains, has been given its connection with the outside world by telephone. Tom Ince has tried and tried to get the phone company to run a wire out from the long wharf, about two miles to the studio, but his efforts were fruitless, until the first of May.

In about two weeks Otis Turner will start directing "Damon and Pythias," which will be in but four reels. This production will have most magnificent settings, expensive costumes and, in fact, the whole work will be about the best that can be made. Mr. Turner escorted the writer through the property rooms at the studio, where hundreds of costumes were being finished. Into the most infinitesimal detail, this director has put his watchful eye, and not a thing has been overlooked. There is a set of photos from an old book, which was published in 1809, which gives the most correct data on the wearing apparel of the people to be shown in the picture. Hundreds of suits of papier mache armor are being made at the studio, and much work is being done by artists and sculptors. The miniatures of the senate house, streets and houses are already being painted, and a whole city is now on paper which covers a large center table. This will undoubtedly be a grand production.

Clune's Auditorium Theater Beautiful opened here on the 4th of May with a record-breaking house. The public seemed to immediately take to the new picture playhouse, which is the largest on the coast, and by far the best. There are seats unlimited. The air is cool and fresh, and everything is as pleasant as can be. A grand orchestra, and the wonderful pipe organ gave the people music that was well worth the price of the show. Alone the music probably would have filled the house. "Home Sweet Home" was the first big film to grace the screen of this elegant theater. Manager Clune is well satisfied with the new house and contemplates even bigger things here. All his other theaters are doing a good business, and the advent of the Auditorium seems not to have impaired the business of the others.

Richard Willis, former actor, artist, author, scenarioist, and at present the publicity expert, has moved to an apartment house on the "Strand," leaving his bungalow at Santa Monica on the bluffs, for the beach home. He swims too.

Moving Picture Educator

AN IMPORTANT COMMENDATION.

THE most widely circulated, and therefore the most widely read, religious magazine in America is without doubt the Christian Herald. Not only is it so universally studied, but its writings and opinions are conceded to be of a just and broad basis; there is no other religious paper which is read by so many people, irrespective of denominational affiliation. In its much used question department there appears in its last issue the following enquiry from a subscriber in Germantown, Pa.: "What do you think should be the attitute of the Christian Church on the moving picture question?" Because of the broad and wise nature of the answer we repeat it here in full, instead of quoting from or abbreviating it:

> The church is just beginning to realize that moving pictures can be made one of the most valuable of its accessories. This new art, which has unquestionably come to stay, is capable of being adapted to the teaching of the grandest lessons of history, sacred and secular. Protected from moral blemishes, it will prove one of the church's most powerful coadjutors in reaching the multitudes for good. It lends itself admirably to the uses of instruction and inspiration. Labor, travel, exploration, science, history are all within its reach. It can be made tributary to religion and good citizenship and to instruction in all that relates to the progress and betterment of the race. We believe the time will come, and soon, when our churches, schools and lyceums will employ the new art as one of the main adjuncts of their work, which will simplify and greatly add to its value and efficiency.

SOME NEW GAUMONT EDUCATIONALS.

Views of Munich. The leading attractions of this famous and interesting city are now filmed and will be welcomed by its American decendants, as also all those who are interested in scenic and historical pictures. The first center of interest is the Bavarian Monument, together with the Karlplatz, the Town Hall and the Cathedral. In showing a view of the University the manufacturers say:

"The South German mind while it does not possess quite so much of the exact scientific accuracy and care for detail as the North, yet has perhaps a greater genius, and the rulers of Bavaria have mostly been good patrons of learning. We find, therefore, that the University is a magnificent building, and as a matter of fact its professors are men of world-wide reputation."

Rocks and Waves.

This is a series of views of most rugged English coast filmed to be in contrast with the monotonous film, "Rough Seas," which was only a series of wind-tossed waves. Here we have the beauty of waves beating upon rock-bound coasts, castellated walls, the heavy slopes of light-house rocks, anywhere and everywhere wherever nature or man places a barrier against its further progress. Care has been taken to secure views of greatest sea power and land-rugged beauty, so that the fury of the tempest with the glorious majesty of the power of the sea may be seen to advantage. Great differences which the storms give to ocean fronts, lending dignity and character to various localities as its fury may impart, is one of the features of this film, fulfilling—so the makers claim—the romantic idea of the English poet who wrote:

> "Roll on thou deep and dark blue ocean, roll;
> Ten thousand fleets sweep over thee in vain.
> Man marks the earth with ruin, his control
> Stops with the shore."

The Limpet.

No sea animal is more common than the limpet, which is found in all parts of the world. Attaching itself to the rocks by means of a vacuum, its capacity for sticking is so strong, that if one is taken and put on a rough surface and suspended by a string it will maintain a weight of several pounds. They are shown to live between high and low tide, crawling about to secure their food, which consists of seaweed; the picture shows one enjoying a meal. By a seeming sixth sense the limpet knows its way back to its own rock, and to its own place on the rock, which latter is very important, as in its first growth the edge of the shell grows to fit the identical spot on the rock of its first location, so that it must strangely return to the same spot, for there it fits.

The limpet while used as a tempting bait is also used for food of the fisher folk; at low tide it is found closely attached to the rocks, requiring force, and often the use of a strong pen-knife to detach it.

Scientifically it is classed as a member of the Gasteropoda family, which are of the univalve type and include some 7,000 varieties. Additional interest attaches to these animals in that where the water currents are strong they develop a low form of shell, while where the water is calm the shells grow taller; thus it reduces pressure upon itself. It also seems possessed of several faculties, such as smell, slight hearing, and the power of balance, consequently appearing more intellectual than at first supposed.

Educational Items from Everywhere.

In Ohio the agricultural commission is giving free exhibitions of moving pictures in the high schools of the state on the subject of Neighborhood Welfare Work. Methods showing how to improve the health, morals, and the general products of the community are described and illustrated. One special feature which would do good everywhere gives pictures from life of boys who found delight in breaking windows and doing other mischief, transformed into industrious little gardeners and furniture makers; how they sold their products to obtain spending money, and how they sent a delegate to Washington to visit the President.

Do the Moving Pictures Hurt the Nerves?

It appears that there are those who are trying to blame the prevalence of nervous disorders among children upon the moving picture; especially is the St. Vitus dance attributed to this cause. Enquiries show that many nervous children attend moving pictures in common with other and all classes of children; to this time, however, nothing has occurred to associate any physical disorder therewith; on the contrary, an observing teacher in Chicago says: "While in many cases it was found that nervous children attended the picture houses with more or less frequency, I personally think that it is safe to say that more children suffer from the departure from the old-fashioned manner of living; like their elders of the present day the children are living too fast, feeding too indiscriminately and are suffering therefrom.

A Parish House Licensed for Moving Pictures.

In Minneapolis a clergyman has found the moving pictures so serviceable that he has installed an equipment in the parish house for general parochial purposes. Opening with a free exhibition at which 700 young people of the parish were present in the afternoon, and in the evening a large audience of adults, there was every evidence of satisfaction at the venture. The pictures will be largely entertaining, with some educationals.

EXTRAORDINARY AND WIDESPREAD USE OF THE MOVING PICTURE.

THE most sanguine expectations and predictions of the value and service of the moving picture in all classes of educational work have been more than exceeded. It is rapidly becoming a question if the pictures are not proving of greater service in the practical world than in the realm of amusements. It is of great interest to those who are following the wide uses of practical kinematography, to record the tremendous strides being made in every branch of the useful arts all over the world of the knowledge-imparting pictures. In a sarcastic mood Charles Dudley Warner about twenty years ago wrote:—"There ought to be somewhere a reservoir of knowledge connected by wires with every house, and a professional switch tender, who, upon the pressure of a button in any house, could turn on the intellectual stream desired. There must be discovered in time a method by which not only information but intellectual life can be infused."

Although the extreme of this sarcasm is not possible, the idea which called for it in the rapid acquirement of information and knowledge has been fully met in the moving picture. A review of the wide uses to which the moving picture is now leading its powers will be very interesting to those who are watching the progress of practical kinematography.

In Rochester, N. Y., the Y. M. C. A. is arranging for the use of the moving picture as "a means of conveying commercial instruction in an efficiency campaign." The course of commercial economies has been arranged by a group of men who are experts in their line, with the result that the following program is arranged for: "Railroad Construction, Cattle Raising, Wool Growing, Poultry and Dairy Products, Grains, Fruit Growing, Timber, Mining, Coal-Mining, Oil Wells, Fisheries, Machinery, Transportation, Electricity, University and Pleasure Grounds." Such a program would have been impossible without the aid of the pictures; it therefore proves how great help can now be obtained in the educational courses for which the Y. M. C. A. has become famous.

A Bible Summer School in which the moving pictures are to be most extensively used is being planned by the International Sunday School Committee, the reasons advanced for the introduction being, that "With films showing scenes of the Holy Land, and others introducing eminent Bible characters, the retention of students would be easier, also that more students would be enrolled on account of the more attractive nature of the studies, coupled with the fact that in so short a time a greater scope could be more thoroughly covered, thus making it of more interest to those with limited time to attend."

The Bureau of Visual Instruction of the Wisconsin State University announces: "The Extension Division recognizes that the motion picture has vast educational possibilities, and should be brought into immediate and regular use in all grades of school work. To this end a film library is now being collected, which, to the present time, has sixty films ready for use, and which will be increased as quickly as possible for the schools of the state.

At Fort Du Pont, which is a Government reservation, the soldiers have started a moving picture house of their own in the barracks, at the same time selling refreshments with soft drinks. While this has not met with the approval of the people of Delaware City because of the loss of the soldier trade, it is officially reported that the officers are much gratified with the change it has wrought in the general bearing of the troops; the men are kept from the saloons and other excesses, while at the same time they are in a state of mind to be more easily handled; they are also allowed to admit at a small charge to cover expenses those townspeople who wish to come.

Rice Lake, Wisconsin, reports a "hot campaign" between the "wets" and the "drys" which has a most unusual condition attending the outcome. Many of the present saloon-keepers announce that even if the "wets" win they cannot afford to open their saloons or pay their licenses on account of the great loss they have sustained because of the moving pictures, which have practically ruined their trade; making it appear that if the town goes "wet" they must either close the picture places or the saloons will not live. All success to the moving picture house.

In Parsons, Kansas, the school authorities have made a contract with the manager of a local picture house by which, for $25 a month, he furnishes the films and the use of his place for two Friday afternoons each month. Either this exhibitor or the school authorities have been reading the Moving Picture Educator; probably the exhibitor must have the credit; this plan is one which has been repeatedly suggested on this page; this is the first occasion in which we have seen the idea carried out; it is worth recording here, in the hope that many other schools and exhibitors may form a similar agreement.

The Union Pacific Railroad Co. is educating its employees by means of the moving pictures; a special car equipped with an outfit, and supplied with the necessary films, is moved from place to place, so that those employed on any part of the road may not be neglected. Proper and improper firing of locomotives is illustrated by a doubleheader; one locomotive is throwing out vast volumes of black smoke, showing bad combusion, while another is throwing out clean and white smoke, showing good combustion with a saving of fuel. Proper and improper ways of jacking up cars, of coupling, of handling baggage, and of stepping on and off trains are illustrated. The pictures are full of thrills, involving the injury or crushing to death of several persons—cleverly impersonated by dummies.

CITY USES OF THE PICTURES.

Civic advancement is now one of the greatest possibilities since the advent of kinematography. Several cities are having particular and peculiar advantages advertised for the purpose of "booming" themselves. Even so large a place as Brooklyn is not too large but that it may seek increased population. The local Boards of Trade are having pictures taken and films made setting forth its great commercial advantages. In like manner many cities of the South and West are depicting their particular commercial, picturesque or health-giving properties. Famous holiday resorts are also not slow in appreciating these advantages with the desire to make known in picture that which they desire people to realize.

"Clean Up Work" is now no longer a fad; without the pictures there were no means of conveying the tried plans of experts to those who were willing to work but could not. Now pictures are scattered broadcast, school children, boy scouts and others, can follow the most tried and improved "ways and means" and the former fad has become a reality and "spotless town" is the present ambition of every community.

In Providence a civic theater is making broader these lines of usefulness and is inaugurating a plan of using the moving picture for all kinds of civic purposes, even to teaching foreigners the manners and customs of America, hoping thereby to check lawlessness, and to correspondingly increase better observance of laws of all kinds.

* * *

Scientific schools like the Sheffield in Connecticut and the Gary in Indiana are preparing a curriculum for general purposes; the "Story of Pig Iron" and "The Pipe in Making" with many others are specimens of what they are aiming to do. Pictures of the Panama Canal are about the most popular and instructive at this time; they are also much called for in all parts and are perhaps the leading educational at this time.

* * *

America is the greatest agricultural success in the world; this is because methods and tools of the highest kind are in use; in the old world this fact was very tantalizing; they know of the successes yet could not imitate them; the moving picture has now overcome this last difficulty. Farming pursuits are now extensively taught at home and abroad. Every agricultural institute has its moving picture part on the program. In Kenosha, Wis., recently, more than 1,000 farmers were interested with a series of these pictures.

BRITISH NOTES.

THE Committee of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association of Great Britain are recommendiing to the general council of the Association that immediate steps be taken for the promotion of a new Parliamentary Bill for the trade on this side. The whole of the provisions of this Bill have not yet been defined, but its object is to modify certain stringent regulations in the Cinematograph Act of 1909, notably the registration of moving-picture theaters instead of licensing.

An advertising idea of an unusual character emanates from a London film renter. One of his exclusives down for early release is entitled "The Carrier Pigeon," in which, it can be imagined, a carrier pigeon plays a prominent part. The other day several exhibitors were surprised to receive a box with a bird inside, along with a small supply of seed. To some it appeared cryptic, but it did not require a great detective power to discover the film it was advertising.

The Warwick Trading Co., a firm specializing in topicals accomplished a smart performance in connection with the recent visit of the King and Queen to France. The aviator, Hucks, was engaged to convey a camera man from Dover to Calais as an escort to the Royal steamer and to obtain birdseye pictures of the crossing and arrival in France. Immediately this had been done the aviator returned to London with the undeveloped negatives which were promptly dealt with by the Warwick Co. in such a manner that pictures were screened in the afternoon at the Coliseum which had only been taken a few hours previously in another country.

The Natural Color Kinematograph Co., Limited, has decided to wind up. Until recently it controlled, with Mr. Chas. Urban, Kinemacolor. The assets are given in rough figures as £150,000, and the liabilities £60,000.

The second International Kinematograph Exhibition to be held in London late in the year will not be officially recognized by the Exhibitors' Association as "it is intended to stimulate further competition and has a prejudicial effect upon exhibitors."

J. B. SUTCLIFFE.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

ONE of the most opportune and weighty remarks touching upon the censorship of motion pictures was embodied in a comment made by Judge Mayer, of the Chicago District Court, during the hearing of a case last week. The opponents to the proposed National Censorship bill should get it on record before the committee at Washington. The Lasky Feature Film Company, of this city, has been drawn into lagal entanglement with a Chicago concern through the interference of the Censor Board of that city with the exhibition of the well known comedy "Brewster's Millions." It has been produced on the stage hundreds of times throughout this country before audiences consisting of men, women and children and never before has there been the slightest intimation that the play contained anything immoral or tending to impair the morals of those who might witness it. Judge Mayer expressed the opinion that the Censor Board responsible for the legal tangle is a body of highly virtuous persons who attempt to dictate to others how to manage their affairs.

At an informal gathering of people engaged in various branches of the motion picture business a few nights ago, Judge Mayer's remark was a prominent topic and there was unanimous concurrence in the belief that the Chicago case is but the commencement of a series of evils that is bound to arise from the operation of such Boards. A promoter said: "The situation developing is practically a curtailment of the privileges to make contracts that are entirely legal in all respects, except so far as the whims of the Censor Boards are concerned. If this kind of business is to continue contracts between producers and renters and exhibitors of motion pictures are practically without value. This certainly is not an encouraging outlook for the people who have millions of dollars invested in the business and are expending thousands in it every day. The Chicago incident is practically a declaration that to guard against legal controversies such as have arisen in the Lasky matter all contracts must hereafter be framed with the provisio "subject to the action of the Chicago Board of Censors."

* * *

"I have no reason to believe that the members of the Chicago Board are other than respectable and honorable people, but past performances have convinced me that they are not over-stocked with common sense. I am also led to believe that all the censorship movements that have brought so much turmoil into this legitimate business field have started from and are being constantly prodded by a sentiment of bias on the part of people who, as a rule, hide in the background and have their bullets fired by those placed in the foreground under color of legal authority."

"If the motion picture people were composed of the same calibre as the majority of the so-called reformers display, there would then be some reason in the demand for censorship. They would then throw upon the market any old thing, regardless of merits from a moral, or any other standpoint. Time and again films costing thousands of dollars, and produced after months of preparation with every attention given to make it immune against the pencils of the censors; and after they have been endorsed by the now existing National Board of Censors, other censor outfits have intervened. The Windy City board practically sets itself up as the National Board of Control. No other authority is recognized by it, judging from the rulings of the past. True it really only dictates what shall, or shall not, be exhibited in Chicago, but in doing so it has practically declared that in the embodiment of moral perfection Chicago is superior to all other cities of the Union."

"Of course, great as the Chicago Board of Censors is, or claims to be, it is not omnipotent and persons aggrieved have the privilege of appealing to the courts, but this is expensive and leads to serious interference of business. It is a worm that eats into the profits and they may be wiped out entirely by prolonged litigation."

"It is wholly unfair that the motion picture business should be singled out for censorship assaults, anyway. Dramas and comedies upon the stages, burlesque shows, novels, sensational and detailed write-ups of crimes in the newspapers, all escape the torment. 'Protection of the morals of children' is the stereotyped explanation of those responsible for it. But few of them have had the courage to confess that they are biased, and nothing but complete elimination of motion pictures can satisfy them. This they cannot accomplish, so their only alternative is guerrilla warfare."

"I see that among those who appeared last week at Washington in support of the Hughes Bill to create a Federal board of censorship was Rev. William S. Chase, of Brooklyn. There is a type of which I have just spoken. He is one of the most bitter opponents of the motion picture industry in the country. He has cost the exhibitors of Greater New York endless trouble and expense and is given credit for the introduction of the Hughes bill. Many clergymen who at one time endorsed the policies of Rev. Chase have since become warm supporters of motion pictures, recognizing that since initiation of the campaign, producers and exhibitors have acceded to the demands for improvement in the moral tone of productions and operation of the theaters. But Rev. Chase is apparently as bitter today in his warfare as he was at the start. While not so prominent locally, he is making up for it in the national agitation."

"According to the press reports Rev. Chase declared before the committee at Washington that nine hundred thousand children see pictures shown every day in this country, and if only one child of that daily immense number is corrupted by an improper film, Federal censorship should be established. That is going some, isn't it? Followed by the hymn 'Ninety and Nine' that kind of argument would no doubt be appreciated if delivered from the clergyman"s pulpit, but I do not think it will carry much weight with the committee he addressed. Parabolic endeavors do not always fit in well when cold business facts are under consideration. According to statements presented to the committee 96 per cent. of the motion pictures exhibited in the United States are now being censored. There are now in existence ample laws to guard children who may be in danger of corruption by the remaining 4 per cent., if Rev. Chase and his followers will devote the same amount of time and labor they are expending in harassing the 96 per cent. towards requiring the enforcement of the laws. In other words the so-called reformers would have a stronger hold upon the sympathies of the public if they displayed more action in the right direction and indulged less in promiscuous generalities."

Speaking of business propositions recalls a complaint made by an exhibitor the other day. He is about to open a summer place. Last year he paid about $100 a week for his film service and was informed by his exchange that this year the price will be almost double. He indignantly left the exchange and sought service elsewhere. On the face of this statement it appears that the exchange was trying to make a "Patsy" of the exhibitor this year. But let us take all the facts of the case. The exhibitor admitted that the service really only cost him half the amount paid the exchange last year because a friend also used the films and split the cost.

It is not likely that a court of equity would sustain the complaining exhibitor. Regardless of the fact that the exchange knew the splitting was going on, the complaint is without merit. The real injured parties were the exhibitors who were paying $60 or $75 per week for film service naturally inferior to that for which the complaining exhibitor paid $100, but which really only cost him $50. There is an old legal adage that a complainant who wants justice must come into court with clean hands. It may be credited as a shrewd business move when an exhibitor succeeds in putting over a business proposition of that kind, but it is a phase of business competition which fair-minded people will not sustain against an exhibitor who may not care to imitate, or may not be fortunate enough to arrange. From a legal standpoint the procedure is entirely out of order. It recalls the old time law in many of the states protecting livery stable keepers. If a horse is hired to be used in driving to a certain point and return and the person hiring drives beyond that point he is liable to prosecution for conversion.

GEORGE KLEINE MOVES.

The New York offices of the George Kleine attractions have been moved from suite 505-6-7 Longacre Building to the New Candler Theater Building at 226 West 42d Street. The second floor of this beautiful new playhouse will be entirely devoted to booking headquarters for the attractions. An up-to-the-minute projection room will be an attractive feature of the new headquarters.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Overcrowding.

ONE of those "regular" managers, writes us touching on a vital matter, which is taken up here not because we believe that anything can be done, but in the hope that it will help to keep a few people out of trouble. He writes:

> Just as the producers are working over-time in an effort to turn out footage, so does every little hamlet seem over supplied with theaters. Two were here and getting by with good programmes from pictures to music; and behold another is being built. With the present "show" as a standard, it will cost about $160.00 per day to operate the three; the gross expenditure on pictures in the town can not be expected to be more than $130.00—the effect is written on the wall. Four times in four years we have gone through a three-cornered fight and have won, and we'll win again, but it seems that we must spend a thousand a year whipping out excessive opposition. Oh well, it's more expensive than that to the aforesaid opposition!

It is that way in pretty nearly every line of business. Time was when the business got along very nicely with about ten companies putting out about 25 to 30 reels a week. Then came the Film Supply, and these split and gave us Universal and Mutual, to say nothing of a couple of hundred feature people.

It's the same way with the theaters. Everyone wants to get into the business because everyone "knows" that the photoplay theaters are making money hand over fist and all the managers are getting lame backs lugging money over to the bank when they can't borrow a wheelbarrow. So right away they go and build houses and start in to make some of this fabulous fortune and find that it is fabulous fortune indeed.

In the particular town where this correspondent resides, it will normally cost $160 to get $130—a loss of $30 a day, but when the competition comes it is only natural to suppose that fighting will be done along the usual lines of increased bills "to beat the other fellow." This means an increased investment with no appreciable increase in the receipts, and the establishment of a new standard that must be adhered to when the inevitable happens and one of the factors of the triangular fight goes out of business. It seems a pity that this sheep-like trait should curse the business. If any reader of this department is preparing to get into the sheep class, will he please look the field over first and not crowd in where no profit can accrue.

We know where we can get a total of $120,000 in lots of from $5,000 to $30,000, for any photoplay venture that we say is good, and we have not spoken yet because the only field that is not overcrowded is the making of absolutely first class film.

Feature Films

And here is another idea from a man who recently wrote about features not paying.

> Now, you advised running but one of the big 'uns each week, and on a regular day. That's what we did do except in one case, and both were taken then that the opposition might not oppose "Checkers" with "Quo Vadis". Then you say, see them first. Impossible in the south where cities are hundreds of miles apart. Then again distributors politely decline to rent single productions; it's a yearly contract or nothing with them—and they were none too conscientious about the stuff they shoved forward while those contracts were in force.
> To my mind the biggest mistake made with the feature is its rental without a provision for a minimum admission. They place a flat rental on a particular film, so that the man running it for thirteen hours per day pays the same gross as the poor guy who can operate but six hours. The first fellow is actually paying half as much per exhibition for the film, and charges an admission less than is possible with the small town man. Then a wiseacre finds out about the difference, and it's good night! feature for the l. f. Laemmle is trying to get away from that, but he can not do it alone. Why should not a film be paid for per exhibition and not per day, anyway?

Why?

We'll be the goat: Why? It does not make any very great difference to the owner of the subject whether it is run twice or ten times, Why should he base the earning capacity of the film on the number of times run? And in the event of such a rule being made, what chance would the little fellow with a two or three show house stand against the ten show man? As a rule the three show program is better than the hurried ten show bill, yet the three show man would not be able to book the subject until the ten show people, paying three and a third times what he would pay, had had all the best of it. That is not good argument.

On the other hand, we believe that most of the big special people do put a minimum price on the admission to be charged. We know that this was being done before Mr. Laemmle swung into line. It is but proper that this should be so, because so many managers are unable to think above ten cents without powerful assistance. We told once before of the Chicago exhibitor who argued with the Kleine people over the first showing of Quo Vadis in dramatic theaters at advanced prices. "I could get ten cents for that easy," he announced.

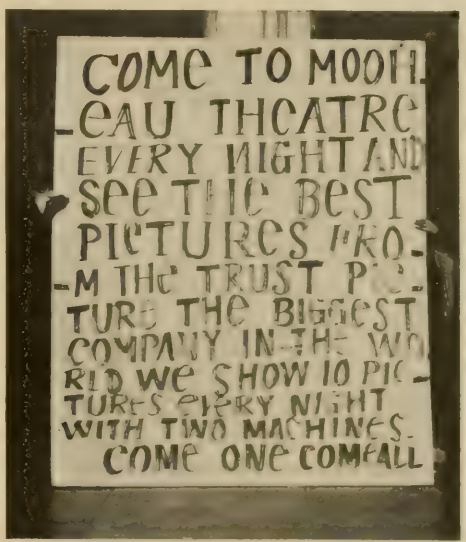
In most towns the feature is still the thing in spite of the hard knocks given it by the mass of rot that is mixed with the good. For two weeks last January we visited every theater in Jacksonville every night and saw the crowd follow the multiple. Possibly the audiences in the town from which this correspondent writes have not been properly educated to the feature, though it is seldom that much education is required.

We would like to hear from some other medium-sized town managers on the feature proposition.

Meantime there is this one certain and assured fact. There never will come a time when the multiple will entirely displace the one reel stuff, and it will pay more manufacturers to give more attention to their thousand foot lengths.

Hawaiian Frankness.

When Homer Croy started on his trip around the world in the interests of certain newspaper combinations, he took along a Universal camera and is going to see the world through the eyes of a humorist, which is a very decidedly novel point of view. He also promised that with his trusty camera he would shoot some sights for this department and a recent mail brings the first fruits of his trip. This is it:



You can get some idea of the size of the sign from the two hands that steady the literary effusion. This is the house announcement of a theater in Hilo, Hawaiian Islands, about 250 miles from Honolulu, and Croy suggests that this is the first time that a second projection machine has been made the feature above the films. The reason for the second machine is explained in this excerpt from a circular which accompanies the photograph. It is on green news stock seven by seventeen inches. At the top is the name of the house, the M. and T. in about an eleven line gothic letter and the rest of the title in twenty-point gothic. An eleven line letter is 88 points against 20 points. Below this is "Tonight——remember——Tonight" and then follows the explanatory paragraph in a most remarkable type suggesting an effort to make Hebrew characters into English. It reads:

> BIG COLLECTIONS OF TRUSTED FILMS CAREFULLY SELECTED FROM THE BEST MOVING PICTURE THEATER IN HONOLULU. COME AND SEE IT FOR YOURSELF AND YOU WILL GET YOUR MONEY'S WORTH. WE ARE RUNNING A BIG PROGRAM WIHT TWO MACHINES TO SAVE MORE TIME SO AS TO GIVE TWO SHOWS.

Wonder how many American houses (Yes, Hawaii is also American) also run two machines so as "to save more time and give two shows."

They run two shows, starting the first at half-past six. The list runs Lone Dog, the Faithful, As things used to be (evidently their own title), The Kentucky Derby What the good book thauhgt (!) A Hegeis among Men, W western Redemption (Broncho Billy), The girl and the Cowboy, Nothing Shall be hidden, Massacre of 4th Cavalry Wars. The prices are "the same as usual." but Croy forgot to tell what they get for ten reels. The lower half of the bill is in Chinese characters.

Mr. Croy is a man with a singularly intelligent sense of humor and we think he is going to give the Universal AND this department some mighty good stuff. Watch for both.

Why Not Make It So?

E. R. Westfall, of the Princess theater, Mt. Vernon, Ohio, sends in a window card in which he announces that "We have changed the name from the Sound Asleep to the Wide Awake." Still, we note he is still using the name The Princess. He writes that he took a house that was dead "with the flowers pinned to it," and started to build it up. We think that he overlooked a good move when he did not keep the promise on the card and change the name of the house to The Wide Awake. It would have kept in mind the new and hustling management. He adds:

> My house accommodates only 250. I realize that for a small house to do a big business it must show big stuff, but the five cent price is a tradition here, the other places advertising "Always five cents." Hence the ad for Arizona. I've been boosting, working hard and letting the other fellows knock.

In the long run most persons will realize that the other fellow would not "knock" unless he was scared about something, so that is nothing to worry about. It is much better to let the opposition do the talking. The Arizona ad reads:

Get Out of the Old Rut.
Forget it.

Get it out of your system that pictures are never worth more than five cents.

There is as much difference in pictures as in silk and calico.

Famous Players Day.

We are showing the "silk" of the moving picture world

Another Door Knobber.

Hay and Nicholas of the Haynic Theater, Fairmont, Minn., offer in evidence another form of the door knob special. This is a single stiff card, six by nine inches, with the date and

The D. K. Special

In the original the D. K. is a ten-line letter. This stiff card protects the heralds for the various specials of the week. If there is any purely local matter this is set up and printed in straight newspaper column, or in display advertising. The management writes:

> We have been using this for eight weeks, distributing about 500 copies a week, and have found it excellent advertising. We are much obliged to Mr. Cornelius for the idea. It is GOOD.

Where many features are played, it is cheaper to get the bulletins than to have the matter set up and printed. There is a certain lack of uniformity, but on the other hand this very thing calls attention to the diversity of the offering. The D. K. seems to be a very elastic idea.

The Right Cuts.

Somehow the Plaza Theater, Montgomery, Ala., uses the right sort of cuts for its railroad folder program. Most programs that are printed on good grade paper are spoiled through the use of a 50 or 60 screen cut, designed for newspaper work, that looks worse than nothing at all on coated paper, but the Plaza has an excellent cut of Miss Kathlyn Williams and good enough cuts of Miss Clara Kimball Young and Augustus Phillips. It enhances the appearance of the folder very decidedly. They use two days to the page in the program proper, with just a hint of each subject and the names of the leading players. The pages look clean and attractive because there is not too much type used and there is a proper proportion between the title and the body type.

In a town the size of Montgomery it would be well to give the street address, the prices and the hours of performance, but this is about the only oversight. Some of those who have written in for sample programs should address this house, enclosing return postage.

Doubling Up.

The Broad Theater, Bethlehem, Pa., and the Lehigh Orpheum, South Bethlehem, are doubling up the same program, which is a first cousin to the Third Street Theater, Easton, in much of its makeup. Both the original and this adaptation are open to the objection that the actual program is not made sufficiently prominent. Boxing in the announcements with two or three point rule would help greatly in bringing up the announcements. If you bury your house program in the advertising, at least provide a coffin for decent interment.

Too Loud.

The Hippodrome, Shreveport, Louisiana, rings the wrong bell in a recent issue. It starts out to explain that certain opposition houses are making "fabulous" offers for a chance to run the same make of films they use. It is a bad plan to talk about your opposition and a worse one to paint them as being willing to spend any amount of money to get the best. The item goes on to explain that this organization has all of the good directors, most of the good actors, and that the other two combinations merely have actors feebly struggling to do their best under incompetent direction, and adds "no wonder they are rotten."

And two pages over it advertises a feature program at Dreamland, not one of the attractions belonging to the service spoken of. It may be that no one will notice this, and then again some might.

It's a bad plan to give space to decrying other wares, or booking your own at the expense of something else. Later on it may be there will come a switch and the competition will have the Hippodrome's admission that it then has a rotten service and the much hated competitor has the best. Statements such as these are always reactionary, even where no use can be made of the material by the opposition. You'll have all you can do to convince patrons that your offering is the best, and if you can do this you will not have to point out the other fellow's defects. The patron, not yourself, should be the one to make comparison.

Something New.

The Lubin theater, Cincinnati, is not now a Lubin house, but it retains that title and the house sheet carries the name of the Lubin News. In a recent issue it uses a news story that can be carried into other programs. Here it is:

> An entirely new and novel use for motion pictures was discovered by His Honor, Judge Fricke, of the Cincinnati Court of Domestic Relations. After listening to the troubles of William Carlisle, arrested on the complaint of his wife, the learned Judge ruled that the prisoner immediately take his wife to the Lubin Theater to witness the film production of "Clothes," and to report to the Court on Friday morning, at which time decision would be rendered. Carlisle and his wife visited the Lubin Thursday, as ordered, and were evidently deeply impressed with the lesson in extravagance set forth in the motion picture, with the result that Friday morning, bright and early, an entirely different and supremely happy couple smilingly entered Judge Fricke's Court, arm in arm. Carlisle graphically related the story of "Clothes" to the Judge, and firmly promised to mend his ways and pay more attention to his wife in the future. It is needless to add that, after a few fatherly words of advice to the happy pair, His Honor dismissed the case.

From An Old-Timer.

Jake Schwartz, the new publicity promoter of Pearce's theater, Houston, Texas, is one of the old timers. Here is a characteristic letter from him that promises some good things coming. We wonder how many of the managers of today ever heard of the Magniscope?

> Well the writer has gotten back into the game, and once more in the lime light.
> I want to go back a number of years, how many I will not say, and tell you a few things that happened. I built and opened practically the first moving picture theater in the State of Texas. It was in the early days, when one reel of pictures was run for an indefinite time, on the old Magniscope machine with a fly wheel 3 feet in diameter, taking current from the trolley circuit, reducing it by the aid of barreis of water, a picture being possibly 50 feet in length, cemented together in the shape of a belt. The machine and operator were roped in in the center of a store room, the audience standing around holding onto the ropes and looking at the picture. The screen was possibly 10 or 15 feet away.
>
> About three years ago I left New York to return to my old stamping grounds, Texas, and upon my arrival in Houston was surprised at the wonderful improvement that had taken place, in every line of business, and particularly in the amusement line. Fourteen years ago, I had the second theater in Houston, playing dramatic shows. At that time there were only two theaters, and even then not sufficient business to keep them both going. Today we have possibly twenty places of amusement, and some of them structures with interior fittings equal to the best theater of the country, devoted exclusively to exhibiting particularly handsome photoplays.
> When I returned to Texas, I saw the possibilities of a local moving picture plant, and started in with that in view, of producing Moving Pictures for local theaters and commercial business. At first it was an "up hill pull," but today have established myself, and publish and release every week an Animated Weekly, showing all the local events that transpire in and around Houston. In addition, this Weekly is being shown at one of the most prominent and exclusive photoplay theaters in this section of the country, which is Pearce's Theater, and we have the credit of having shown in pictures, the first actual movement of Uncle Sam's soldier boys toward Mexico.
>
> It is the first theater in this part of the country that has gone to such extreme cost of having an "Animated Weekly" of local events made especially for them. You can imagine the interest manifested by the patrons of this theater, when a day or two after an event of any great interest transpires, they see in it moving pictures on the screen at the Pearce. I have a complete developing plant, capable of turning out the work, if necessary, within four hours of the happening. In addition to this Animated Weekly, I have associated myself with the Pearce theater as publicity promoter, and you can just imagine what glorious times I am having with the aid of the camera, and a good theater wherein pictures are projected with numerous patrons to see them.
>
> I have a number of other stunts that will be pulled off, and will gladly keep you posted as they occur.

It's a Bird.

They plug harder on the other side because the competition is greater. Lately Davison's Films, London, sent out a box that had a most interesting rattle. On the cover was an advertisement for "The Carrier Pigeon." Inside was a tiny celluloid pigeon and a full ration of corn.

Ornamental and Useful.

B. Nichols, of the M. P. Sales Agency, London, sends a decidedly useful souvenir in the form of a nickeled envelope opener with a strong magnifying glass in the end, just the right size to use in examining film. It is one of the handiest souvenirs we have seen.

And just as one of the signs of the times, the M. P. Sales Agency recently took an entire page of a London daily newspaper to advertise their handling of the new Klaw and Erlanger films. Mr. Nichols has not lost his Yankee hustle if he has been abroad so many years.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

At the Ed-Au.

WITH Pop Hoadley in the President's chair and Monte Katterjohn sitting in as Secretary, the seventh meeting of the Ed-Au club was by far the best yet. Bennie Schulberg, who was to have read a paper in reply of Pop Hoadley, begged off because he's been walking the floor nights with his small son, and so a general discussion was had in which most of the members participated.

One matter brought up was the question of buying a one-reel story and turning it into a double or buying what the author offered as a double for a single reel and paying the single reel price without consulting the author. It was decided that the question of whether a script was one or two reels was still uncertain, but it was agreed that an author should be given opportunity to refuse a one-reel price for what he considered a two-reel idea and that if possible, he should be permitted to elaborate a single into a double himself. It was the argument of the editorial section of the club that at present they purchased ideas rather than full photoplays in a majority of instances.

A more important matter was the question of credit to authors for unusual accomplishments. It was pointed out that one of the most profitable subjects ever put out paid its author a scandalously small sum in direct payment and bonus, and that several other big winners have returned little or nothing to the author of the success. It is no part of the business of the club to undertake reform movements, but it was pointed out to the members that it is now possible to make some arrangement whereby an unusually profitable release will bring added money to the man supplying the idea.

Monte Katterjohn announced that the Universal will make a new introductory scene for Neptune's Daughter showing the author (Capt. Peacocke) as well as the director and players, and spoke of a recent argument in which he offered to undertake to write a more successful story than Richard Harding Davis offered at a fancy price, provided that Mr. Davis would personally write the working script. Mr. Davis' immediate departure for Mexico has halted the discussion.

The perennial subject of adaptations came up and Benny Schulberg stood pretty much alone in his contention that the man who made the adaptation was entitled to small credit alongside the author of the book or drama. Most of the members and practically all of the other editors declared that the real success was made by the writer who could not only invent the story but put it in photoplay form himself, since in that case he made a practical photoplay. One member drew a comparison between the present condition in photoplay and the vaudeville headliner of ten years ago whose name on the billboards brought new patrons in while the standard acts made good for their shortcomings. It was accepted that the manufacturers were getting more cautious in their dealings with authors and were demanding something likely to make a good play instead of anything with a big name attached.

At the business session Arthur Leeds, of the Photoplay Author, protested that the name Ed-Au lacked a proper dignity, offering in its stead the Editor and Authors Club. Just before another member got up to amend the suggestion by making it the Photoplay Editors and Authors Club of America, President Hoadley called for a vote. The motion was defeated by a vote of seventeen to four.

These new members were admitted: Frederick Robert Sullivan, author of the Thanhouser company; Ralph E. Stoddard, author, of Cleveland; A. W. Thomas, author, editor of the Photoplay Magazine; Phil Lonergan, editor, Thanhouser; Harry O. Hoyt, author, Minneapolis; Edwin Ray Coffin, author, Dexter, N. M.; Miss Maibelle Heikes Justice, author, Chicago, and Perry N. Vekroff, editor for Kinemacolor, who was present at the meeting and later wrote he was sorry he had not come in before.

The next meeting will be held June 6th. Applications and other communications should be addressed to Monte L. Katterjohn, Universal Film Manufacturing Co., Mecca Building, New York City.

Those present at the meeting were Pop Hoadley, Monte Katterjohn, Arthur Leeds, Henry Albert Phillips, John W. Kellette, Raymond L. Shrock, Jack J. Clark, Miss Gene Gauntier, Edwin M. LaRoche, Joseph F. Poland, Mark S. Reardon, III, E. M. Wickes, Mrs. Mary Louise Farley, Mrs. Isobel M. Reynolds, James Carroll, Edward J. Montague, A. Van Buren Powell, B. P. Schulberg, Perry B. Vekroff, Mrs. Catherine Carr, Bert Adler and E. W. Sargent.

Market Moves.

The Sterling Motion Picture Company is in the market for one and two-reel comedies that will fit Ford Sterling. They must be "along novel lines, compelling in action and virile of plot." For these top-notch prices will be paid. Mr. Balshofer does not state his ideas of top notch prices. Send to Hollywood, Calif.

Mrs. Brandon writes that Eclair is paying higher prices and cites one arrangement with a free lance for $35 a reel for first choice of stories.

There have been so many requests for an opening for stories using negroes that we depart from our usual custom of listing only the companies having an outlet to say that the Al. Bartlett Film Company, Atlanta, Ga., is an organization composed of negroes, making stories of negro life exclusively. We know absolutely nothing of the financial status of this company and the information is given for what it is worth. The stories must not be offensive to the colored race.

Two More.

Evidently the Photoplay Authors' League of Los Angeles is not going to have things all its own way. Miss Grace Adele Pierce, of Los Angeles, who has been peeved ever since Biograph took a script of Judith of Bethulia from her and used Thomas Bailey Aldrich's name on the film, is agitating the League of American Penwomen to have a bill presented to Congress giving the authors their rights (we've heard that word "rights" before) and they are going to soak it to editors, publishers and manufacturers good and hard.

Meantime in Cleveland, A. W. Thomas has started another league of mixed authors through the medium of a dollar and a quarter dinner.

Presently they will have to have a Congressional Committee on Authors' Rights to handle these numerous bills. Bill Lord Wright suggests that we join with him in starting an official organ or something or other to be called the Monthly Howl. We shall have to do something to get in all this reform movement.

Bannister Merwin.

Bannister Merwin writes that he is now with the London Film Company, having dropped from the Edison ranks last fall. He writes that he is in the market only for purely English subjects and does not believe that many American writers can supply this want, though he will be glad to see top grade work that is eminently British in its atmosphere as well as settings. He writes:

> We are running this department much along the lines of a magazine editor's department. Any new writer who shows promise will get all the encouragement we can give him. We have a system of handling manuscripts which is so prompt that the rejections are going back to the author usually within three or four days. My theory is that a manuscript is an author's capital and should be respected as such whether it is available or not. It should be handled carefully and if not available returned as quickly as possible.

We hope some day to see a similar system generally in use over here. There are studios now that return promptly, that do not mark up the script and who in general act as though they realized that the author had some rights, but these are still too few. Some script handling systems are positively vicious and give absolutely no consideration to the rights of courtesy.

The picture shows Mr. and Mrs. Merwin in their home on the Thames, where they still spend their week-ends.

Authorities.

Recently a writer sent in a script which had just come back from a studio. This writer has a practice of attaching to the script a front sheet carrying only the title of the story, his address and the request that suggestions be made on that sheet. The only comment was "Cast must be placed before synopsis."

We submit that that is not a real helpful hint. Most studios want the synopsis first and then the cast, the story being more important to most editors, but this particular editor wants to say something and this is all he can think of to say.

Three scripts submitted to another studio and sent here by two different writers, all carry the same. "Plot not strong enough" written in soft lead pencil directly upon the first sheet of the script.

Possibly the plot was not strong enough, but if the editor wants to exercise his arm and air his opinions, he should do so on a separate sheet of paper and not mark up the script. No editor who does not know enough not to mark up a script does not know enough to venture an opinion, no matter if he does happen to be in a position of authority.

Building Up.

No particular spike in a keg of railroad spikes looks any larger than its fellows, because it isn't, but put one spike in a box of carpet tacks and by comparison it looks gigantic.

That's just about the way it is with scripts. After the hopelessly bad have been weeded out, there remains a lot of stuff of general average merit. One is about as good as the other, so none of them make any particular impression. But now and then there comes along a novel story that looks as big as a spike in a box of tacks. That's the story that is bought. If you give your story merely the average development, it will look as good as the rest, but no better, and to attract the editorial eye you must loom large. You must have something not as good, but better than the other fellows offer, or you will stay in their class.

The answer is very simple. Don't be satisfied with your story on the first draft. Work over it until you know you cannot make it better. And working over it means building up the plot; strengthening the punch. It does not mean merely the technical appearance of the script. Technical form alone unbacked by plot will never get you anywhere. Build up the plot and the technique will take care of itself.

Two New Ones.

Two new photoplaywright monthlies have made their debut. One is The Photoplay Writer, published in London by Ernest A. Dench. The American end is looked after by Russell E. Smith, of the Mutual script department, who contributes an article on the extravagance in the use of inside sets. Much of the rest of the first issue is written by Mr. Dench himself. The issue will not interest readers on this side, being too purely British in its point of view.

The Photoplay Scenario, edited by A. W. Thomas, offers a presentable first issue, though much space is wasted on a badly compiled list of studio wants "revised as of March 20, 1914," at which time Mr. Thomas is still ignorant of the fact that the Mutual Bureau was moved to Los Angeles in January, that there is a Beauty company, and that Monte Katterjohn is the eastern Universal editor. Indeed, the English publication has a better list of American wants than the Chicago issue.

Both publications give considerable space to their side lines, as books and criticisms.

Prices.

Here is a most remarkable letter from a correspondent:

> You state in previous issues of the World that photoplay writers are demanding prices approximating ($50) Fifty Dollars a reel; doesn't that refer to writers that are already there? What chance has a novice of getting reasonable return for the labor attached to writing plays?
>
> One in close with the profession has given me a fit of the blues; he states as his personal knowledge that writers, experienced writers, were averaging Ten Dollars ($10) a reel. Please understand me in this matter ,and don't confound me with those that consider writing an easy game and the size of the check the paramount question. What I desire to be correctly informed of—in the profession of writing photoplays—is one adequately compensated for their labor; in plain English, Is it worth while?
> Work, intelligently directed, brings results. Are the results in this line worthy of the effort applied?

We have never said that all scripts are worth $50 per reel, but we have stated that the general average of the better companies is $50 per reel or more. Any person "close with the profession," who states of his personal knowledge that experienced writers average ten dollars a reel is either a liar or a congenital idiot.

We know one writer who in 53 weeks made $1,700, at a minimum price of $100 a reel. Another contracted for 50 stories at a flat price of $100 each. One of the licensed companies is paying as high as $75 a reel for comedy, according to William Lord Wright, who generally knows what he is talking about. In the month of April, one writer was paid $560 for sixteen half-reel scripts, and another writer was given $400 for a particularly good two-reel subject.

If it were not worth while would men like Louis Reeves Harrison, James Oliver Curwood, Mark Swan, Gilson Willetts, Capt. Peacocke and others give their time to it when they can get a top price for fiction?

The novice is paid what his script is worth, and it may not be worth more than ten dollars for the idea alone, but ten dollars is forty dollars less than the standard price at present prevailing with the better class of companies. Let our correspondent take heart of grace and stop listing to the studio person with a poor array of facts.

Length.

The other day we saw a script that was nine-tenths padding, and the writer explained that he knew it was padding, but he did not have a sufficient number of scenes and had to write some more to pull it up to a full reel.

That's a sloppy way of working. If you have a half reel idea, don't try to make it into a full reel. You can't sell it as a full reel and probably no one will take the trouble to cut it down to a half. Tell your story. If it runs only nine scenes and nine scenes are all you can legitimately make out of it, let it go as nine scenes. Don't feel you must add forty scenes of padding to make it stick. You can't sell more than you have to sell, so don't try to and you may be able to sell what you have.

Criticism.

Having found that the criticism is safer than the school scheme, the film critic is springing up all over the country. Even the small towns have them.

They are doing just as much harm as the schools, because they work in the same way, giving false encouragement to the incompetent to "string them along" as long as possible.

The man who takes the proper pains in criticising a script is working at the rate of about $1.50 an hour. That does not pay him if he is sufficiently instructed to be competent to criticise. One man the other day expressed surprise at our having found it necessary to drop criticism, suggesting that a cheap typist and some form letters would cover the ground, but that is not criticism. To give it its proper name, it is swindling.

Slipping Cogs.

A Canadian correspondent sends in a clipping from a Montreal paper, the Standard, in which a dramatic critic comments on the fact that the audience in a certain theater laughed at the leaders in a certain dramatic script and adds:

> Six months ago nobody would think of laughing at a dramatic subject, and here is the best part of a large audience taking the big scene in the picture play as a joke. Is it possible that the novelty of pictures is wearing off, and that the public is beginning to analyze the subjects and the photography for itself? If that's the case, the men who make the films will have to go slow with scenes which are illogical. It was the unnaturalness of the melodrama that swept it from the stage some four seasons ago, and pictures have replaced melodramas to a great extent.

Precisely so. No longer does anything and everything pass current. Now the story must ring true and the leaders as well. Audiences are growing increasingly discriminating and they demand a standard undreamed of four years ago.

Suppose you help along by being logical and convincing in your scripts. Then the director has less excuse.

Inquiries

NOTE—No inquiries can be replied to by mail. Look for your answer here. No question can be replied to that necessitates the handling of the manuscript. Always give your name and address. It will not be published. A list of addresses, to which photoplays should be sent, will be supplied on receipt of a STAMPED AND SELF ADDRESSED ENVELOPE. The request should be made to the paper direct and not to this department, nor to the Answers Man.

E. D. S.—Any company can make race track pictures if it wants to, but it seldom wants to, unless the story is particularly strong. Better work it so that the story does not require any particular race and then any stock picture of a race can be used. Keep the acting scenes to small compass, getting the horses and the large crowd for local color from stock. There is no company with special facilities for this line of work.

G. T.—We think that by the time this gets in print Mr. Mace will be at the Hotel Astor, New York City. His regular address is Los Angeles. This paper very lately announced his change to the head of his own company.

W. H.—Some comedians get more than most dramatic players, because they are harder to find. Ford Sterling gets one of the largest salaries in the game, but we cannot compare his salary with that of the particular player you name.

J. B.—In "The Scar" Miss Violet Cameron was the girl, the Judge was W. R. Randall and Joseph McDermott was the son. Miss Harriet Notter is the Selig Red Head. Miss Lillian Leighton plays the Widow. Kinemacolor is releasing.

H. W.—The company blew up a long time ago. Copy your carbon and send out again. Don't take addresses from a two-year-old book. Send for a new list and work from that, getting a new issue at least every three months.

CHICKEN BILL.—Sign a name next time or no answer. William Nigh is the player. He is with Keystone still.

T. G. F.—Write George Kleine for particulars of the Cines contest.

H. M. S.—Visions are passe because they make trouble. Assuredly dramatic technique is important in photoplay if by that you mean the development of the situation to get the fullest dramatic effect. If you mean the technique of the stage, that is another mater. The technique of the camera replaces the technique of the stage in photoplay, but dramatic construction is applicable to both.

W. C. B.—Watch the "Stories of the Films" in each issue for companies using children and keep posted. Edison has some clever child players and Keystone makes child comedies. Since you are right on the ground why not make personal inquiry?

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scrits.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

17 Madison Avenue - New York City

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Manufacturers Notice.

IT is an established rule of the Moving Picture World and of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until such articles have been demonstrated to a member of our staff. In case of apparatus pertaining to projection this means the editor of this department.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending 4 cents, stamps, (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay.

The first seventy-four questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form. They may be obtained by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy. You may be surprised at the number of questions you can't answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 33.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Permission to use the contributor's name must accompany each answer, otherwise only the name of the city will be used. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

If, after taking your motor apart to repair, it ran with an abnormally high speed, to what would you attribute the cause? What mechanical troubles are likely to prevent a motor from starting? If, after installing a motor, it refused to start, where would you look for the trouble? Show, by sketches, correct method of connecting a shunt-wound motor with its starting-box and the line. Explain your reasons for the various connections. What is the electrical action when the motor is connected as per your sketch? What is likely to happen if the connection be not made correctly? Why is it small motors can be used without a starting-box?

Roll of Honor.

The selection of the answer to question 27 was easy. There were a great many replies, but there was one which, in point of clearness, was far ahead of all the rest. This is, of course, the one selected for publication.

The Roll of Honor consists of W. S. James, Camden, New Jersey; L. B. Minges, Lestershire, New York; S. S. Holt, Marshalltown, Iowa; Chicago; Harry T. Dobson, Toronto, Canada; Boston, Massachusetts (2); Harry A. Meyer, Paducah, Kentucky; Jos. H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; Seattle, Washington; L. S. Usher, Winnipeg, Canada; San Francisco, California and Mobile, Alabama.

The reply selected for publication is by A. C. Stewart, Waitsburg, Washington, who is, as he puts it: "An operator who is his own proprietor; not a proprietor who is his own operator." As the immortal Grape-nut said, "There is a difference."

Answer to Question No. 27.

By A. C. Stewart, Waitsburg, Washington.

The question:

Suppose you are employed as operator for a theater in course of construction. The available current supply is 110 volt, 60 cycle a. c. The manager asks you what will be the relative cost of using (a) resistance, (b) economizer, (d) motor generator set. He also asks you to estimate the saving (current, 9 cents per k.w.) effected by using an economizer, as against resistance; also the saving effected by purchasing a motor generator set, as against resistance, and as against an economizer. Would your answer be in any way changed if the current were 25 cycle or 133 cycle instead of 60?

The answer:

Assuming the house was to run six hours a day, and you need the curtain brilliancy produced by 60 amperes a. c. Rheostat: 60 × 110 = 6,600 watt hours, or 39.6 k.w. hours per day. At 9 cents a k.w., this would cost $3.56 a day. Transformer: 60 × 35 = 2,100 watts an hour, or 12.6 k.w. hours a day. Allowing the efficiency of the device to be 95%, we have, 95:100::12.6:X; or $\frac{100 \times 12.6}{95} = 13$; X = 13 and 13 k.w. hours a day at 9 cents, is $1.17 a day. Motor generator: With an a. c. to d. c. motor generator set, we would need, say, 40 amperes of d. c. to get the same brilliancy as with 60 amperes a. c. 40 × 48 = 1,920 watts an hour, or 11.5 k.w. hours per day. Allowing the efficiency to be 75%, we have 75:100::11.5:X; X = 15, and 15 k.w. hours at 9 cents is $1.35 a day. The saving of a transformer over a rheostat under these conditions would be $2.39 a day, or $16.73 in seven days, or almost $900 per year. The saving of a transformer over a M. G. would be 18 cents a day, or $1.26 for seven days, or about $65.00 per year. There are, however, other factors than cost to be considered. The rheostat gives off considerable heat, and, if kept in the operating room where it will be accessible in case of trouble, is a source of discomfort to the operator, especially in warm weather; also it is subject to loosening of connections, and burned coils, shorts, grounds, etc., and repairs are hard to make while it is hot. We may, therefore, in fact, eliminate the rheostat from our calculations. This leaves us the transformer and the motor generator. The motor generator while costing $2.21 less a day to run than the rheostat, will cost 18 cents a day more than the transformer; also the initial outlay will be greater, as well as the item of depreciation, since in a good transformer, handled with ordinary care, the depreciation is negligible. To compensate for this the motor generator gives us direct current, which means a quiet arc which is easy to control, less heat in the lamp house, and a light that is soft, white, and restful to the eyes. With 60 cycle current, circumstances and conditions, as well as the amount of capital available, would govern the choice between motor generator and transformer. The same would hold good with 133 cycle. With 25 cycle, the motor generator would be the only one of the three devices to consider, since at that frequency flicker due to the alterations is plainly visible on the screen, hence really good results are impossible. The figures quoted are, of course, only approximate, as the efficiencies of different devices vary.

I have not checked over friend Stewart's figures, but I wish to call particular attention to the clearness and conciseness of his answer, as well as to the completeness with which he covers the ground.

Editor Will Visit.

The editor intends to head his two-wheeled Go-devil in the direction of the North Pole about May 27th or 28th. He will stop in New Haven and visit the boys for one day, proceeding thence to Springfield, Mass., where he will visit the District Convention, May 31st, and then, weather permitting, proceed to Albany.

I shall be glad to visit any unions lying approximately on my route, up to the limit of the time I can spare, so any of you who desire to see the editor, and personally examine the brand of horns he wears, can obtain that privilege by communicating with him at once.

Generator Gas Engine for Sale.

The editor knows of an 8 k.w., 70 volt, 150 ampere d. c. Eck generator, specially built for moving picture purposes, and a 12 h.p. Vreeland gas engine which is for sale, including a large marble switchboard, complete with switches, voltmeter, ammeter, etc. This outfit can be had for about half its real worth, the purchaser to pay the cost of this notice at advertising rates, so that I won't be accused of butting into the adverising department.

The generator is in first class condition, but the valves of the engine will require $35.00 or $40.00 worth of overhauling, whereupon the whole outfit will be practically as good as new. To a theater manager located in or near New York it is certainly a cheap outfit, and even for a long shipment the freight would not amount to enough so that the purchaser would not save at least $200.00 or $300.00.

Another School.

On Friday evening, May 1st, by invitation of the West Side Y. M. C. A. of New York City, the editor attended what was announced as the opening lecture of a new operators' school, just launched by the West Side Y. M. C. A. He was told that H. S. Wyncoop, chief engineer of the Dept. of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity, who also has direct supervision over the examination of operators, would speak, using for his theme "New York City Requirements of the Operator." Also that Mr. Skerret of the Nicholas Power Company, and Mr. Robin of the Simplex Company would speak, but that proved to be a typographical, or some other kind of an error, for these gentlemen were conspicuous by their absence, Mr. Wyncoop being the only speaker.

The auditorium was well filled, Local Union 306, I. A. T. S. E. was represented by its business agent and its treasurer, as well as by several members.

The first thing on the program was the showing of a Pathe film. Now, you would suppose that on an occasion of this kind, at the starting of a school for operators, the projection would certainly be at least passably fair. As a matter of fact it was very, very poor. The picture, although a Pathe, did the highland-fling, due, unquestionably at least in part, to lack of proper adjustment of the mechanism, or to worn machine parts. The light was very poorly handled and anything but brilliant.

Mr. Wyncoop, the speaker of the evening, was introduced by some gentleman whom I understood is the superintendent of the West Side Y. M. C. A. Before introducing Mr. Wyncoop he explained, at some length, the purposes of the school, and, in the course of his remarks, said: "We cannot turn out experienced men; we can only give technical training, and experience will come when the men get positions." He also said that the first class would be limited to fifteen, and that when a student showed lack of ability to master operating he would be informed of that fact, and his money would be refunded. This latter is, of course, very good indeed, but the admission of the speaker that the school expected its students to gain their experience after they had received licenses and secured positions seems to me to mean, and, in fact, cannot mean anything else but that the Y. M. C. A. expects these men to get positions before they are competent operators (certainly a man cannot be called competent until he has had practical experience), and that the public must suffer while the man is, in effect, completing his course after he has graduated and the Y. M. C. A. has his money. This looks, to a man up a tree, very much like a questionable procedure. If the Y. M. C. A. purposes to act squarely with every one, it will have to arrange with theater managers to run shows at reduced prices during the time the novice is putting poor work on the screen, as he most certainly will do until he has gained the aforesaid experience, which is, of course, obviously impossible. But enough of that.

Mr. Wyncoop gave a lengthy and very interesting talk. He started off by saying that the city of New York required that the operator be sober, conscientious and capable, but that the department had no means of finding out whether the man was capable of projecting a good picture or not, the law only allowing them to determine whether or not the applicant for license is competent enough to be safe when handling a highly inflammable film upon which is concentrated the light from a powerful arc lamp. Mr. Wyncoop said that there were 2500 (round numbers, of course) licensed operators in New York City. He also said there were 950 (also round numbers) places where moving picture films were shown.

Allowing two men for every place this would leave a surplus of 600 men without a job, but, as a matter of fact, a very large number of these places do not employ two men, so that the actual surplus would probably be nearer 1000. But it must, however, be taken into consideration that a large number of New York City card holders are not working in New York City, but are on the road, or in other towns. As a matter of fact union officials say there are about 600 licensed men in the city today who cannot get employment as operators, therefore it seems to us that the question: "Why more schools?" is pertinent. Mr. Wyncoop said that the examining board was rapidly accumulating a waiting list which, from present indications, would probably reach 1000 before the year was out. He said that about 25% of the men who came before the board for examination were absolutely hopeless, in-so-far as mastering the profession of operating is concerned; they simply lacked the brain power to do it. He created much amusement by saying that the board itself was a sort of school for some applicants who were so persistent that they would come back time after time for examination, and, said Mr. Wyncoop, "we have, in one or two instances, graduated them after as many as seven examinations."

Mr. Wyncoop, in the course of his remarks, explained one thing which has created considerable comment, viz: that the board will suspend a man's license for thirty days if he is caught outside of the operating room while the motor-driven projector is running, whereas it would only suspend the license for one week if he was caught smoking. His explanation was that, while smoking was bad, and would not be tolerated, still the department considered the leaving of a motor-driven machine to run by itself as the most heinous offense possible, since if this became common the department would have to prohibit motors entirely, and thus all operators would be obliged to suffer for the sins of a few. Mr. Wyncoop also remarked that, while the new ordinance requires that a certain amount of air be drawn through the operating room, it does not say which way the current shall go, and the department had on several occasions found fans to be pulling the air down through the vent pipe in the ceiling, so that if a fire occurred the smoke would be drawn out into the auditorium, instead of being pulled up the vent flue. He also said that one of the rules requiring that only three reels of film be kept in the operating room was now being waived, since now that all operating rooms are fire proof the department considered it the best and safest place to keep the films, but that they must be kept in their cans. Mr. Wyncoop spoke of one thing which spells good, hard common sense, although he put it negatively. In speaking of the danger due to poorly made patches, and otherwise damaged films he said: "But I know of no law which will allow an inspector of any department of the city to go into an exchange, demand to see the films, put them on the rewinder, examine them and destroy all those found containing bad patches or other serious defects which could be remedied by proper inspection and repair."

Mr. Wyncoop did not say he would favor a thing of that kind, but you could readily infer it from his manner, and that would be a law which would spell good, sound sense.

After Mr. Wyncoop had finished speaking, ten minutes were allowed for asking questions. During this time representatives of Local 306 entered a vigorous protest against the opening of the school, but their protest received very scant consideration by the superintendent, or the man in charge of the meeting, whom I understood is the superintendent. Local 306 begged the Y. M. C. A. to withdraw immediately from the field, calling attention to the already large surplus of unemployed operators in New York City, but it was very evident from the manner of the man in charge that the protest amounted to nothing in his estimation, or at least that was the impression the ordinary man would receive from his manner and his words.

Eye Protector.

Marks Brothers, Chicago, Illinois, are the manufacturers of the Marco Eye Protector for moving picture operators. The price will be found in their advertisement. They have submitted a sample of their protector to the department for examination and approval. The thing is simple—remarkably so, and will, I believe, be found quite a help to the operator. It is nothing more or less than a pair of metal blinders lined with felt, the same as are used on horse bridles, only they are smaller, being about 2 x 2½ inches. These blinders, or guards, are fastened together with an adjustable steel spring which passes around the back of the head and over the ears, holding them at the side of and parallel with the eyes. At first glance one laughs, then one begins to wonder if the idea is such a foolish one after all. If the operator will refrain from looking at the spot and learn to govern his light by the results on the screen, I, personally, believe the protectors will prove to be a decided help.

The office force had quite a laugh over this device. I took it out of the box, looked at it in considerable surprise, and put in on. Johnny Archer asked, "What in thunder is that for?" Whereupon Hugh Hoffman answered, "Oh, I know! It's to wear when you are out with your wife." Whereupon everybody giggled. The protectors are guaranteed for one year.

A Big Difference.

S. S. Holt, Marshalltown, Iowa, sends answer to question 26 and says:

> These questions are a great help. The operator who digs around to find some kind of an answer to them will certainly discover how little he really knows. There is a tremendous difference between merely reading the questions and answers and in trying to answer them yourself. If my own answers are not right, throw them out. Even so, they are helping me and showing me where my weak points are. I would like to ask your opinion as to whether or not one operator should operate two projectors. Also if it be possible for him to operate two machines, should he do so at the same salary? When operating two machines it is necessary for him to leave one machine running by motor and go to the other which is seven or eight feet away and thread and then rewind the film, and while rewinding he would be still farther away from the machine which is running. Also should the ammeter and voltmeter be on a wall back of the machine, some eight feet away? I personally do not consider it safe for one operator, to operate two machines, but would like your opinion.

Brother Holt has the right idea. The man who simply reads the questions and then the answers is not gaining much of anything, but the fellow who digs down and works to evolve the answers for himself, even though his solution be wrong is going to remember that proposition when he finds out he is wrong. He has gained real knowledge, instead of learning something by heart. What an enormous difference it would make in the operating rooms of this country if operators would get right down and dig on this proposition. Instead of the few hundred answers a week I ought to be getting a few thousand, and there is not a single operator in these whole United States, I venture to say, who would not benefit by evolving the answers to these questions. If operators were the enterprising men they ought to be, there would be at least 10,000 answers to those questions every week, and this office would be literally swamped. It does not make any difference to me personally, brothers, whether you get busy or not, in fact it is a whole lot easier for me if you don't. I am doing all this work for your own benefit not for mine. However, it is encouraging to find that there is at least a small percentage of the men who have the energy and enterprise to try to perfect themselves by study. Of course, I thoroughly understand that there is a large number of operators who would like to answer the questions, but who are either afraid they might be wrong, or else do not feel able to express themselves well in writing. As to the first objection, they need have no fear. No one will ever know through me that they have failed, and I would certainly honor them for having at least made the attempt. As to the latter, why I think you can express yourself well enough so that I could dig out your meaning. As to the question raised about one operator operating two projectors, I do not think when modern projectors are used, it is very much of a question of safety. Still I do not at all approve of any such practice, for other reasons, the principal one of which is that one operator cannot, or at least will not produce high class results on the screen, except he stays right there by his machine, with his eye on the screen every minute it is running. The theater manager would not expect his wife to trim a hat, bake a pie and scrub the floor all at the same time, or even to perform either two of the operations simultaneously. Yet the placing of a perfect picture on the screen is analogous to the wife trimming a hat while scrubbing the floor, and it is a cinch that if the wife tried to scrub the floor and trim the hat at the same time both the hat and the scrubbing would suffer; also it is exactly the same variety of cinch that if the operator tries to project a picture and thread another machine, or do rewinding, the picture is going to suffer, at least to some extent. It must be conceded that in the smaller towns it would hardly be practical to employ two operators for the same shift, but it is entirely possible to give the operator a helper who can do the rewinding and the machine threading.

But there are also objections to that proposition, because, as a rule, after the helper has been threading the machine and doing the rewinding a few days he acquires the notion that he is himself an operator. The notion the chap has would do no harm, merely as a notion, but the trouble is he at once proceeds to put it into practice by actually trying to take an operator's position—at cut salary, of course. Very naturally operators object to this, and insist upon the employment, not of a helper, but of two operators, and this, except in large houses in large cities, is a pretty stiff proposition from the manager's point of view, while in a small town it is utterly impossible. And thus you see an apparently simple question of this kind is not really simple at all, but involves some rather large propositions. The importance of this matter reaches much farther than I have indicated, because the helper proposition operates to produce a horde of half-baked operators, who help to keep salaries down to a point where there is little encouragement for competent men of brains to take up or to remain in the operating field, and thus the whole business is dealt a body blow, which is far reaching in its effect. Please, brother Holt, don't spring that particular question on me again, because it is one I do not feel competent to deal with fully and completely: The voltmeter and the ammeter are a very important part of the installation—particularly the ammeter, but these instruments, as I have time and again pointed out, in order to accomplish their purpose, should by all means be located on the wall right in front of the operator, where he not only can but must see them all the time.

New Theater.

Paul Bailleaux, proprietor Majestic Theater, Quinton, Oklahoma, informs use he opened his new theater April 15th. Quinton is a town of about 1,500 population. The theater seats 300 people, and is equipped with Power Six A Cameragraphs, and two generators driven by a 6 h.p. oil engine with a pulley on either end of the main shaft. One generator of 2½ k.w., 60 volt, 40 ampere d.c. supplies the projector arc only, and the other generator of 1½ k.w., 125 volt d.c. is for house lights, fans, piano, etc. The total consumption being as follows: projector 2,000 watts, house lights and front 800 watts, fans and piano 500 watts, a total of 3,300 watts.

Brother Bailleaux cannot be using very many lights when he only consumes 800 watts for the front and all. Aside from this the installation is unique, and the scheme of having two generators of different voltage is not at all a bad one.

An "Inquest" Meeting.

William McNair, Vallejo, California, writes:

As usual, when a matter of importance comes up in the projection department we hold what we call an "Inquest Meeting" (look out there you are swiping Epes Winthrop Sargent's thunder on that Inquest Meeting.—Ed.), for the purpose of arriving at a concensus of opinion, or, in other words, deciding what is the best "dope." And we have one man, or boy, I should say, who has only spent almost thirty-five years learning things, and what he says is usually pretty nearly right. At the last "Inquest" the article "From a Cameraman," page 1677, March 27th issue, was the subject of debate, or the matter upon which the inquisitorial body sat. And the following is "Master" George Trayan's talk, taken in short hand by one of our men. "Gentlemen," Georgie started, "we are getting knocked about pretty roughly, and so is the cameraman. But if it was not for the poor work of the camera, and of the gink who prints the films, our troubles would be reduced by about 80 per cent. Now, here comes this holler from George K. Hollister who pleads for sympathy for the cameraman, but I am sorry to say that friend Hollister is not deserving of any pity whatsoever. If he finds he has bit off more than he can chew, why the only thing to do is quit and let some one else grab the box who can fill the job, and who is willing to try to better the motion picture business by producing nothing but approximately perfect work. I well know that cameramen have troubles of their own, though not to compare with the real operator, and I do not think anyone knows the difference better than myself, who put in many years at the camera and who is willing to leave it to you, brothers, as to what I know of the projection end of the game. And now coming back to friend Hollister's dictum, or appeal: If we have to grind out a picture which is out of focus, or jumpy, or which has been taken out of level, or is printed too much to one side so that the sprocket holes show, who gets the blame from both the manager and the audience? What is the first remark? Is it 'bum cameraman,' is it 'bum printer?' No, nothing like that! This is not what you hear at all, but instead, the remark: 'Aw, he is a bum operator!' So we are the goats who get the blame for the faults of the cameraman, the printer, and about everybody else connected with the making of the pictures. There is absolutely no excuse whatever for the cameraman taking a picture out of focus. He should look after such things as this, as well as other things, before attempting to take a picture, and if he fails to do so, let him stand responsible, instead of passing it up to the operator. And now I will try to explain what brother Richardson refers to as stock shrinkage. You cannot blame him for making this mistake, since he freely confesses that he knows but little of motion picture camera craft, and he should be thanked for using his best efforts in this matter. But, brothers, it is not stock shrinkage. This obnoxious jumping out of frame is due to the using of two or more cameras in making a picture, and the laziness or inefficiency of the cameraman who fails to adjust his cameras so that the margin or dividing lines will register in exactly the same place with relation to the perforation."

Brother Trayan then proceeds to "land" on some of the producers, in fact on several of them, including Lubin, Essanay, Melies, Kalem, Vitagraph, Edison and Biograph. But inasmuch as I don't want to get my block amputated I have omitted this part. I think the brother is a little bit unjust in his remarks concerning some of the producers, and is not fully posted as to the rapidly increasing difficulties they are encountering. There is, however, truth in what he says as regards the cameramen, but I am

The Right Idea.

L. S. Usher, Winnipeg, Canada, orders a question booklet and says:

I heartily agree with you in not publishing the questions and the answers in book form. It would make one lose all interest. When you have, in your own words, to dig down and grub out the answers for yourself, it is, in my opinion, ten thousand times better than just reading the answer.

Comment is unnecessary; brother Usher has the right idea.

The Meat.

Herbert L. Davis, Sumpter, Oregon, orders one of Mr. Swoope's books, and writes:

Such a book is very much needed by men in the same class as myself, who are off the beaten track, running a store-room show in a small town, but whose desire to "produce the goods" is as intense as their more fortunate brothers in the city. Were it not for the meat contained between the covers of our MOVING PICTURE WORLD and the two Handbooks, many who, like myself, love the profession, would not be in it today.

Yes, and millions of people in small towns would be deprived of the amusement and educational value of the moving picture, or else have it in such crude form as to be almost wholly valueless.

An Argument.

W. A. Clay, Ogden, Utah, contributes the following:

On pages 210 and 211, April 11th issue, I note two interesting articles on condenser and objective lens action, one by brother James and one by Professor Wall. Both are exceptionally beneficial and interesting to operators such as myself, since they deal with the very fundamentals upon which the art of projection is built—also they are written very clearly. My understanding of these fundamental principles is, however, in slight details, at variance with the ideas of both these gentlemen, and I submit my views with the hope that I may either be corrected, or else help in clearing up the understanding of condenser and objective lens action. In substance brother James says that the condensers should be gauged to the conditions under which the particular e.f. objective lens is being used, and not to the e.f. of the objective as an abstract thing. I have known this to be true for a long time, and it is a matter which has received all too little consideration. The e.f. of an objective lens means that point of distance from the center of the diaphragm point of the lens at which parallel rays would be brought to a focus, or, taking it the other way, light rays originating at said focus would be projected through the lens in parallel rays. At a point of origination closer to the lens than the e.f. point, the light rays would be projected through the lens divergent, and the farther they travel the farther they would separate. At a point of origination farther from the lens than the e. f. point, the light rays would leave the lens convergent, and, after traveling a certain distance, would meet, or form another focus. These two meeting points are called the conjugate foci of the lens, and these points may vary within certain limits. The film picture is projected to the screen by having the film at one of these conjugate foci, and the screen at the other. Either of the conjugate foci must be farther from the center of the objective lens than the e.f. point, therefore when brother James says: "For a 5¼ inch e.f. objective the conjugate foci point may be anywhere from four to seven inches from the center of the objective lens," he is and must be in error. It might be seven inches, but it could not possibly be four. Also brother James talks about working at a certain e.f. of the objective lens. You cannot work at the e.f. of the lens, but must work at a conjugate foci point farther from the center of the lens than the e.f. point.

Professor Wall's article is exceptionally good, other than he makes a distinction between "diffuse" and "scatter." My dictionary says that diffuse means to scatter. The deposited silver on the film may be either relatively semi-transparent or opaque, according to its density, as is evidenced by the half tones of the projected image, or, as Professor Wall says: "The light-beam is partially stopped and partially transmitted." But it is not scattered by the silver, except to an exceptionally small extent due to another cause, or else it would be diffused, because the optical definition of diffusion is: "Diffusion is only an irregular refraction or reflection of light." In other words, what light does get through the silver goes right on in its original straight course, whereas the light which gets through the ground glass, be the grinding never so fine, is diffused by the minute irregularities of the ground surface, and scattered higgledy-piggledy-pop.

I do not care to comment on this, except as to one point. A very interesting question is here raised in my mind. Brother Clay says the film is at one of the conjugate foci. Now he has me puzzled. The conjugate focus he means is a point at which the light rays meet, there being, as brother Clay says, one at either end of the lens. It is rather a difficult matter to explain just what I have in mind, but it seems to me as though the film picture, not being itself a point, but covering a space approximately 1 x ¾ inch, could not be located at the conjugate focus, but might have to be located at a point where rays emanating from the conjugate focus would have spread over an area equal to that of the picture. I expect probably this is really a crazy idea, and that you will come back at me with the statement that each infinitesimal point of the picture forms a separate conjugate focus for the purpose. But at any rate the thing is not quite clear in my mind and I would like to have Professor Wall, brothers James, Clay or others enlighten me.

From Paris, France.

The following letter comes from Paris, France.

Please find enclosed money order for 28 cents to pay for one copy of the 74 questions mentioned in the projection department, the same to be sent to Etablissements Gaumont, Service, Cinematographique, 57, Rue St. Roch, Paris. Yours very sincerely, Societe Des Etablissements Gaumont, Pour L'Administrateur Directeur, La Chef du Service Cinematographa.

I rubbered at that money order from La Belle, France, and prepared to put in my resignation to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD immediately, because, from the size (area) of it I thought I would receive at least $268,000.99, but upon reading the letter discovered 28 cents was the sum, whereupon I decided to reconsider the resignation matter before it was too late. The questions have gone forward, and the laugh we had out of that 28-cent money order was worth at least a dollar. I trust our Paris friends will understand that we were glad to receive their order, and that the joke was on us, not them. The thing was simply an ordinary business transaction, and, yet it struck one's funny bone to receive an imposing looking money order, written in French, from a country on the other side of the ocean, for the sum of 28 cents. It was a good deal like sending a four horse truck to the store to bring back a spool of thread.

Danger! Poison.

William Lorence, New York City, utters the following warning:

Here is something of great importance to brother operators, and, in fact, to everybody working in the film business. I was the proud possessor of thirty-two solid teeth, which did not give me an ache or a pain, one and a half years ago. Today I have a dentist's bill for $75, and my teeth have been ruined by poison absorbed from the films when making patches. I told the dentist I was a moving picture operator and he asked me if I had anything to do with the manufacture of the film itself. This, of course, I denied, but told him that I moistened the films with my tongue in making patches, and what he said to me could not be put into print. I have since then made a quiet investigation among operator friends, and find that many of them are suffering with bad teeth due to this same cause.

I cannot either affirm or deny the correctness of brother Lorence's statements, but at the very least it may be stated that there is certainly considerable danger in moistening the emulsion with the tongue, particularly if the operator already has bad teeth. Also if he happened to have a sore in his mouth he might acquire a nice case of blood posion. You never can tell what might be adhering to the film. It may have been on the floor of some operating room, and in some pretty dirty messes right at the point where you make a patch, therefore brother Lorence's warning is one it is exceedingly wise to heed.

In Error.

A few weeks ago the editor had the privilege of an extended conversation and a rather red hot, though friendly, argument with one of the officials of a large operators' union. Personally I am good friends with the gentleman in question, and like him. He is what is commonly termed a live wire; is unquestionably sincere, and means well. In the course of the conversation he, however, assumed the attitude which is, in my opinion, not only wrong, but absolutely untenable. He took the position that the members of his organization did not need to read the projection department, or to procure one of the Handbooks, by reason of the fact that they already possessed knowledge to such a degree that they could learn nothing from either one. That is indeed strange, because some of the oldest and highest salaried operators in the United States have written this department praising the Handbook highly, and saying they would not be without it and the department for any amount of money. It is a very generally admitted fact that the department is the forum of exchange of ideas among operators all over English speaking America; its influence even extending to Australia, New Zealand and far off China. Yet this official intimates that the members of his organization (not some of them, mind you, but all of them) are so wise that no other operator can advance an idea which would be of value to them, nor could the editor of this department possibly teach them anything. In the course of the argument I made the remark that my opportunities for learning had probably been greater than any other one man in connection with the projection end of moving pictures. This official was horrified that I should make such a claim—such an absurd claim. He rather intimated and conveyed the impression that the members of his local could teach me more in five minutes than I had ever known in all my life. Well, I like to see a man stand up for his own people, but I think possibly the claims of this gentleman might be a little bit strong. And now here is where I may possibly get his goat. I am going to his city some time this summer, and there won't be a single soul who will know when I am coming. I will visit a number of the theaters there, and shall set forth exactly what I find. But that is not the point. What I am getting at in all this is to point out the simple fact that if what this official says of his organization is true then its members will progress very little further. They have already learned all they care to know, or all they can know, and, as I have repeatedly said, when a man reaches that stage, his place is in Heaven; he is altogether too wise and good for this sinful old world of ours. The basis of the official's claim is I take it, the fact that the state in which the city is located has the reputation of giving a pretty stiff examination, but let me point out two facts, viz: several operators who have successfully passed that examination have ignominiously failed to pass the New York examination. Also I know quite some few operators who have passed the examination in question, whom I would by no means recommend, because I have viewed the result on the screen when they were at the projector, and the result was altogether anything but good.

I presume the facts in the case are that this organization, like most other organizations have some very good men, and some who are not so good, but it is safe to say it has not one single member who cannot profit by reading the projection department, or who probably would not be better off if he owned a copy of the Handbook.

Some Experimenting.

Harry T. Dobson, Toronto, Canada, orders two Handbooks and writes:

> On page 1678, March 28th issue, I see a Toronto brother is having trouble with his generator set. I am using a 30 ampere, 50 volt shunt-wound machine, and I had the same trouble he describes, with the exception of the arc going out. After a little experimenting I now use ⅝ cored carbon on the bottom and ¾ cored on top, and get a fine light. I forgot to mention that when the generator was running with no load there was no sparking at the brushes, but with the arc burning there was some sparking. I moved the rocker arm so as to get the least possible sparking and all is well.

No comment I think is necessary, except to say that the tendency is to use larger carbons in the west. Most operators are now using ¾ carbons above with 40 and 45 amperes d. c., whereas we previously used ⅝ for that amperage.

Hum! Well—Mebby, But——

Walter G. Preddy, San Francisco, Cal., manufacturer of several moving picture operating room specialties, a man of experience whose opinion is to be given due consideration, writes as follows:

> Here is a simple experiment which I believe will knock out the old theory that condensing lenses crack when placed tightly in their mounts. I turned a heavy brass ring, the ring having a tapered inner portion so that the condensing lens could be tightly wedged into it, this ring acting as a very tight lens mount for the purpose of the experiment. The lens was pressed into it just as tightly as possible and then the lens and ring were held over a Bunsen burner, and the lens always fell out, demonstrating the fact that the mount expanded more than the glass. Actual measurements showed also that the metal expanded more than the glass when subjected to a given heat. It therefore follows, to my mind, that lenses do not crack by reason of being tight in their mounts. I have since tried this experiment out in a local theater by placing the lens nearest the arc in a very tight mount and demonstrating that the liability to crack was not increased. These mounts were not thin shells, but heavy rings having about an inch of metal. The lenses were pressed in firmly and had no play whatever.

I think brother Preddy that your experiment is misleading. It is quite possible that a thick ring would not cause the lens to crack, and would, in fact, expand more than the glass, but, as a matter of fact, the old ring lens mounts were all of very thin metal, usually not exceeding 1/16 of an inch. Now it is quite possible that while the thick ring would expand faster and more than the glass, that the thin ring would do nothing of the sort, by reason of the fact that the heat would radiate from it very rapidly—much more rapidly than it would from the glass. Do you get the idea? I do not make the assertion that this is the explanation, but I think it is. Undoubtedly and unquestionably the old lens ring mount caused lenses to crack. I have seen that demonstrated actually hundreds of times, and I believe that if you will take the old Power's ring mount and press the lens firmly into it, put it in the lamp house, that the lens will promptly snap.

Leave 'Em Alone.

G. M. Fuller, Brooklyn, New York, writes:

> Have been using a motor drive for two years and have had no trouble of any kind whatsoever. Many of the department letters treat of methods for avoiding or correcting different troubles the electric motor is heir to, particularly with regard to the commutator. Now here is my secret: leave 'em alone! Meaning that I do nothing at all to my motors except just let them alone. If you follow my example your motor will "mote" all by its lonesome. Once in a while see if there is a deposit of carbon on the commutator. If so take a clean rag, moisten with kerosene (a few drops is sufficient) and press lightly with the finger on the commutator bars while the motor is running. After it is clean and bright rub off the kerosene with a clean cloth, and when the commutator is dry touch lightly with a small stick of paraffine and that will last for a long time. Just give it the "once-over" once in two weeks. Well made motors require little attention. Both of my motors whispered in my ear the whisper, "You leave us alone. Don't bother us and we will run ourselves without outside interference." This little tip ought to settle all motor questions for the future. Lubricate the bearing and cups once in three months. And now how many can answer the following deep-water question? How many stages are there through which a photoplay must go, and what is the very first step and the very last stage? This may be a little out of your department, but print it anyway just for luck.

I really got a good laugh out of brother Fuller's letter. He carefully instructs us to let the motors alone, and then proceeds to tell us what to do to them once in a while. As a matter of fact I cannot recommend his prescription, and would advise operators to give them the "once-over" considerably oftener than he suggests. However, the letters he refers to do not, as a rule, deal with projection machine motors. They are usually intended to be applied to the motors of motor generator sets, though, of course, in lesser degree they do apply to very small motors. As to the stages through which a photoplay must go, why that is reasonably easy I think, but I'll leave it to others to answer the question.

Too Late.

Charles Stuckey, Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, writes:

> Am enclosing answer to question 24. It may be late, but I did not receive the paper until Saturday. For some reason it takes an awful long time for the World to find its way up into this part of the Jungle. I am taking great interest in the questions, but wish you could postpone the printing of the answers a week or so longer in order to give us poor ginks a chance. We do not receive the paper until late and then it takes about five days for the return mail. Also we who are so far away from New York don't get as long a period to dig down and study as the boys who can get the paper at once and can get their reply in in a day or two. That dissolving stunt, March 14th issue, works a great deal better with d. c. through a rectifier. Wish we could enlarge the department to about ten pages. It is always interesting.

Well, I don't wish anything of the kind, brother Stuckey. I am working like a mule as it is. As to delaying the answers, I do not think there is any use in that, because you can get one of the question booklets in advance. Brother James has had as many as five answers here in advance—you can do the same thing.

Business Office.

Canada writes ordering a Handbook and two sets of questions. He says:

> There are some members of our local who, like myself, have decided that they have a whole lot to learn. Our union has opened a business office down town where the boys can meet and the managers can have any conferences they may wish to with the operators. We are unable to get enough operators to fill the positions. We have seven or eight positions open and no men to fill them, which speaks well for our men.

I am glad indeed to have such a good report though I hesitated about publishing it. But I solved that particular difficulty by leaving out the name of the town. I have strong suspicion that if anything of that sort were published, that particular union would have plenty of men to fill those seven positions, and probably seventy others besides as quickly as the jobless could get there. Yes brothers, we all have a lot to learn, and it is a pleasure to know that some of your men are waking up to that fact. It speaks well of the future of your local and of projection in your city.

Lack of Speed Control.

Newton Wallis writes enroute, orders a Handbook and asks for Earl Wooden's address. He then says:

> I am running an Edison Model B and a new model Simplex put in about a month ago. The only trouble I have is obtaining the proper speed. The jumps on my rheostat appear to be too large—from one speed to another, I mean. But on an average my pictures are fairly good.

Sorry to say I am unable to resurrect friend Wooden's address. As to the rheostat, why not make one of your own, having more contacts, dividing the resistance up into a greater number of units? This is a comparatively easy thing to do.

More Trouble.

W. B. Buzzelle, Moscow, Idaho, writes:

I note, issue of March 7th, an article on tracing light rays through lenses. Apparently its writer was not familiar with the laws of refraction, but formed his conclusions entirely from experiments. A light ray always refracts toward the perpendicular on entering a denser medium. The gentleman's experiment was probably very correct, but it does not follow that the rays always cross after leaving the lens; it depends upon how the convex or concave surfaces are faced, as I have shown in my drawing which I hope will enlighten you on the matter.

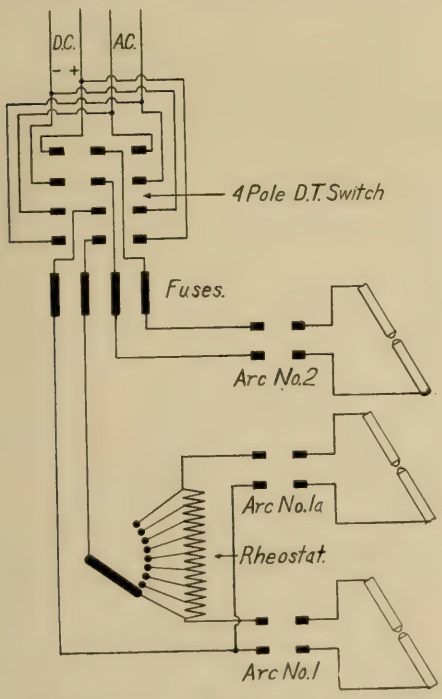
FIG. 2

Friend Buzzelle is quite correct in his statement of the laws of refraction, but his figure 1 shows a condition which could not possibly obtain in a projection lens for the very simple reason that in a motion picture objective the heavy bulge of the lens is always toward the screen.

An Interesting Piece of Wiring.

Robert P. Bailey, West Lynn, Massachusetts, contributes a very interesting wiring diagram, with following description:

The latter part of question 18 brought up a matter which I have tried to solve in a different way. Not being located so I can try the idea out, I offer it for criticism. The idea was to run a continuous show, using d. c. on each machine. The sketch is self-explanatory. Machine No. 1 has a dissolving stereopticon attached. The switch is a four-pole, double throw, quick acting one. The success of this arrangement depends upon the fact that the arc circuit may be broken and re-made within ⅕ of a second without extinguishing the arc.



Such an arrangement would have the following advantages. (1) No overload is thrown on either a. c. or d. c. apparatus. (2) Lamp of idle machine could be warmed up while the other projector is running. (3) If anything happens to either source of supply the other can instantly be thrown into the lamp. (4) The changing of the machines from a. c. to d. c., or vice versa, can be done by throwing one switch without breaking arcs. (5) It is neither necessary nor desirable to use more than half the moving picture amperage for stereopticon purposes. (6) Intensity of the stereopticon arcs can be made equal by moving the rheostat arm.

The scheme is unique, but first I want to compliment brother Bailey on the excellence of his drawing. It is very good indeed, and, moreover, it was done in black ink, with the letters and figures large enough so they could be seen after the drawing is reduced to cut size—a combination which reaches this office on an average of about once in two years. That rheostat arrangement of yours certainly is some scheme, and I believe it would work all right, except that I should imagine you would have to regulate the length of your arcs pretty closely. The only real question in my mind is whether it would be advisable to use a. c. for warming up d. c. carbons. I think you would very likely find that to be a detriment rather than an advantage. Also, of course, the stereopticon would pull considerably more current through the resistance when operating on a. c. than when operating on d. c. But I would be glad to hear comments on this scheme from our correspondents. The idea is to start the projection of the new reel with a. c., throwing over to d. c. as the second machine closes down.

A Tale of Woe.

George C. Johnston, St. Paul, Minnesota, writes:

Well here I am again. This time with a few questions to ask, and a tale of woe to tell. You perhaps know most of the Sullivan-Considine houses are opening at noon with motion pictures. Ours is no exception, and when the machines were bought we ordered a Simplex latest model, complete. I am using 70 amperes, with ⅜ cored above and ⅜ cored below, on a 13 foot picture at 127 feet, with a 6¼ e. f. Gundlach lens. Now the question is; am I right on everything as above? The question came up among our village experts as to whether the difference in throw makes any material difference in the light, providing the picture remains the same size. I told them that the difference should not be perceptible, or at least should not require any raise in amperage. Am I correct? Please answer this for the benefit of my manager, who, by-the-way is some manager. What is your opinion as to the best amperage to use; also advise me if the Simplex people make a ⅞ inch stock carbon holder.

I am rather surprised at brother Johnston springing this particular question, because I have repeatedly said, in the department, though not lately, and have also said in the Handbook that, provided the lens system be properly matched, the length of throw has very little to do with the light requirement, although this might be modified to some extent on excessive throws, such as those requiring an 8 or 9 inch e. f. lens. As to the amperage, you have neglected to say whether you are using a. c. or d. c. If it is d. c. then I would regard 70 amperes as excessive for a 13 foot picture, in fact, I would regard 45, or at the outside 50 amperes d. c. as plenty of current for that size picture. On the other hand if it is a. c. 70 amperes is none too much to give you a really brilliant illumination, though it ought to be ample. In fact, I should say 70 amperes a. c. was about right on an ordinary screen. On a semi-reflecting screen it should give an exceedingly brilliant illumination, and on a mirror screen it would be altogether too bright. You call the attention of the village experts to the fact that a ray of light travels several hundreds of millions of miles from the sun to the earth, and is not a bit shop-worn when it arrives; in fact it is still a perfectly good ray of light. Having duly called their attention to this fact ask them, in view of that circumstance, how much difference they think there will be as between 50 and 150 feet, and then sit back and let them argue the matter out. I will have the Precision Machine Company write you about the carbon holder.

It Didn't Work.

Brooklyn, New York, writes:

I tried J. H. Snyder's formula for transferring pictures to glass, March 21st issue, and it did not work for me, although I followed the directions closely. The paper absorbs the solution and the paper could be picked right off the glass, and the glass would be perfectly clear.

All of which requires no comment, I believe. I have not tested these formulas out myself, nor have I the time to do so.

Motiograph Three-Wing Shutter.

The editor is informed that Edward H. Kemp, 388 Market Street, San Francisco, California, makes three-wing shutters for the Motiograph machine. I have seen one of these shutters. It cuts 50% of the light and undoubtedly is an excellent proposition for users of Motiographs.

Operators Are you perfectly satisfied with the results you get on the screen?

Comments on the Films

THE GREATER LOVE (Essanay), May 5.—The title and the first two minutes of this picture tell the whole story, with a consequent disastrous effect insofar as sustained interest is concerned. There is no novelty in the treatment of the plot to hold it up and but little opportunity for members of the cast to give it the punch which a picture of this kind ought to have.

A BLIND BUSINESS (Lubin), May 5.—A tramp comedy of the kind that has drawn laughter from certain classes of moving picture audiences ever since the day the first "comedy" was thrown upon a screen. There is the inevitable chase—and little new.

CASEY'S BIRTHDAY (Lubin), May 5.—There is a big legitimate laugh in this picture, shown on the same reel with "A Blind Business," when the letter "P" is knocked off a birthday cake originally lettered "P-A-P-A" and created for a fighting Irish laborer who has sadly interfered with his own birthday surprise party by bringing home a "stew." The letters "A-P-A" in accidental combination, provide the finishing touches to an already too rough house.

THE DOUBLE CROSS (Edison), May 5.—This "third story of 'The Man Who Disappeared'" has an underworld setting and its characters are, for the most part, fugitives from the law. The inside workings of a bunco marriage game which is not infrequently encountered in real life is explained in an interesting manner.

MARRYING GRETCHEN (Selig), May 5.—A somewhat different western with a comedy plot which is original.

DOC YAK BOWLING (Selig), May 5.—This tag, on the same reel with "Marrying Gretchen," attests the cleverness of Sidney Smith, well known newspaper cartoonist, and the ingenuity of the Selig company's technicians.

THE LUCKY VEST (Edison), May 6.—A comedy plot, based upon an incident of genuine heart interest which has predisposed the audience in favor of whatever is to follow, and worked out in a sane and logical way, makes this picture of particular interest. The fun is so naturally created for the most part that it seems a shame when occasional overplayed incidents creep in.

MAKING HIM OVER FOR MINNIE (Essanay), May 6.—A good story making for legitimate comedy, well told by the players and well presented photographically. A pretty little manicurist who has a beau so ungainly in appearance that he is made the laughing stock of her friends "makes him over," with the aid of new clothes, etc., only to come within an ace of losing him to one of the girls who had laughed at him in the beginning.

SANDY AND SHORTY START SOMETHING (Vitagraph), May 6.—The story writer, the producer, and the two principal comedians seem to have made brave efforts to win laughs with bits of new business. Their friends will think their efforts worthy of greater success.

THE EVIL SHE DID (Selig), May 6.—Girls who are properly impressed with this release may stop flirting. The characters in the story are red blooded fishermen. A striking scene shows a death struggle between two brothers on a little fishing vessel as it rocks on the breast of the ocean.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 20 (Selig), May 7.—Greatest interest lies in the Mexican war pictures which include views of the temporarily disabled transport Meade and scenes in Galveston incident to the arrival in that city of refugees from the adjoining republic.

MANIACS THREE (Biograph), May 7.—A half-reel comedy, in which a real maniac and an assumed one appear. The fun is of a conventional sort and the offering is not very strong.

GILLIAGAN'S ACCIDENT POLICY (Biograph), May 7.—This, on same reel with above, is an improvement on the other. The henpecked Irishman buys an accident policy and tries to get hurt. Some of these efforts are laughable. But he does not succeed until he has surrendered the policy. This is a pleasing half reel.

A SNAKEVILLE EPIDEMIC (Essanay), May 7.—Here's a comedy subject which would get a dozen laughs out of a wooden Indian. Through a mix-up in prescriptions, a farmer's wife who is ill gets medicine and treatment intended for a sick donkey on a nearby place, and vice versa. The story, while not a new one, is well worked out and there is but little recourse to horse-play.

HIS LAST CALL (Vitagraph), May 7.—This number features Charles Kent in the part of an old, down-and-out actor who participates by chance in a revival of his original success. The plot has numerous elements of popularity and holds the interest throughout. The photography and settings are also good. A good release.

BATTY BILL AND THE SUICIDE CLUB (Melies), May 7.—Bill quarrels with a member of the Suicide Club and is commanded to kill himself. Some of the efforts, notably the stabbing, are too grewsome for the best humor. The whole number is novel but the humor is of a very grim sort. The close, where all the babies are brought in, is very laughable.

McBRIDE'S BRIDE (Kalem), May 8.—The opposition of a suffragette mother to the marriage of her daughter and the activities of the prospective bridegroom and his reporter friend which bring about a marriage ceremony (performed in the cell of a police station), embrace the incidents of a reasonably consistent comedy plot. Some unnamed Kalem actor contributes a good "bit" with his characterization of a tramp.

VENGEANCE IS MINE (Lubin), May 8.—A strong dramatic subject in which Lubin actors and Lubin technicians have done themselves proud. An escape from prison, with the attendant pursuit by guards, is the weakest incident in the action, escaping prisoner and guards together failing to create the air of excitement which would be natural.

THE MOTHER OF SEVEN (Selig), May 8.—An exceptionally good comedy drama, replete with human interest and interspersed with laughs which are wholesome and legitimate. Here's a film story that may be discussed at the dinner table and will provide enjoyment to those who have seen it for weeks afterwards.

BUNNY IN DISGUISE (Vitagraph), May 8.—Another rattling good comedy with John Bunny and Miss Flora Finch in the principal roles. Absolutely devoid of slapstick stuff and overacting, the fun resulting from legitimate comedy situations cleverly developed. Bunny disguises himself as a Sultana in order to make his escape from the maidenly Miss Finch who has threatened suit for breach of promise.

UNDER THE SKIN (Biograph), May 9.—Because it tells an intensely human story in a powerful way, "Under the Skin" will be welcome on any program. The saving of a woman about to fall by the death-bed story of one who has fallen provides the plot.

THE END OF THE UMBRELLA (Edison), May 9.—This is the seventh reel in the "Dolly of the Dailies" series. The story is complete and in this respect in particular the treatment is worthy of commendation. With an umbrella handle as her only clew, Dolly discovers an insane anarchist who has wrecked a portion of a big acqueduct which is in process of construction.

BRONCHO BILLY'S SERMON (Essanay), May 9.—Another good comedy drama which affords G. M. Anderson opportunity to display his exceptional abilities in all lines of moving picture acting. "Broncho Billy's Sermon" mixes laughter and melodrama in just the right proportions.

THE NEW MEDICINE MAN (Kalem), May 9.—A western dramatic subject with the "Strongheart" flavor in that it places the educated Indian in juxtaposition with his brothers who still hold to their ancient superstitions. The yarn is well conceived and admirably told although there are some more or less damaging slips on the part of the camera man.

BUILDING A FIRE (Lubin), May 9.—Senseless "comedy" which is likely to fail where average audiences are encountered.

WITH THE BURGLAR'S HELP (Lubin), May 9.—On the same reel with "Building a Fire," this subject has considerably more excuse for its existence. A burglar who happens into a house where wifey is waiting for an habitually inebriate husband draws the biggest laugh with a particularly well executed fall when he is struck over the head with a club.

TWO GIRLS (Selig), May 9.—Parents with daughters to rear will find something over which to ponder in this true-to-life exposition of what often happens when unreasonable restraints are thrown around the young girl in search of wholesome amusement. The story is well conceived, the Selig players tell it well, and the photography is excellent.

MARTHA'S REBELLION (Edison), May 11.—No mark of progression by the producing company is shown in this comedy. The situations are forced and ridiculous throughout. It is possible that there could have been secured for the name part a woman who could box—and this would have helped.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 21 (Selig), May 11.—War scenes in Mexico predominate. The boat crew of the Dolphin, who figured in the Tampico incident that brought about the landing of American troops in Mexico, are shown as are also the Yankee soldiers in their winning fight at Vera Cruz.

MISER MURRAY'S WEDDING PRESENT (Vitagraph), May 11.—A legitimate comedy presentation with a love story on the side to give the picture a wider appeal. How a miser who has been compelled to give his daughter an expensive wedding gift, and has stolen the gift back again, is made quite liberal, with the aid of a pseudo detective and the police, is unfolded in the plot.

DOC YAK'S TEMPERANCE LECTURE (Selig), May 11.—Cartoonist Sydney Smith's little "Doc Yak" character which appears daily in the Chicago Tribune is always interesting and in this "tag" to "On the Minute" Mr. Smith has done some particularly clever work in the way of transformation drawing.

IN FATE'S CYCLE (Biograph), May 11.—Better acting in a couple of the climactic scenes would have improved this picture. The story is interesting and the series of photographic representations selected by the director make it hold together well.

A DRASTIC REMEDY (Melies), May 11.—A touch of the farce and plenty of lively action make this comedy subject acceptable. Smitten by a young girl's charm, a count impersonates a masseur who has been called to treat her ailing father in order that he may be near her. What the pseudo masseur does to the father provides the laughter.

WINKY WILLY'S MAXIMS—(Look Before You Leap) (Melies), May 11.—Another comedy subject, on the same reel with "A Drastic Remedy," introducing the diminutive Melies star whom it seems possible to slam around in a most unusual manner.

HEARTS ARE TRUMPS (Pathe), May 11.—A comedy drama with a clean, wholesome and original plot which would be more pleasing if the action in the early part of the picture were more rapid. Some exceptionally fine pantomimic work is done by the male member of the cast, who is made to believe that he has been dreaming in order that a quarrel between old friends might be patched up.

Licensed Specials

THE OLD FIRE HORSE AND THE NEW FIRE CHIEF (Vitagraph), May 5.—This two-reeler is a satirical treatment of the modern feminist movement in which there is plenty of lively action, a great deal of human interest, and a leaven of good comedy. John Bunny and Flora Finch are featured, although the only "fat" feminine role is in the hands of Kate Price, who handles it exceptionally well. Needless to say, Mr. Bunny appears at his best in a picture of this kind where there is an absence of horse-play and slapstick work.

THE BROKEN CHAIN (Cines), May 5.—Splendid photography and novel lighting effects, together with great care in the selection of settings, both interior and exterior, carry this picture through its two reels without an appreciable let-up in the interest. The story of a dashing artist whose cleverness makes him a favorite among the ladies and spurs him to the regular business of marrying heiresses for their money is only mildly dramatic.

BEHIND THE FOOTLIGHTS (Lubin), May 6.—A stage story written with careful regard for what the general public think conditions affecting the fortunes of theatrical people to be, introducing as a villain a deepest dyed "Stage Door Johnnie" type. Miss Lottie Briscoe has the bulk of the work and acquits herself particularly well. Plenty of exciting and novel incidents are crowded into the two reels and the entirety provides a good feature for any program.

THE DETECTIVE'S SISTER (Kalem), May 6.—The title indicates that this two-reeler belongs to the "crook" class, but it doesn't tell that it is one of the best offerings of its kind which has come through with the general releases in many months. The story is filled with gripping sentiment and the Kalem players who tell it have avoided all of the pitfalls which yawn for those who approach the brink of the maudlin and the false. No one will begrudge two reels to such a story.

A MEDDLER WITH FATE (Pathe), May 7.—A two-reel number in which an army officer's wife draws suspicion on herself by her flirtations with a former friend. The use of the camera by the husband and his subsequent request that she develop the incriminating negative was ingenious. Later he repulses her and she goes out to kill herself. He follows and saves her just as she is about to throw herself under a train. This number contains dramatic moments and is quite strongly presented.

WHEN CONSCIENCE CALLS (Lubin), May 7.—A two-reel number by George Terwilliger. The first part shows how a young married man is swindled by his former friend, whom he chokes into unconsciousness. He then flees to the everglades and there is a long chase to capture him. In the end the false friend, who has recovered, confesses the truth, thinking he is about to die of heart trouble. The plot of this is not very new, but the scenes are well photographed and capably acted. The final reconciliation seemed a little too much, considering what the young married man had suffered. This is only a fairly strong number.

THE SONG OF SOLOMON (Edison), May 8.—A wonderful thing is fame. Irving Berlin, the well known composer of popular songs, is done to the life in this splendid two-reeler by Edward Boulden, who appears in the title role. The picture, which deals with the general public's romantic idea of how big song successes are made, is replete with interest and moves with sufficient rapidity to make one follow it carefully to its logical conclusion.

THE MYSTERY OF ROOM 643 (Essanay), May 8.—Francis X. Bushman, in these Richard Neal stories, is well cast as the polished gentleman whose genuine interest in an absorbing subject has made him take up the line of work commonly done by less polished detectives. This release, in two reels, provides a very interesting story despite the fact that, as in the case of many of the modern amateur detective tales, too much is taken for granted.

THE ANTIQUE ENGAGEMENT RING (Vitagraph), May 9.—Carefully constructed upon a happily conceived basic idea, the plot of this two-reeler cannot fail to compel interest. The story is one of true love that doesn't run smooth. There is action galore, and while events just preceding the climax are improbable, the subject will be found a favorite on programs of the near future.

THE MARRIAGE OF CUPID (Pathe), May 9.—Based upon Greek mythology, about which many moving picture devotees know but little, "The Marriage of Cupid" may prove lacking in the general appeal which a two-reeler, because of the expense and trouble of making it, ought to have. The picture is a delight, however, and suffers only by comparison with less artistic but more lively subjects which are most commonly treated.

THE REGENERATION (Kalem), May 11.—This well presented two-reeler may be called a picture with a purpose, although its little sermon is preached in such a way that there can be no offense to those who prefer to take their sociological arguments from mediums other than the moving picture screen. Greater charity for those who have been denied the right environment and training is the plea. There is a love story well told.

ON THE MINUTE (Selig), May 11.—There's a real thrill every minute throughout the time occupied by this two-part picture which tells the story of the thwarting of a gang of unscrupulous politicians through the bravery and ingenuity of a girl stenographer in the office of a city mayor. There are a number of novel twists in the plot.

Independent

EUGENICS VERSUS LOVE (Beauty), May 5.—This comedy possesses merit. It is a happy hit at the eugenics craze and the situations as well as the acting compel many hearty laughs.

POLITENESS PAYS (Princess), May 8.—This is a very meritorious offering; one that might be used by clerks and salesmen as a wholesome lesson. Nolan Gane plays the part of the polite young clerk, to the disgust of his store associates. Muriel Ostriche is his sweetheart. They are waiting and saving for the wedding day, but politeness on the lover's part to a crusty old maiden lady, unexpectedly brings a check which enables them to marry at once. An interesting, well played and produced number.

A SUSPENDED ORDEAL (Keystone), May 9.—This Keystone comedy is decidedly laughable, the humor is of the rollicking variety with a bit of farce mixed up with it.

MIKE JOINS THE FORCE (Royal), May 9.—Mike receives communication that he has passed the examination and is made a member of the force; he and his wife are gleeful. Mike obtains his uniform, including a "belt" with his club, before he gets very far in attempting to do his duty. He has a strenuous time of it with the individuals he encounters and attempts to convince that he represents the law. There is considerable rough house comedy contained in this number that is quite laughable.

A RACE FOR A BRIDE (Komic), May 10.—On the same reel with "The Scene of His Crime." This is a fair-to-middling comedy which embraces in its plot the Grand Prix races and in places it is exciting. The popular fun makers are Tod Browning, Tammany Young and Fay Tincher.

THE SCENE OF HIS CRIME (Komic), May 10.—On the same reel with "A Race for a Bride" and of the same calibre. A hip hurrah, full-of-action farce comedy.

MUTUAL GIRL, NO. 17 (Reliance), May 11.—Margaret secures a position for the East Side girl, whom she has rescued from somewhere and then hikes for her old farm home, where she meets her old sweetheart, who has also providentially or mysteriously become afflicted with the hay-fever. "Old Dobbin," the family horse, the pigs, the chickens, the kittens, etc., are tickled to death to see her, even the fish in the little creek bob up serenely when she throws them a line. Some pretty farm scenes are shown.

LUCILLE LOVE (Gold Seal), Series No. 5, May 12.—The first reel of this number continues Lucille's adventures on the island. Her escape from the lions over the grape vine bridge was a good feature. Later she meets some harrowing experiences with the monkey-men in the sunken city. She finally escapes only to be once more in the toils of the villainous Hugo. A characteristic number of entertaining quality.

HER HERITAGE (Beauty), May 12.—This picture contains many intense moments and illustrates plainly how a child, in this case a young woman, can inherit through her father the taste for intoxicants. After her marriage to a worthy husband who is wealthy and enjoys a large practice as a leading physician, the wife's craving for alcohol, which she cannot resist, almost wrecks their home. Fate prevents a tragedy and all ends happily. A strong and well made picture.

THE SIREN (Nestor), May 13.—This story of revenge, covering two generations, is quite strongly presented by a company including Wallace Reid and Dorothy Davenport. The first wedding is stopped by the groom's abandonment of his affianced. In the second generation another wedding fails for exactly the same reason. There is plenty of drama in this, of its peculiar type, and the situations hold the interest very closely.

IN HER SLEEP (Princess), May 15.—A drama that is out of the ordinary and convincing save a few neglected details. The scenes have been well selected and the photography is meritorious. The acting is all that can be desired. Those who participate in the leading roles supporting Muriel Ostriche are Morgan Jones, Madeline Fairbanks, Charlie Horan and Mrs. Arthur Ellery.

MABEL'S NERVE (Keystone), May 16.—Mack Sennett certainly had his nerve with him when he made this picture. It is so full of action and thrills that the spectator hasn't time to draw his breath until the finish. This picture might be termed a thrilling melodramatic comedy. Mabel Normand's gyrations on a bucking horse which finally leaps over a cliff with her, said to be 375 feet down, with a policeman who resembles Mack Sennett hanging to the horse's tail is certainly some punch. What's next.

THE DANCING CRAZE (Crystal), May 19.—A half-reel number in which Pearl White plays the part of a tango teacher. The thin girl's efforts to master the new dance is the best thing in this, which is fairly amusing.

THE MASHER (Crystal), May 19.—This, on same reel with above, shows how a masher was caught by a man impersonating a woman. It is only fairly entertaining.

THE MAN WITHIN (Nestor), May 20.—The plot of this Western story is rather too obvious to hold the attention strongly. The idea in it is old, but it is well handled by a competent cast, including Wallace Reid and Dorothy Davenport. Reid is an outlaw who gives himself up in order that the girl and her father may claim the reward and pay off the missing money.

BEYOND THE CITY (American), May 20.—This is the conventional old story of an unsophisticated only child, daughter of a rugged old mountaineer; she is loved by a young mountaineer, being the father's choice. An unscrupulous city villain visits the neighborhood and meets up with the "gal." The usual complications, embracing the whole cast, with the girl as the wronged one eventuate, and she returns to daddy as usual. A very well made picture.

THEIR VACATION (Joker), May 20.—A summer resort comedy, written by Grace Cunard. The girl and her admirer both pretend to be wealthy, but meet later in a cheap restaurant where she waits on the table. The climax is pleasing; the photography throughout is fair.

LOVE AND A LOTTERY TICKET (Imp), May 21.—A photoplay produced by Herbert Brenon in Berlin, with Wm. E. Shay and Leah Baird in the leading roles. The settings include a number of attractive streets and resorts in the famous German city. The love story is amusing and artistically developed. The German types of women were especially enjoyable. A good release.

JOHNNIE FROM JONESBORO (Frontier), May 21.—In this number a double elopement occurs, the boy running away with the widow and the father with the girl. By accident the brides are interchanged and allowed to remain so. It is a fairly amusing offering and is helped out by good photography.

THE PEARL OF THE SEA (Nestor), May 22.—Edna Maison appears in this as the daughter of a fisherman. Ray Gallegher plays the part of the lover, who comes to the rescue of her father when he needs money. The story throughout is one of about average merit.

THE LEGEND OF SNOW WHITE (Thanhouser), May 22.—In some respects the plot of this picture develops scenes that are productive of an intense emotional sort. There are some beautiful snow scenes, also home scenes that remind one of bygone days. There is a double visualization that is very beautiful, but which is ruined in the finale. This picture will please the women and children.

COULD YOU BLAME HER (Nestor), May 22.—One of Al E. Christie's productions, with Eddie Lyons and Victoria Forde as the young married couple. Victoria acts as model for her own new dress, which Eddie intends as a surprise. This is nicely pictured, smart and pleasing.

MIKE SEARCHES FOR HIS LONG-LOST BROTHER (Joker), May 23.—Max Asher goes West to look for his brother. There is plenty of action in this, but the humor is not very compelling. At the same time it brings quite a little laughter in places.

MOTHER MICHAEL (Eclair), May 24.—An attractive comedy number, all of the scenes being delicately colored. The girl and her lover steal the old lady's cat and will not return same until she consents to their marriage.

ON THE WAY FROM KANDY TO COLOMBO (Eclair), May 24.—This, on same reel with above, gives some picturesque and striking views in the locality mentioned in the title. A pleasing number.

THE WOMAN IN BLACK (Rex), May 24.—This one-reel offering tells quite a lively story in which a band of clairvoyant fakirs are rounded up. Herbert Rawlinson, Frank Lloyd and Edna Maison appear. The masked ball is the scene of the principal excitement. The photography is good and the number quite pleasing.

THEIR NEW LODGER (Crystal), May 24.—A comedy number in which Charlie plays the part of a hobo. He borrows the clothes of an escaping lunatic, Baron De Vamoos, and the story works up to a rough house finish. This is a degree better than the average offering of this type.

THE SHERIFF'S STORY (Frontier), May 25.—This Western number tells a story within a story. Arthur Allardt appears as an old sheriff and the scenes pictured are chiefly those of his early love affair. Edythe Sterling is the girl. The plot is quite ingenious and full of spirited action. This is better than the average Western reel.

THE TALE OF A COAT (Royal), April 25.—On the same reel with "Two Hungry Tramps." An unlaughable comedy without plot. Inconsistent in construction and illogical in every detail, it may please the children who only look to laugh.

TWO HUNGRY TRAMPS (Royal), April 25.—Another rough and tumble comedy the caption of which suggests its general construction. The photography on this split reel and the scenic effects are up to the standard.

Independent Specials

AURORA OF THE NORTH (Rex), May 7.—A two-reel number, written by Lloyd Ingraham, with Robert Leonard and Hazel Buckham in the cast. The plot concerns a young trapper, apprehended on the trader's territory. He is sent off without food, matches or a gun into the wilderness, but the girl befriends him. The photography is somewhat blurred in numerous scenes. The story itself, while not free from improbabilities, is fairly entertaining.

THE DEPUTY SHERIFF'S STAR (Reliance), May 9.—This two-reel Western drama is made by Arthur Mackley, from the story by Walter Archer Frost and is quite interesting in some respects. Mr. Mackley plays the part of old Dan Holton, who is defeated at the last election by young Jim (Robert Harron). Many scenes are engrafted in this photoplay, some of which are intense and others superfluous. Not up to the Reliance standard.

A MOHAMMEDAN CONSPIRACY (Thanhouser), May 12.—A production full of Oriental atmosphere, it is a well done offering. The cast includes James Cruze, Florence La Badie, David Thomson, Frank Farrington, Justice D. Barnes, Arthur Bauer and Leland Benham. The beautiful scenes and romantic atmosphere embraced in this picture make it a very pleasing production.

IN THE COW COUNTRY (Kay-Bee), May 15.—This two-reel is nothing more than an old-fashioned cowboy film such as were popular two or three years ago. It is exciting and there is the heart interest which directors of such plays rarely fail to develop. Some of the situations are a bit illogical and withal improbable.

THE SOMNAMBULIST (Thanhouser), May 15.—This is widely advertised as a comedy that is bound to make 'em shriek, but the shrieks fail to materialize. Cyril Chadwick portrays the sleepwalker in an absurd way (perhaps it is the director's fault), as sleepwalkers never extend their hands to discover obstacles; instinct guides them. Some funny situations pertain. Florence La Badie saves the situation and offering.

BENEATH THE MASK (Imp), May 18.—A two-reel subject, by Edward Gordon, with Ethel Grandin in the leading role. The hero meets the girl at a mask ball and does not find her again until a second masquerade to which she wears the same costume. Edward Mortimer plays her father's secretary and introduces some very interesting villainy. The story is entertaining all through, but seemed a little vague in construction at times. Good photography helps render it an attractive number.

FOOTPRINTS OF MOZART (American), May 18.—A two-part photoplay that is supposed to have been founded on, or, at least, is awfully mixed up, with Longfellow's poem, "Psalm of Life." In this peculiar offering Mozart is shown singing his "Requiem" with his dying breath. A diagram should be furnished to the average spectator to enable him in his analysis of this picture.

LUCILLE LOVE, Series No. 6 (Gold Seal), May 19.—This pictures the adventures of the girl of mystery on board the yacht owned by the villain, Hugo. The opening scenes are a little slow, but later, during the mutiny, are melodramatic and exciting. The situations all hinge, as usual, upon the valuable papers, and this number winds up with the documents in the hands of the brutal captain. Good adventure.

THE DOG OF FLANDERS (Thanhouser), May 19.—This is a peculiar sort of a two-reel pictureplay and many beautiful winter scenes are embraced in its plot. The leading actor is a beautiful and faithful dog. An abusive master has beaten it and left it in the snow where it is discovered by a little milk peddler who befriends it. An interesting little love story runs through the plot which terminates in quite a sad ending. This is a well directed picture in every respect and a lesson is taught to selfish and unreasonable individuals.

IN A PERSIAN GARDEN (Eclair), May 20.—A two-reel number, with Mildred Bright, Fred Truesdell, Helen Martin and Stanley Walpole in the cast. This shows how a romantic girl loses her father's love by falling in love with a violinist. The father seemed almost unnatural in his hatred of the couple after so long a lapse of time. An agreeable cast and some well-chosen settings help this story, which is none too original. The scenes at the close were romantic and pleasing.

THE FOX (Rex), May 21.—In this two-reel mountain story Robert Leonard and Al Forrest play the good and bad brothers respectively. The latter gave us a rather different type of villain. He is known as the Fox and is a bad man all through. There is a good deal of commendable drama in this story, enhanced by some striking mountain scenery. Some of the scenes are taken above the clouds. At the close the good brother, serving with the mounted police, kills his renegade brother after the sister has tried to save him. A strong production of its type.

THE BRIBE (Victor), May 22.—A two-reel number, produced by H. L. Solter, with Florence Lawrence and Matt Moore in the leads. P. Standing plays the villain. He employs his servant to hypnotize Flo and command her to procure the papers from her father's safe. She learns to resist the hypnotic influence and surprises the plotters at the end. The first hypnotic scene was particularly well staged. The production as a whole is enjoyable.

THE TRIUMPH OF MIND (Bison), May 24.—A three-reel offering written by Lois Weber, with the author, Phillips Smalley, and Rupert Julian in the cast. This introduces a mental science healer, who also unravels a murder mystery by psychic means. The plot is full of interesting complications and put together in a clear, convincing manner. Parts of the story are like Jack London's "Valley of the Moon," this being indicated very neatly by bringing the book itself into play. This is a very strong production as a whole and holds the attention throughout.

Marshal Neilan.

ONE of the few directors who have come up from the ranks and really made good is Marshal Neilan, a native of San Francisco, who is director and manager of the Kalem comedy company in Holywood, Cal. Sometimes the promising young actors get ahead and win a directorship, and sometimes they make a name, and again they fail; but this 22-year-old man has made good, and is still on the trail that leads up the ladder.

Marshal Neilan.

On the screen, Neilan has appeared in leading roles for Universal, Biograph, Kalem, Klaw and Erlanger, and American films, and in each release that he has been in, has proved his worth. He was the heavy in "Class Mates," a Biograph picture. In "Men and Women" by the same company, he also played the heavy part. He thinks that D. W. Griffith, of Biograph and Mutual fame is the best director of the day, and his favorite lady of the white curtain is Clare MacDowell, of the Biographers. Henry Walthall has his approbation also.

Marshal Neilan has also been on the stage, having played juvenile parts in "The Heart of a Geisha," "The Girl and the Judge," "Sherlock Holmes" and various other legitimate plays. He was making a success of the stage, when three years ago he was snapped up into the intoxicating pleasures of the films, which has ended in his directing for Kalem at the present time. He is a very busy man and can be seen any day at the California studio, telling John Brennan and Ruth Roland what to do in the comedy pictures that have made them so famous. Laura Oakley is also in the company, having been won over from Universal some time ago. Neilan has entire charge of the fine little studio, which is one of the most complete in the south. He sends his films east for finishing, and gets his scripts direct from the New York office of Kalem.

At the studio everything runs smoothly under this young director's guidance, and the place is like a big family home, for everyone is loyal and the many releases are always gotten out on time.

"Hearts of Oak"

Five-Reel Mohawk Feature from James A. Hearne's Play, Directed by Wray Bartlett Physioc.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

HIGH credit is due Wray Physioc for his artistic adaptation of what Mr. Hearne admitted to be a crudely constructed play, for "Hearts of Oak" never ranked high in the author's own estimate. The screen version is characterized by a realism and much natural beauty due to a most faithful interpretation of environment. The conventional plot, a variation of that told in "Enoch Arden," is as detrimental to photodrama as to the original, but the pictured scenes put one's ear very close to the human heart, and there is slowly evolved a presentation that glows at times with a rare warmth of kindness such as Dickens injected into the portrayal of Daniel Peggotty and his household.

Love's Young Dream; Scene from "Hearts of Oak."

Aside from the skill with which Mr. Physioc has handled a very difficult subject, and his admirable choice of types among the grown-up characters, he is to be congratulated upon his finds in the two children of the play. Little Crystal is a gem of the purest ray serene, a beautiful little girl and an accomplished actress. So sweetly is her role enacted that we feel a regret that she must grow up. Only second in charm is Baby Gorman, a veritable miniature comedienne. These children are heavy contributors to whatever popularity the photodrama "Hearts of Oak" is destined to enjoy.

Wilbur Hudson and Violet Horner in "Hearts of Oak."

James A. Hearne's fame rests upon other than his initial ventures; his art became less erring as he progressed, but it is all characterized by a tendency which searched for artistic expression in the quietude of common lives, ond his marvelous acting had much to do with the success of his characterizations. He made plays that were pure and clean in their simple portrayal of family life, but he fell occasionally into theatricalism, especially that of heroic self-sacrifice all out of accord with human experience if not out of harmony with the sympathy of common sense.

It is not an unusual situation for a girl to wed a guardian to whom she has become attached by a thousand ties of affection and then find that her wavering heart inclines to a younger man —that has been shown in hundreds of stories, but that guardian is bound to enlist the sympathy of an audience and a feeling of disappointment ensues when he gives up wife and child to become an Enoch Arden, sail away for many years and return to find his wife married to the other man. It is opposed not only to common sympathy, but to common sense of justice that the noblest character should desert his wife and child for the sake of another man.

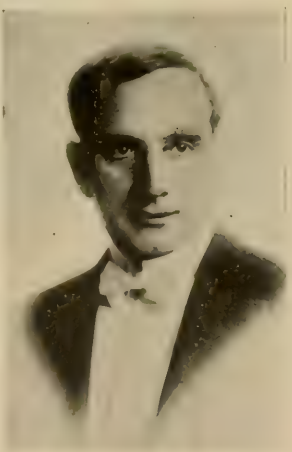
The right of the child to a father's love, guidance and support is far superior to any other consideration in such a case, hence the act of running away strips the strongest character of his strength and leaves no one to whom sympathetic interest can be consistently attached. The wife has varied; the young lover commands no respect; the action to follow develops into a weak last act with a forced climax. The young man who attempts to wrong his lifetime benefactor is the chief beneficiary by that noble benefactor's death, giving Mr. Hearne as an actor some concluding opportunity, but not affording an end satisfying to the average moving picture audience.

We may feel neither approval nor disapproval, neither sympathy nor antipathy in watching such a termination, but it is deplorable to tell a story of that length without affording tonic stimulus or satisfaction to the great mass of people in front.

The free handling of Wray Physioc has done so much for the play, glorifying some very simple situations with artistic beauty, that "Hearts of Oak" was generously applauded when his picture sense was at its best. The young director is certainly on his way to a very high class of production.

WILLIAM CLIFFORD.

WILLIAM CLIFFORD, whose name in private life is Clifford Williams, was born in New Orleans, but while a baby was taken to Toronto, Canada. At the age of eighteen years he appeared in an amateur production of "Damon and Pythias" and conducted himself with so much credit that he was advised to follow the stage as a profession. The first years of his stage life were spent in playing Shakespearean and other classic roles. Later he played under the direction of Ernest Shipman and was starred in "The Prisoner of Zenda." For a season he supported Robert Mantell in stock at Toronto, and finally he joined the company of Walker Whiteside and played leads with that well-known actor for four years. Among the Whiteside productions in which Mr. Clifford won distinction are: "King Robert of Sicily," "Heart and Sword" and "We Are King."



William Clifford.

Mr. Clifford went into motion pictures with the Melies Company. For a year and one-half he played leads with that company. He was one of the first to join the Nestor Company when it took up quarters in Hollywood, Cal., and he has remained at the Universal Pacific Coast Studios ever since. He was leading man with Director Ricketts, later with Francis Ford, and he now is leading man with Director MacRae in the big 101 Bison pictures which are produced by that director.

During his motion picture life he has played every conceivable kind of part, from comedy and farce to the most intense drama and tragedy. He has acted juveniles, cowboys, old men and Indians, and he has always shown himself to be the finished, accomplished actor.

Mr. Clifford has no foibles—so far as anybody has been able to find out—and he leads the modest life of a model citizen.

At the present time Mr. Clifford is playing leads in Henry MacRae's "101 Bison" Company now touring the South Seas and producing a series of sensational features.

Bushman Wins Big Contest.

Chosen by "Ladies World" Readers as "Typical American Hero" to Star in "One Wonderful Night," Strong Louis Tracy Story.

FRANCIS X BUSHMAN, the widely known photoplay leading man with the Essanay Company, is the "typical American hero." Hundreds of thousands of moving picture devotees, casting nearly five and one-half millions of votes in the "Hero Contest" conducted by The Ladies World, of the McClure publications, have so decided. Mr. Bushman has already been notified of his success and the forthcoming July issue of the Ladies World will announce the tabulated result of the votes cast as follows::

Francis X. Bushman (Essanay)	1,806,630
Jack W. Kerrigan (Victor-Universal)	1,262,740
Maurice Costello (Vitagraph)	1,088,400
Crane Wilbur (Pathe)	575,650
Arthur Johnson (Lubin)	284,050
King Baggott (Imp-Universal)	261,650
Carlyle Blackwell (Kalem)	161,640
Total	5,440,760

The Ladies World "Hero Contest" has aroused national, and even international interest, and now that it has been brought to a close, moving picture producers, exchange men, and exhibitors everywhere are beginning to realize what a wonderful thing the contest has been for the business in which they are engaged.

Francis X. Bushman.

High Water Mark of Co-operation.

In a general way it may be said that the Hero Contest represents the high water mark to date of co-operation between the current magazines and the moving picture industry. It has proven an unprecedented confession of the tremendous interest in moving pictures which exists throughout the length and breadth of the land, among all classes and conditions of people. It will long be remembered as a stamp of unqualified approval upon the moving picture industry, an infant only a few short years ago and now grown to lusty health and strength despite the contemptuous sneers and unprincipled attacks of those who failed to recognize moving pictures of the kind that leading manufacturers have always meant to produce as the ideal entertainment for the masses.

The Hero Contest just completed has been a co-operative scheme—but strangely enough, the moving picture industry has been the recipient of perhaps the largest share of the benefits without having given anything in return. Benefits to The Ladies World have accrued from moving picture devotees throughout the country who were quick to respond when a subject in which they were interested was under discussion.

It seems especially fitting that the tremendous success achieved by the contest in which Mr. Bushman has been so honored is to be laid at the feet of The Ladies World, for this McClure publication is conceded to have been first in the field with co-operative schemes involving moving pictures because it was the first of the high class magazines to realize the tremendous hold which moving pictures were taking upon the rank and file of people throughout the country—the very people who make the best magazine readers and whose friendship and patronage it seemed worth while to court.

"Moving Picture Circulation" Plan.

The McClure plan to build, for The Ladies World, under the editorship of Gardner W. Wood, a "moving picture circulation," had its beginning in August, 1912. "What Happened to Mary," a serial fiction story, was running in the magazine and the Edison Company was approached to film the offering for a series of monthly picture releases to be advertised in connection with the magazine and this particular feature story. Mary Fuller, of the Edison players, was featured in the releases which were kept going for a solid year and scored a tremendous success.

So widely known had "Mary," of The Ladies World and the Edison company, become that a second series of stories and pictures was immediately offered under the caption of "Who will Marry Mary?". These ran for six months.

Mr. Wood, of The Ladies World, says that, remembering the success of these two previous ventures in building up circulation for the magazine and possessed of a firm conviction that great good could be accomplished for any current high class magazine if there could be aroused for it even a small share of the interest which is being shown in moving pictures, the Hero Contest which has just closed resulted in the most natural way when there arrived on the editorial table a novel by Louis Tracy which had all the earmarks of a splendid story for the screen and an exceptional part for a leading man.

Beverly Bayne.

Contest Began in February.

The publication of the Tracy story entitled "One Wonderful Night," in serial form, was begun and a voting contest to have The Ladies World readers decide who was the photoplay leading man best fitted to play the principal male part in the film version was announced. Messrs. Bushman, Kerrigan, Costello, Wilbur, Johnson, Baggott, and Blackwell, leading men with the Essanay, Victor-Universal, Vitagraph, Pathe, Lubin, Imp-Universal, and Kalem companies, respectively, were chosen by the McClure people as representative of the type of actors required for the part and in February of the current year the first voting coupon was printed in the pages of the magazine. The announcement was made that each of these coupons clipped from the magazine, properly filled out, and mailed to the contest editor would count ten votes for the voter's candidate. The contest closed May 1. During the closing weeks of the contest, pursuant to announcement, each coupon sent in counted fifty votes for the voter's candidate.

Gold Medal to three highest contestants.

From the very beginning the interest of The Ladies World in the moving picture business struck a responsive chord. Letters from the magazine's readers everywhere expressed their approval and the adulation amounting to "hero worship" which was shown for various screen favorites gave the contest its name of "Hero Contest."

Friendly Rivalry Aroused.

Friendly rivalry amongst the several leading men listed and amongst the companies employing these able performers at once sprung up and campaigning of all kinds was resorted to. A count of votes dated February 12th showed Jack W. Kerrigan, of the Victor-Universal, leading by more than 22,000, with Maurice Costello, of the Vitagraph company, second, and Mr. Bushman, of the Essanay, third and approximately 28,000 votes behind the leader. Mr. Bushman and his Essanay backers, including George K. Spoor, were just beginning their campaign about that time, however, and the April issue of the magazine carried a full page advertisement in which Mr. Bushman addressed his friends, and moving picture devotees in general, soliciting their votes and support. In passing, it may be remarked that this page of advertising, as well as a half page for Mr. Bushman and a half page for Mr. Bushman and a half page for Maurice Costello, another of the candidates, printed in the May issue, was paid for at the magazine's regular rate which is something like $4,000 a page.

The tabulated record in The Ladies World offices indicate that Mr. Bushman's page advertisement, in strict conformity with the latest practices of candidates for public office, was the thing which "did the trick" for him and boosted him from a poor third in February to a big winner only a few weeks later.

Picture to be Made in New York.

Pursuant to the general plan of the contest, now that Mr. Bushman has been selected for the principal role in "One Wonderful Night," it is announced that the film version of the popular story which is being completed in the June issue of the magazine is to be made by the Essanay Company under the personal supervision of George K. Spoor, president of the company, in a few weeks. The followinng cast of principals, all from the Essanay forces, has been announced:

John Curtis	Francis X. Bushman
Howard Devar	Cyril Leonard
Steingall	E. H. Calvert
Clancy	Leo White
Earl of Valletort	John H. Cossar
Lady Hermione	Beverly Bayne
Count Vassilan	Richard C. Travers
Anatole	Bryant Washburn
Jean de Courtois	Frank Dayton
Horace Curtis	Rapley Holmes
Mrs. Curtis	Helen Dunbar
The clergyman	Thos. Commerford
Otto Shmiss	Tobert Bolder

Tentative plans are to have the picture made by an Essanay company brought from Chicago to New York in June while the motion picture exhibitors' exhibition is on in the metropolis. An expensive production is to be made, the subject being handled in either four or five reels. Release of the big feature is announced for some time in July through the General Film Co., who control all of the Essanay releases.

Great Publicity for Contestants.

The value of the Hero Contest to the moving picture industry in general and the seven contestants in particular is shown by a review of what has been done. When the contest was announced, The Ladies World at once went into the traction cars in New York City with three-colored cards telling the story; each of these cards carried the photographs of the seven contestants. From the very beginning of the contest, liberal announcements in the magazine itself called attention to the contest, the pictures of the seven candidates being reproduced with each announcement. The July issue of the magazine will carry a full page announcement of the result of the contest in the form of a lay-out which will include a picture of each member of the cast, headed by Mr. Bushman, which has been selected to portray "One Wonderful Night."

Mr. Wood and his associates, of The Ladies World, express the opinion that any one of the seven contestants would have been ideal for the interpretation of the especially "fat" part which has been created in the Tracy novel and regret that it was not possible for each one of the seven to win. As an unexpected and additional prize, the magazine has arranged to present each of the three candidates who polled the largest votes, a beautiful solid gold, diamond studded medal bearing the inscription: "Ladies World Hero Contest." Mr. Bushman, Mr. Kerrigan, and Mr. Costello will be the recipients of these pretty mementos.

Votes from All Over the World.

While the change made in the value of the voting coupons makes it impossible to accurately set forth the number of copies of The Ladies World which were handled by readers directly interested in the contest, attention may be called to the fact that 5,440,760 votes, with each coupon representing ten votes, indicates a dyed-in-the-wool "moving picture circulation" of 544,076 during the period of the contest. The magazine's monthly circulation is listed at 1,000,000 copies. Votes were received, not only from every state in the Union, but also from the British Isles, France, Italy, Australia, Panama, South America, the West Indies, Manila, and other foreign countries.

In closing the contest which they regard as having been helpful to their interests in many ways, the magazine announces that another big moving picture feature is to be started in the near future.

Francis X. Bushman began his stage career at the age of eight in a production of "The Lady of Lyons" at Albaugh's Lyceum, Baltimore, in which his sister was playing the lead. At the same theater a number of years later, upon his return from college, he adopted stage work as his profession. New York has seen him on the musical comedy stage in "The Queen of Moulin Rouge" at the Circle theater and later as the juvenile lead in the Shuberts' "Going Some". Mr. Bushman was born in Norfolk, Va., is thirty years of age, and unmarried. He joined the Essanay forces in April, 1911.

Beverly Bayne, who will play opposite the "typical American hero" in "One Wonderful Night," has had one of those story-book careers in the amusement world which are as interesting as they are rare. When a schoolgirl in St. Paul, Minn., the favorite Essanay leading woman bore a name quite different, but high on the social register. She was visiting a schoolgirl friend in Chicago when the pair decided, in the nature of a lark, to "try for a job in the movies". Miss Bayne, that was to be, was as much surprised as any person when her lark landed her a job at which she has made more than good by reason of exceptional natural ability.

"SPARTACUS" AT THE AUDITORIUM.

Brilliant Opening Presentation of George Kleine's Big Photodrama, with a Good Sprinkling of Chicago Society People in Attendance.

"SPARTACUS," an eight part photodrama by Pasquali, was given its initial presentations at the Auditorium Monday afternoon and evening, May 11. George Kleine, who holds all the rights in the United States, its dependencies and possessions and Canada, spared no expense or painstaking to make the occasion memorable. He can, without any qualms, either of good taste or conscience, lay the flattering unction to his soul that he has in this instance surpassed any former moving picture exhibition in this city, in magnificent surroundings, stage setting and musical accompaniment.

While "Sparticus" is by no means a "Quo Vadis?", it is still a fine spectacular photodrama, the fictional story being well told by the pictures. The eight parts are divided into three acts, the first and last comprised of three reels each. Intermissions of 15 minutes each separate the second and third acts. Spirited applause was given at the end of every act.

One of the most attractive features of the presentation was the accompanying music. Thirty-five soloists of the Chicago Opera Company's orchestra were led by Modest Altschuler, leader of the Russian Symphony orchestra, New York City, and one of the three most noted symphony leaders in this country. Mr. Altschuler had spent the week preceding the opening in arranging the music, and was to be found early and late during that time viewing the pictures in George Kleine's private exhibition room.

As "Spartacus" teems with harshness of action and incident, Mr. Altschuler made it his aim to soften the effect by the music—sweet love strains and inspiring marches of semi-martial type being especially noticeable among the motifs. It was a positive delight to witness how perfect musical accomplishment brought out into stronger relief the telling points of the story, without distracting attention from the pictures themselves. As conductor, Mr. Altschuler made a strong appeal to the large audience and was warmly applauded again and again.

It will well pay exhibitors and musicians in picture theaters to see "Spartacus" often. The education afforded by the score arranged by Mr. Altschuler means a great deal for moving picture presentations in the future.

My review of "Spartacus" will appear in a later issue of the World.

William McCay and Nat Collins, representing themselves to be motion picture men in the employ of the Lubin Company, visited Binghamton, N. Y., a week or so ago and started in to issue checks for large sums of money which they said they were going to spend in making a big military feature. They eventually landed in the hands of the Binghamton police and are thought to be swindlers, wanted in several towns for passing checks.

"A Woman's Triumph."

Famous Players Four-Part Adaptation of Scott's "Heart of Midlothian" a Fine Picture.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THE Famous Players will release on May 20th "A Woman's Triumph," a four-part adaptation of Sir Walter Scott's "Heart of Midlothian." It is a fine picture. It is produced by J. Searle Dawley and played by experienced screen artists. Laura Sawyer and Betty Harte have the roles of Jeanie and Effie Deans, sisters of widely differing temperaments. These two well-known players in the silent drama make a particularly effective team, for team they are. Both have big parts and both do splendid work. Hal Clarendon is George Robertson, the smuggling lover of Effie Deans whose untimely arrest and detention as the bride-to-be awaits his coming to the church is the cause of the sorrow and the exciting events that follow. Wellington A. Playter is the clergyman-sweetheart of the steadygoing Jeanie, whose regard for the truth impels her to swear to it, even when its utterance spells death on the scaffold for her beloved if erring sister. There are many other players who by their work contribute to the success of the picture, among them George Moss as the venerable David Deans and Emily Calloway as the half-witted Madge Wildfire, who hides in the woods the unfathered babe of Effie.

The exteriors were photographed in Cuba. In the selection of locations the semi-tropical vegetation in which this island is so rich obviously was avoided. The backgrounds naturally dovetail in with the atmosphere of the story. There are ruins and grim old dungeons; there are fields and lakes, plains and hills, and there are many picturesque spots of sharply contrasted light and shade. The introduction is novel and unusually effective. Scott is shown at his writing table. He receives a letter which induces him to write "The Heart of Midlothian." As the story ends he is shown again at his table. The brief portrayal of the novelist-poet is finely done.

The story is of a battle against circumstances rather than of a clash of contending wills. There is no villain in this play, if we except old Dame Murdockson. It is a tale of the suffering imposed upon two innocent members of a humble Scotch family by reason of the indiscretion of the third. Through the arrest of the lover and later of the aberration of the half-witted girl, Effie Deans is brought to trial for the murder of her infant. Jeanie may save the life of Effie if she will swear in court that she had knowledge of the existence of the little one. It is a struggle between falsehood and the saving of a sister on one hand, the triumph of truth and the sacrifice of her own flesh and blood on the other. That Jeanie emerges from her soul-struggle on the side of the teachings of the Bible she so faithfully reads and of the pious old father to whom she is so devoted may be difficult of comprehension to many of us of a materialistic age, but it is wholesome, even as it is intensely dramatic in the portrayal.

The picture opens well. In the first two or three hundred feet you feel it will be a "go." At the end of the initial reel you are sure of it. The interest is steadily maintained; and it is heightened many times by strong situations. One of these is the escape from prison of the lover of Effie. Another is the assault on the jail, the burning of the door, and the refusal of Effie, unwisely feeling secure in her innocence of the crime of murder, to take advantage of the victory of the mob over the soldiers. The scenes of the trial are finely portrayed. If there is a note of criticism it is that the picture has been "squeezed" into the four reels; but in the eyes of many exhibitors this may not be considered a major crime.

In "A Woman's Triumph" there is much that will appeal to the eye as there is much that will appeal to the heart; there are contests of brute force and there are struggles that are internal if eloquent; but the impression that is strongest is of a humble home, of an old father and his two barefoot daughters.

MORE MELIES PICTURES.

American Subject for the "G" Brand will be Made at Flushing Studios.

THE Melies "G" brand, which has recently been devoted to foreign-made comedies, will shortly have a liberal sprinkling of American-made humorous films. The pictures are to be produced by the Gaumont Company at Flushing, N. Y. The Gaumont Studio has been thoroughly overhauled, fully equipped with lighting apparatus and placed in perfect working order. In addition, the Gaumont Company has taken a ten-acre plot between Flushing and College Point, known as the Stratton property, and here a stage has been erected for outside work. On the Stratton property is a twenty-four-room mansion, which is being utilized in pictures, as well as for dressing rooms, director's offices, etc. The property faces Flushing Bay and is said to be one of the most advantageously situated spots for motion pictures in the vicinity of New York. Many of the Melies "G" brand hereafter will feature Joseph Levering and Miss Marian Swayne as leads. Other well-known performers have been engaged and the stock company that is being gathered around these artists, it is claimed, will be one of the most accomplished organizations in the motion picture business.

Joseph Levering.

The Gaumont Company, which is in sole charge of the production of these pictures for the Melies "G" brand, has spared no expense in producing the best grade of American comedies. Every effort is being made to bring out new and novel ideas in scenarios, stage work, and in the finished product.

THE well-known magazine writer of short stories, Mary Rider Mechtold has given to filmdom an innovation in this Western story, and James Kirkwood used his fine Italian hand and artistic qualifications, assisted by the participating actors, in presenting a highly enjoyable and intensified visualization.

One of the most noticeable and creditable features pertaining, and an original one, perhaps the original Western picture, wherein there is not a shot fired. The cast contains four stars who enjoy, almost equal roles: Henry Walthall, "Douglas Williams"; Irene Hunt, his sweetheart in the East; Dorothy Gish has the title role, "Nell, The Mountain Rat"; Donald Crisp, "Steve," Nell's devoted admirer. The author evidently knows her characters and the locations in which she has banged them down to work out their destinies.

The elements of popularity obtain in this offering, which contains not only plenty of action but gripping heart interest, and there is nothing of the trite in the wholesome and beautiful California atmosphere, where it was produced. It will, or should, appeal to every audience. While there are many scenes amongst the rough-and-ready cowboys and miners, the delicacy with which they are handled eradicates any feeling of nauseousness, which attack the observer occasionally in pictures of a similar nature.

Dorothy Gish is called upon to essay a role that combines two opposite natures, and the clever little lady never wavers in her portrayal of either. Henry Walthall, in the difficult part of a dissolute young scion of a worthy family, who through drink is never himself, weak and selfish at all times, is at his best; which is saying something. Donald Crisp, as "Steve," who is cast as a steady Westerner, in love with Nell, is the prototype of the part. His stoicism gives strength to the whole. Irene Hunt is not happy in her role, a thankless one, and failed to convince. The large supporting cast is fully adequate.

The story opens in the Eastern home of Douglas Williams (Walthall), and he is being upbraided by his mother for his dissolute ways. She informs him that his fiancee, in disgust, has decided not to marry him. He resolves to go west and redeem himself, which he does (goes west), but associates, on his arrival, with rough company and meets "Nell, The Mountain Rat," who is queen of the dance hall at which he is a guest. Instead of reforming he indulges himself and through a scrimmage with an old miner both are thrown out. Douglas stakes the miner and is made a partner in a prospective gold mine. Returning to the saloon, in another brawl he is beaten to insensibility and taken to Nell's cabin by Steve who is head-over-heels in love with Nell and proposes to her. She refuses him because she does not love him, but "likes him, just the same." She has fallen in love with Douglas who, after many interesting scenes and adventures, including a visit from his mother and former sweetheart, who gives him up and returns East, marries Nell. The old miner strikes pay dirt which makes them all rich. The intense acting in the complications, at this period of the picture, is wonderful. Steve's sacrifice of himself and his love in going for the minister, and being left to hold the horses in the finale, while the girl he loves becomes another's, is sob fetching. The photography is first class in every respect.

AL. JENNINGS.

AL JENNINGS, former train robber and convict, whose life constitutes probably the most remarkable of human documents, believes that the filming of his former deeds of outlawry will prove a positive agency for good. That is his reason for appearing on the screen under the auspicecs of the Thanhouser Film Corporation. Every agency making toward reformation in the care of criminals in New York City, has approved the action of Charles J. Hite, president of the Thanhouser Company for his production of this picture. When the announcement was first made there were some who opposed putting into pictures the activities of the admitted outlaw. The pardoning of Jennings by President Roosevelt and his resultant restoration to citizenship was sufficient for Mr. Hite. Society had accepted Jennings back and his home folk held him in sufficient esteem, despite his once worn prison garb, to urge his candidacy for the governorship of Oklahoma. At a recent luncecon given by Mr. Hite at the Plaza Hotel, in honor of Jennings, there were gathered men and women prominent in New York's public life. Mrs. Katherine Davis, superintendent of corrections of New York and the first woman to hold that post, praised the production of the Jennings film and declared a real service was thus being rendered to society. "Not to give Mr. Jennings every courtesy and accord him every right," said Mrs. Davis, "would be to take away that which society has given back to him. We would be the criminals then, and we alone." Every detail of Jennings life as set forth in the articles in the Saturday Evening Post will be reproduced in the picture. Carroll Fleming, former producing director at the Hippodrome, is directing the picture.

SEIZE COPY OF "THE BLACK TRIANGLE."

The United States marshals, acting in the interests of the Films Lloyds, Inc., seized a copy of "The Black Triangle," the five-reel detective photo-play, in the offices of the Film Traders of America, at No 1482 Broadway, on May 4th. The film now lies impounded in the Marshal's office awaiting court action.

NEW YORK STATE LEAGUE.

Successful Convention Held at Rochester, N. Y.—Delegates Elected for Dayton Convention—Next Convention in New York City.

AN INTERESTING convention of the New York State League was held at Rochester, N. Y., on Tuesday, May 5th. The meetings were held at the Seneca Hotel, and the first session was called to order by President A. N. Wolff at 11 o'clock Tuesday morning. Mayor H. H. Edgerton, of Rochester, made a brief address of welcome which was followed by a few remarks on the subject of Sunday opening agitation by National President M. A. Neff.

The morning session was concluded by the appointment of a special committee to submit names of members to be chosen as delegates and alternates to the Dayton convention.

The afternoon session was opened at 3 o'clock and the nomination committee on delegates submitted the following names to the convention: Delegates—A. N. Wolff, M. L. Fleischman, W. C. Hubbard, E. M. Day, T. A. Keppler, J. J. Wittman and G. L. Tyler. Alternates—John Maloney, L. S. Harris, F. C. Gehrling, T. W. Esterheld, J. L. Deegan, J. B. Flanigan and William Brandt. On motion, the members named were elected to represent New York at Dayton.

Under the head of good and welfare, the question of Sunday opening was discussed at some length and was concluded with the appointment of a committee consisting of T. A. Keppler, G. L. Tyler and Mr. Pierce to study the question and make a report at the next state convention.

On the question of increasing the membership of the league in the state the following committee was appointed: Messrs. Day, Wittman, Macnabb, Hubbard, Fleischman, Harris and Brandt.

A motion endorsing the administration of the National League by President Neff was offered and adopted unanimously. It was decided that the next convention of the New York League should be held in New York City some time in October, and Mr. Wittman, Mr. Fleischman and Mr. Mullaney were appointed as a committee of arrangements. This concluded the work of the convention and an adjournment was taken sine die.

In the evening the exhibitors and their guests attended an elaborate entertainment and ball. As a social affair it was a great success.

PENNSYLVANIA CONVENTION AT WILKES BARRE.

Executive Committee of State League Select Place of Meeting and Name June 23 and 24 as the Date.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Pennsylvania State Branch, No. 3, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, held at the Continental hotel, Philadelphia, it was decided to hold the third annual convention at Wilkes Barre. This action was brought about through the efforts of Gilbert C. Miller, of Plymouth, a town near Wilkes Barre. Mr. Miller, although not a member of the Executive Committee, attended the session for the purpose of having the convention held in his vicinity. The following members of the committee were in attendance: Edward A. Jeffries, Dr. Walter Stuempfig, Philadelphia; J. G. Hansen, Ben H. Zerr and Frank A. Gould, Reading. National President M. A. Neff was also present.

Various topics were discussed including the numerous censorship bills all over the country and the running of lengthy programs for five cents.

Following the executive session the members proceeded to the weekly meeting of the Philadelphia Local, No. 2, held in the former Odd Fellows' Temple. This meeting was addressed by Sam H. Trigger and other New York exhibitors, who invited the Philadelphia picture men to attend the exposition to be held at Grand Central Palace, New York City, June 8 to 13. The visitors retired after which the Philadelphia local proceeded to business.

There had been apparently a misunderstanding among some of the members relative to the purposes and aims of the National League and judging from the remarks made by different members present, a few of the exhibitors were planning to withdraw. Fortunately Mr. Neff was present and after a lengthy address in which he explained the accomplishments of the National body and its objects, those present took favorable action in regards to remaining with the National body and President Wheeler of the Philadelphia local stated that proper steps would be taken on Friday of the following week to straighten out the matter of per capita tax due the State Branch. With this affair settled everything will be arighted and the convention to be held at Wilkes Barre promises to be a winner. Already a number of reservations have been made with Mr. Miller by several firms who will make demonstrations in the convention hall. In the course of his remarks Mr. Neff stated that he favored a national censor congress. This can be brought about, he explained, only by the individual state legislative bodies enacting laws accordingly.

MASSACHUSETTS EXHIBITORS DINE.

Informal Jollification Meeting Held at Hotel Georgian, Boston—Seek to Increase Membership.

ON TUESDAY EVENING, May 5th, forty-four members of the Massachusetts Exhibitors' Association met at the Hotel Georgian, Boston, and sat down to an informal dinner, which was followed by a business and jollification meeting during which conditions of the trade in Massachusetts were discussed. When the well-served dinner had been disposed of, President Ernest H. Horstmann called upon H. F. Campbell, chairman of the legislative committee, to make a report of the work of that committee before the state legislature.

Mr. Campbell related how the committee had successfully opposed all but one of fourteen bills offered, any one of which would have caused untold inconvenience to exhibitors. The only bill still open, he said, was the so-called "Twenty-Minute" bill, and that everything pointed to its repeal. Mr. Campbell stated that most of the work and expense of fighting this adverse legislation had fallen upon Mr. Horstmann and that he deserved the deep and lasting appreciation of every exhibitor.

Considerable applause greeted this statement and Vice-President Henry I. Wasserman, in behalf of the organization, presented President Horstmann with a beautiful gavel and a traveling bag, to which the recipient responded with a very sincere "I thank you, gentlemen."

Remarks were made by many others present pledging their cooperation and support for the various protective activities of the organization. The discussion brought out the inherent weakness of the organization in Massachusetts that must be overcome before it shall become a power in the state. It appeared that of the forty-four present, twenty-seven were exchange men, while there are supposd to be 480 picture theaters in Massachusetts, of which only fifty are enrolled as members of the organization.

To meet this situation it was decided to start a contest for members and two teams of ten men each are to be named, the winning team to be the guests at a dinner furnished by the losers. The contest is to last two weeks. Samuel Grant is credited with the idea.

It was also suggested that the picture men should join the Boston Chamber of Commerce, which is a powerful body of business men having great influence at the State House. It is believed that the support of that organization can be secured for the benefit of the picture men if they will but join it.

Among those present at the dinner were: R. D. Marson, Stewart Collins, C. Wesley Fraser, S. Grant, S. Bernfield, J. C. Hutchinson, Harry Asher, Fred B. Murphy, Charles Barolet, E. J. Farrell, J. A. Eslow, F. W. Swett, D. F. Cowan, Sam Haase, C. M. Crawford, Tom Spry, G. H. Newhall, J. J. Cahill, H. Swordes, C. Harpoot, E. H. Horstmann, F. J. Howard, H. I. Wasserman, J. F. Patten, P. F. Lydon, M. J. Lydon, A. S. Schaller, William White, L. Vigdon, H. C. Eaton, F. H. Baer, F. H. Collier, G. M. Clark, W. E. Dowlin, W. B. Sproule, J. Lurie, S. Rudnick, S. H. Steinfeld, S. Grand and B. M. Corbett.

ENTERTAINMENT FEATURES.

New York Exhibitors' Association Planning a Good Time for Visitors to the Exposition at Grand Central Palace.

A COMMITTEE on arrangements and entertainment, of which Aaron A. Corn, chairman, is busy completing plans for the entertainment of exhibitors who attend the New York Exposition at Grand Central Palace during the week of June 8th to 13th. Many manufacturers who have taken space at the exposition will have more or less elaborate plans for the entertainment of visitors. In their respective booths, members of their stock companies will be on hand day and night, and each will have a special day during which interest will center around their respective exhibits. The following schedule of events for the convention has been announced by the committee:

AARON A. CORN.

Monday, June 8—Opening of the convention, 2 o'clock P. M. It is hoped that the Hon. Theodore Roosevelt will be able to deliver the address of welcome, but it is feared that he will be on his way to attend the wedding of his son Kermit in Spain at that time, so some other notable man will have to be secured.

Tuesday, June 9—A trip to Coney Island will leave Grand Central Palace at 4:30 o'clock, P. M., where a clam bake will be served and a tour of the amusement places made.

Wednesday, June 10—Moonlight excursion, cabaret and tango party on the Hudson.

Thursday, June 11—A night on the Broadway roof gardens has been planned, with special programs of high class professionals.

Friday, June 12—Banquet arranged by the various manufacturers at the Waldorf-Astoria with entertainment by the leading actors and actresses of the various companies.

Saturday, June 13—Prize contest entertainment and distribution of souvenirs and a farewell ball.

An interesting feature of the convention will be a model theater constructed along lines suggested by the "Safety First" Society. It will be located on the mezzanine floor. The purpose is to include in this structure all the devices for safety. It will be a most interesting exhibit.

NEW YORK ASSOCIATION.

Executive Committee Hears Addresses on "Safety First" and Health—Committees Appointed.

The executive committee of the New York Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association held a fully attended meeting on Wednesday, May 13th, at the Imperial Hotel. Samuel H. Trigger was in the chair. He introduced Frederick H. Elliott, of the Safety First Society of Greater New York. Mr. Elliott had requested the co-operation of the exhibitors in promoting the campaign of "Safety First." He spoke briefly of the scope and usefulness of the work. Mr. Trigger promised to have all the exhibitors in New York exhibit "Safety First" slides which have been prepared by the society. A committee was appointed to make sure that these slides will be put on the screens without delay.

Another speaker was A. J. Wells, representing the committee which has charge of the celebration of the commercial centenary of New York. After hearing Mr. Wells and Rich. G. Hollaman speak in favor of the support of this celebration, a resolution was passed indorsing the celebration and giving it the support of the exhibitors.

Dr. Charles Frederick Bolduan, director of the Bureau of Public Health Education, was the next speaker. He thanked the committee for the support given on behalf of the clean-up campaign. He said his bureau which was established to promote sanitary knowledge among the people found the aid of the motion picture exhibitors the most valuable kind of assistance. Mr. Trigger declared that the exhibitors would be glad to display any slides which the board may want to have put on the screen in the great cause of sanitary education.

The following up-state exhibitors were then appointed on the New York State Reception Committee, to act in conjunction with the local committee during the exposition and convention: Albany—Harry Weidman, John A. Sucknow, Emil Deiches. Utica—William A. Douque, Joseph Karl, Thomas A. Beckett. Saratoga Springs—J. E. Reardon, Edward Kihlmire, H. J. Lux. Syracuse—B. E. Cornell, W. A. Lowery, Thomas Gibbons. Buffalo—R. C. Gettel, J. A. Pferd, P. Hofmeister, Harry Marsey, Charles Bowe, John F. Miller. Elmira—M. D. Gibson. Oswego—J. E. Cordingly. Saugerties—John C. Davis. Binghamton—R. M. Davidson, Irving L. Davis. Schenectady—L. C. Smith. Yonkers—Meyer Samuels.

It was also decided to have a meeting of the Ladies' Entertainment Committee on Sunday afternoon at 3 p. m., at the Hotel Imperial, to make the preliminary arrangements relative to the entertainment of the visiting lady exhibitors and the wives and friends of the visiting exhibitors.

The Chairman stated that a committee had visited Philadelphia and Baltimore, receiving a cordial reception from the exhibitors of both these cities, and we are assured that a very large delegation will be here during the week of our convention and exposition.

SCREEN CLUB WILL WELCOME DELEGATES.

At the monthly meeting of the Board of Governors, of the Screen Club, King Baggot, Joseph Farnham and Arthur Leslie were appointed a special committee to arrange for a Screen Club night at the Exhibitors' Convention at Grand Central Palace. As on the club's roster are practically all the celebrities of the motion picture industry, and as the membership is now near the five hundred mark, it is expected to be the largest and most representative gathering yet held. The Screen Club will keep open house Convention week. A summer garden is being fitted up in the rear of the clubhouse. The grill opens directly on the garden, consequently there will be convenient as well as ample facilities for catering to the comfort of the guests.

"GREAT DIAMOND ROBBERY" ON BROADWAY.

Photoplay productions are gradually coming to the acid test that has always been applied to theatrical productions, namely, the test of Broadway. It will not be long before every pretentious feature will be judged by the length of time it can hold its own in a Broadway theater.

Just now "The Great Diamond Robbery" is holding its own among a number of excellent features that are having a Broadway run. The illustration herewith conveys an idea of the prominence with which this picture is being featured at the choicest spot on "Main Street," New York. This picture is holding its position easily, as it is an exceptional production. In the cast are many well known metropolitan actors, including Wallace Eddinger, Gail Kane and Martin J. Alsop, who are appearing just across the way in "Seven Keys to Baldpate." Also Charles J. Ross and Elita Proctor Otis, both perennial stage favorites.

New York Theater, Broadway and 45th Street.

An extended review of "The Great Diamond Robbery" was given on page 47 of the Moving Picture World of April 4. The rights for New York state and northern New Jersey for this production have been purchased by the De Luxe Feature Film Company, 71 West 23d Street, New York, of which Herman Smidt is the manager. This company also controls the rights for the same territory for such features as "Sapho" (Thanhouser); "A Bargain with Satan," "Peter Makaroff," "Flames of Justice," and others.

UNIVERSAL HAS BAD FIRE.

Sustains Severe Loss in Negatives Destroyed—Many Changes in Program Necessitated.

A serious fire in the Colonial Hall building, 101st Street and Columbus Avenue, New York City, which started about 11 o'clock Wednesday evening, May 13, said to have been caused by defective insulation, caused a loss to the Universal Film Manufacturing Company of approximately $300,000 in negative and positive film destroyed. Several employees engaged in assembling pictures, had a narrow escape, being compelled to take to the fire escapes to get out of the building.

As a result of the fire the Universal Company announces the substitution of "The Sisters" for the Friday Powers of May 22nd, "The Pearl of the Sea"; Friday Victor, May 22nd changed from "The Bride" to "A Disenchantment"; Saturday Joker, May 23rd changed from "Mike Searches for his Long Lost Brother" to "Strenuous Life"; Sunday Rex, May 24th, changed from "The Woman in Black" to "Avenged."

There will be a few other changes necessitated, but President Laemmle issued instructions to the Pacific Coast Studios to retake quite a number of the coming releases on account of the negatives being destroyed. Other than the financial loss suffered by the company, the program has not been affected, owing to the excellent organization and facilities at the Universal's disposal.

Speaking for the Ramo Film Company, which also had quarters in the building, C. Lang Cobb, general sales and publicity manager, said that the loss sustained by his concern had been but slight. The damage done, according to Mr. Cobb, may cause some slight delay in the shipment of film during the next few days and will make it necessary for the company to find new quarters for studio and manufacturing uses.

Colonial Hall is owned by H. Markowitz who estimates the loss to the building at $20,000. Three floors—the fourth, fifth, and sixth—were fire swept, but the fire department quickly got the blaze under control and prevented what, for a time, threatened to become a particularly disastrous conflagration.

PHOTOPLAY THEATERS CO.'S NEW OFFICES.

Offices of the Photoplay Theaters Company have been moved from the Metropolitan building, Madison Avenue and Twenty-third Street, to the Forty-second Street building, Forty-second Street and Madison Avenue. The removal took place a couple of weeks ago, but with furniture and equipment now installed, the new offices farther up town are just now the mecca for friends of the company who have been formally invited to "drop in and look us over."

The new quarters comprise a suite of six rooms on the twentieth floor of the thoroughly modern skyscraper, with exposures on both the north and west sides of the building. There are private offices for the president, general manager, and secretary of the company, comfortable quarters for the auditing and bookkeeping staff, a large store room, and a pretty little reception room. From the office of President A. J. Norton one gets a view directly across Forty-second Street, westward to the North river, and, on a clear day, far across the New Jersey lowlands.

The offices throughout are furnished simply, but elegantly, rugs, furniture, etc., giving the impression that they are the best of their kind that money could purchase.

The business of the Photoplay Theaters Company is steadily growing and the move to large quarters up town was found an absolute necessity.

VITAGRAPH WILL PRODUCE "HAMLET."

A company of Vitagraph players, under the direction of James Young, are working on an ambitious production of Shakespeare's "Hamlet." Clara Kimball Young will play Ophelia, James Young is cast for Hamlet and Harry Morey will be the Ghost. It is predicted that this will be one of the best Vitagraphs that has been made in some time.

ALL-STAR GETS CHAMBERS STORIES.

Robert W. Chambers' popular stores, "The Fighting Chance" and "On the Firing Line," have been secured for motion picture production by the All Star Corporation. Work on these productions will be commenced late this summer.

EASLEY BUILDS ANOTHER THEATER.

W. F. Easley, owner and manager of the Princess theater, Rushville, Ind., is building another picture theater in that city. The plans for the new house call for a structure 28 by 100 feet. It will have a seating capacity of 400 and will be modern in every respect.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"THE BABY SPY" (Selig).

The cleverness of a tiny tot in crudely copying a war-map and repeating to her mother the plans of the Confederate officers she overheard while at play in a room where they were conferring, leads to important developments that save the day for the Union Army just across the border. The intrepid mother conveying the map and the information by a daring detour on horseback and swimming a river to avoid a Confederate picket-post, places this information in the hands of the Union leaders in time to not only avoid the proposed surprise, but to really meet and rout the enemy before their plans are perfected. This is a thrilling two-reel war story with an unusual factor for its crux. The child-part is played by "Baby" Lillian Wade, and the daring and resourceful mother by Bessie Eyton. This picture is released May 25th.

"SINGING PICTURES" AT HERALD SQUARE.

"Singing pictures" were added to the program at the Herald Square theater Monday of this week. Manager Rothchild says that they are being tried out and may be retained as a permanent feature.

More accurately described, the "singing pictures" are illustrated songs with moving pictures taking the place of the still slides which have been used heretofore. The singing is done by flesh and blood vocalists and not by any mechanism. Approximately 300 feet of film is used to illustrate the song entitled "In the Heart of a City without a Heart" which was on at the Herald Square on Monday. A lady and a gentleman vocalist sang the song while the illustrations were going through the projecting machine. The service is supplied by the Imperial Singing Pictures Company.

ANOTHER RAMO BOOKING OFFICE.

C. Lang Cobb, jr., general publicity and sales manager of the Ramo Film Company, paused long enough on his dash through the South to wire the Moving Picture World to the effect that a new Ramo booking office had been opened at Atlanta, Ga., to serve exhibitors in North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Tennessee. Twelve of the latest Ramo features are available at present. The office is in charge of William R. Mack and is located in the Rhodes Building, Atlanta.

"CAST ADRIFT IN THE SOUTH SEAS" (101 Bison).

The days when silken-haired pirates held sway in the South Seas, when the discovery of new lands was a daily occurrence and when every breeze brought adventures more strange than pen can picture—this pirate romance is laid in those golden days. The picture was staged amid the South Sea Islands by Henry McRae, director, and his "around-the-world" company of players. It is one of a series of sensational plays dealing along historical, topical and dramatic lines, that this company are doing.

In connecting this play and others in the series, these important items are worth keeping in mind. While other companies have attempted to take pictures in the South Seas, none have done it with any degree of success or thoroughness. Up to this time, none have succeeded in getting good photography down there—it was thought that the atmosphere was against it. But the Universal feels justifiable pride, declaring that it has overcome the difficulties in this respect, and that the photography in these South Sea pictures is perfect. Again, the Universal sent a full and complete company off on this world tour not wishing to depend, as has been the case, with other companies—on a few leads, and local talent to support them.

The present picture is rich in picturesque atmosphere, dramatic incidents and historical romance. If you enjoy the spectacular, beautiful settings in out-of-the-way places never before filmed, the recalling in vivid fashion of stirring days now dead, you will enjoy this feature. And with the settings and the sensational feats—enough for a feature in themselves—is a love story pleasing and engrossing.

"THE NORWEGIAN SPY" (Chariot).

In this thrilling detective story, Wanda Treuman, the well-known actress, takes the part of a female spy in her most successful manner. It is all about an ambassador who has incurred the enmity of some powerful politicians who plot his ruin and seek to destroy him with the aid of Countess Hodgska. The countess is a daring member of the nobility and enlists aeroplanes, special trains, special steamers and autos when the friends of the ambassador get on her track. If she gets to Holger Danske docks before her pursuers the ambassador wins, otherwise he must face ruin and disgrace. There is a lot of bribery in these films and the number of venal chauffeurs and coachmen is alarming. They cannot stay bought for any length of time. The pursuers of the countess disconcert all her plans by disturbing the telegraph wires, and just as her triumph seems certain, the detective, Burnes, gets the compromising papers away from her and gets back to the ambassador just in time to save him.

THANHOUSERITES GIVE LODGE BENEFIT.

Wednesday evening, May 6th, the Thanhouser Stock Company, comprising Riley Chamberlain, as "Wigson"; "Peggy" Snow, as "Mrs. Temple"; Mignon Anderson, as "Dorothy"; Jim Cruze, as "Jack Temple"; Lucy Peyton, as "Mrs. Fuller"; Sidney Bracy, as "Frank Fuller"; Dave Tohmpson, as "Captain Sharpe"; Fanny Bourke, as "Mrs. Martha Brown," and Frank Farrington, as "John Brown," presented "Mrs. Temple's Telegram" for the benefit of Huguenot Lodge No. 46, F. & A. M., at New Rochelle to a packed house. Their services were donated for the benefit of the organ fund. Between the acts Harry Benham sang, Helen Badgely (the Thanhouser Kidlet) gave a monologue, full stage, "The Tin Soldier and the Dolls," during which the clever one-reel subject of that name was thrown upon the screen, and Mrs. Ethyl Cooke Benham, wife of Harry Benham, mother of the two charming "honeybunches," Leland and Dorothy, with Charles Mead, gave an exhibition of dancing that called for encores until they had to be refused, and Frank Farrington sang until his repertoire was exhausted. Nearly a thousand dollars was realized. Lloyd F. Lonergan, Thanhouser Director of Productions, put over something new in Masonic circles, when he had flashed on the screen a reel made up of introductions, embracing the officers, past and present, individually, for future generations to look upon, and presented it to the lodge. Mr. Lonergan, who is a past master of a Brooklyn lodge, has been elected an honorary member of Huguenot Lodge.

"THE CIGARETTE MAKER OF SEVILLE" (Kleine-Cines).

A fascinating story of international politics is told in the "Cines" two-reel subject, "The Cigarette Maker of Seville," to be released through the General Film Company, Tuesday, May 26, by George Kleine. In the course of the story the methods employed by certain of the great powers to learn the military secrets of their rivals are exposed and many of the underlving causes for seemingly inexplicable public events made clear.

All this, however, is merely incidental to a highly dramatic story of the human interest type, a story of a Spanish girl employed in a cigarette factory and who accidentally causes the death of the factory foreman. Pursued by the police, she is assisted to escape by a foreign spy, and years later, when she has become the wife of a high official in the war department, the latter appears, demanding that she buy his silence by turning over to him certain important fortification plans. The climax of the photoplay, which frees the young woman from this situation and puts an end to the machinations of the spy, is unique. "The Cigarette Maker of Seville" is a story that holds the attention of the spectator from the opening title to the last frame of film. It is one of the series of subjects made by "Cines" in the beautiful city of Seville, Spain.

EXCELSIOR PICTURES ON STATE RIGHTS.

Just returned from a visit to the studio of the Excelsior Feature Film Company at Lake Placid, N. Y., Treasurer Wright and Sales Manager Rosenbach, of that company report that it has been decided to release the company's product on the state right plan. Director Handworth and a very able company are hard at work on a feature which promises to be exceptional and which will be released at an early date.

While at Lake Placid Messrs. Wright and Rosenbach attended the ninth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Handworth, which event was celebrated on May 12.

ROBERT GRAU'S NEW BOOK.

"The Theater of Science" is the title Robert Grau has given to his new volume to be issued a month hence, dealing with the evolution, growth and trend of the motion picture industry. Mr. Grau's work does not present the technical side of the motion picture art, nor does the author attempt to reveal himself as an authority on photoplay construction.

From cover to cover the more than 500 pages of text in the new volume are given over to a sincere effort to accurately appraise the influence of the men and women who have contributed to the amazing development of the new art.

LEW DOCKSTADER IN ALL-STAR FEATURE.

"Dan," a motion picture story from the pen of Hal Reid, is to be produced by the All-Star Company with Lew Dockstader, the famous minstrel, in the title role. The story deals with dramatic incidents in southern homes during the Civil War. Mr. Dockstader will portray an old negro servant, "Dan." A notable cast has been engaged, including Gail Kane, little Kathryn Lee and Lois Meredith.

"A LEAF FROM THE PAST" (Lubin).

This story might be called two leaves from the past, for it effects the relations of both husband and wife, each being followed by a nemesis of indiscretion or misfortune of years ago. To avoid domestic rupture, both have to submit to persecution and blackmail, and for a while the terror of the past truth drives them near to insanity. Eventual discovery of the past brings confessions and understanding of the future and two worthy lives find peace and happiness. The story is written by Shannon Fife, one of the most dramatic of the Lubin staff writers, and staged by Lloyd B. Carleton with a selected cast, including Ormi Hawley, Lillie Leslie, Edwin Barbour and Edward J. Peil.

"THE LOST SERMON" (American).

In this two-part drama the American Film Mfg. Co. has injected human interest in a great abundance. John Strong, (Wm. Garwood), as a young minister, broken in health, gives up his charge to go to the country for recuperation. He teaches school there as a means of livelihood and one of his pupils Rosamond Day, (Vivian Rich), a Southern family reputed to be wealthy, soon becomes the object of marked attention.

Scene from "The Lost Sermon" (American).

Believing her to be wealthy, the young minister's sense of honor does not permit him to give expression to his heart's desire and at the expiration of his term he returns to the work of his chosen calling.

In the meantime the mother of Rosamond dies and as her estate is heavily mortgaged the orphan is obliged to face the world. This she does resolutely and when in dire distress the hand of fate leads the young minister to her door in search of a sermon she was reported to have found.

Notes of the Trade.

THREE pictures, all one-reel subjects, were completed by Phillips Smalley and Lois Weber and their company of eighteen players during the two weeks that they were at Laguna Beach, Cal. The titles of the newest Smalley productions are "The Nemesis," "Lost By a Hair" and "The Pursuit of Hate." With their return to the Universal Hollywood studios the Smalleys immediately commenced work on "A Stone in the Road," a two-reel drama.

PITTSBURGH.

O'BRIN G. COX, of the National Board of Censorship, was in Pittsburgh last week on his tour of principal cities in making a survey of the motion picture industry. After inspecting the various theaters in the center of the city, Mr. Cox had a talk with Civilian Aide Archie Mackrell, the energetic local searcher for immoral moving picture films. Mr. Cox said later: "Pittsburgh has taken an advanced position in regard to moving picture theaters. I have found many things undertaken by the local Department of Safety worthy of imitation in New York and elsewhere. The methods used by Mr. Mackrell will be the subject of a report to the National Board of Censorship and I am sure they will be of great assistance."

Pittsburgh is to have the finest motion picture theater in the United States by next September, according to the plans and specifications of the new theater of the Rowland & Clark chain, which is to be erected on Penn avenue, just west of North Highland avenue, East End. The building will cost $80,000, will have a seating capacity of 1,000, will be absolutely fireproof and is especially designed for a motion picture theater. Plans for the structure have been drawn by Architect H. S. Bair, and the contract for its erection has been given to Golden & Crick. It will front twenty-three feet on Penn avenue to a depth of sixty feet, then widening out to sixty-two feet with a depth of one hundred and ten feet. The narrow part will consist of the foyer, while the auditorium will be located in the large space. The foyer throughout will be faced with marble, with rest rooms on each side, while at the end of the foyer will be a large fountain, the central figure of which will be a Cupid holding a tilted vessel. This screen will have a regular stage setting and will be the largest in the city, measuring eighteen feet by twenty-two feet. To the left will be a large pipe organ. The lighting system will be semi-direct and the most improved system of fan ventilation will be used. The theater proper will be but one story in height and about the only non-fireproof portion of it will be the seats.

Rules for the approval of motion picture films and the theaters have been completed by the Pennsylvania State Board of Censorship, the newly created body of motion picture supervisors. The rules become effective June 1. They include regulations for censoring both pictures and posters. According to the new rules the state will prohibit the display of any films not approved by the censors. For the examination of the films a fee of $2.50 is to be paid for each reel, and the examination will be made at the office of the board in Harrisburg, or in any other place agreed upon. The standards provided by the board define at great length what may be shown and what is interdicted and also shows the intention of the board to banish posters, hand bills or other advertising matter concerning motion pictures if they are sensational or misleading. This latter clause will no doubt hit some of the paper houses that are selling posters of bygone days and plays for use with modern picture-plays.

A new late model Edison machine has been added to the equipment of the Gem Theater, at Derry, Pa.

A splendid motion picture theater has been opened at Uniontown, Pa., by a syndicate of business men. The house is built of brick and steel and costs about $80,000, which includes the building of bowling alleys and billiard rooms. The theater has a seating capacity of 1,150. The owners are: Charles L. Gorley, O. M. Baughtner, H. C. Monaghan, and Charles McClockey, all of Uniontown, Pa.

The Majestic Theater, on West Washington street, New Castle, Pa., has been closed by the state inspector because of the lack of a suitable rear exit. The necessary alterations are being made, however, and the theater will be opened in a few days.

Lewis Harris will erect a fine motion picture theater in Wampum, Pa. The building will be a two-story structure, 40 by 80 feet, and constructed of Egyptian brick. Frank Foulke, of New Castle, Pa., is the architect. The front of the building will be done in fresco plastering and will be handsomely illuminated. The interior will be decorated in pastel shades, and the lighting will be by the indirect method. The stage will be 15 by 22 feet, with a screen 7 feet by 12. The house will seat about 200.

The theater in Beaver, Pa., owned by Pete Robinson and William Grinnen, was ordered closed last week by Inspector Patterson, because of the violation of the state laws in having the theater situated on the second floor of a building. The order for closing was enforced in person by Inspector Patterson and led to a lively set-to between Patterson and Robinson, one of the owners.

The Cresson Lodge, No. 188, L. O. O. M., of Cresson, Pa., has opened its new lodge building on Ashcraft avenue and First street. In addition to lodge rooms, a dance hall and bowling alleys, the building contains a motion picture theater. The entire structure cost $18,000. The Cresson Lodge is represented by W. E. Mannwarring, John F. Parish, Peter C. Parish, John Pfeister and Fred Cameron, all of Cresson, Pa.

The theater at No. 720 East Ohio street, North Side, Pittsburgh, has been considerably enlarged and the seating capacity increased. The house is owned by W. J. Rodman, who also operates it. The cost of the alterations was $4,000.

H. W. Sharretts has purchased the interest of R. M. Richardson in the Pastime Theater, at Derry, Pa. The house is now owned by Mr. Sharrets and F. L. Mowrey.

An innovation in motion picture theaters will soon be opened at Juniata street and Beaver avenue, North Side, Pittsburgh. The new theater is what might be termed a "dry" cabaret. It will consist of a restaurant and theater combined, but nothing stronger than ginger ale will be served at the tables, in accordance with the Pennsylvania laws. The theater is owned and will be operated by the Imperial Amusement Company, of which T. R. Eicholz, of this city, and C. E. Glenn, Evans City, Pa., are the heads. The theater is being erected of steel, brick and terra cotta and will cost, when completed, about $45,000.

Exhibiting pictures under age restrictions has its problems. "How can I tell they are under sixteen," lamented one manager who maintains an attitude of being extremely conscientous. "There are no little girls any more. They all dress alike and do up their hair alike after they are about twelve years old." And so many children are getting a taste of the forbidden fruit.

E. M. Lower, of Danville, has purchased the Princess Theater, at Watseka, from F. M. Kendall.

A Dixon editor is indignant over rumors that the license for moving picture theaters is to be increased. "Such an increase would be many steps backward," he asserts. "The five and ten-cent shows have retired the ticket-scalper and brought the box office man of the theater into a semblance of decency. The five and ten-cent shows have been brought to a degree of efficiency which has made them popular from one end of the country to the other. * * * Wherefore this rumor should be discouraged. A raise may mean a raise of the price. As it is, the five and ten-cent people are not getting rich with any extraordinary rapidity. A short while ago the cry was made to let well enough alone. That cry applies with tremendous force to the cheap theater."

The third moving picture theater to be opened in Cuba will be known as the Peoples. It has a seating capacity of 300.

Dreamland Theater, at Ipava, is being remodeled, getting the inclined floor and new seats.

The Hippodrome moving picture theater, at McHenry, has been closed.

E. Marshall has purchased the interest of E. B. Cary in the moving picture theater at Utica, and now is sole owner of the house.

Dwight Furness recently gave a lecture on the making of moving pictures before the Delan Community Club, at Evanston.

Rudolph Lubbering is now sole owner of the Odean moving picture theater at Eighth and Lind streets, in Quincy, having purchased the interest of his partner, Hugh King.

Brown & Murphy, who have opened the Main Street Theater, in Evanston, announce that they will feature high-class multiple-reel subjects, such as "The Last Days of Pompeii" and "Quo Vadis?"

The new building for the moving picture theater at Minooka, operated by George Jacobs, has been completed.

J. E. Singleton and Oral Woods have let the contract for the material and for some of the equipment for their new moving picture theater at Avon, and expect to have the house open for business within two months.

The Amuse-U, at Princeville, recently gave away a handful of nickels as an advertising stunt.

Members of the Garment Workers' Union, in Galesburg, made a house-to-house canvass when the Colonial Theaters were turned over to them by Manager Schroeder. The five-reel Solax, "Shadows of the Moulin Rouge," was shown.

S. A. Bliss has opened a moving picture show in the I. O. O. F. building at Denver.

Camp & Patrick, who have been operating the Bijou and Savoy Theaters, at Olney, for the last eight months, have taken over the Airdome in that city. A number of improvements will be made to the new property before it opens for the summer with licensed service.

D. D. Considine is contemplating the erection of an opera house in Harmon.

The Maywood Theater, at Maywood, recently gave a benefit performance for Spanish-American War Veterans, with a special program of war pictures, martial music and a local boys' band of twenty-five pieces.

Verne Corley, of Campaign, who has been associated with E. E. Alger in the moving picture business at Paxton, Rantoul and Campaign, and Miss Gertrude Evelsizor, of Paxton, recently were married. The groom is at present manager of the Neil Theater Company, in Campaign.

The Commercial Motion Picture Manufacturing Company, of Chicago, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $10,000 to manufacture and deal in motion pictures, supplies, etc. The incorporators are W. M. Gelderman, William L. Lehle and J. W. Kriebel.

The management of the new Princess Theater, at Springfield, announced that it expected to open for business about May 15.

The street railway company and the Illinois Steel Company, at Joliet, have announced that next year they will show a new set of safety first moving pictures to the school children of Joliet and Lockport. A number of electric railway men in Illinois have been advocating the taking of more pictures on the subject of accident prevention, so that a persistent educational campaign may be conducted. Trainmen and children, having seen one set of pictures, are not especially interested in their repitition, but a series told in story form, it is contended, would be eagerly sought. The men interested in the plan suggest a central exchange—probably Chicago—for handling the reels.

Residents of DeKalb voted 1,649 to 718 against opening the moving picture shows on Sunday. The opening was favored by 574 men and 144 women, but 825 men and 824 women were against it. This is the first time since the woman's suffrage law went into effect that the new voters have passed directly upon the question of Sunday shows. A similar election in one of the larger cities—say Springfield or Peoria with their general air of liberalism—would be interesting.

An opera house, seating 400 persons, is being constructed at Arrowsmith by R. S. Krum.

A. R. Traband has taken out a building permit at Springfield to construct an airdome at Eleventh street and South Grand avenue. He will run moving pictures.

W. E. Mack, of Des Moines, Ia., has purchased the moving picture theater of Sparrow Brothers, at Eureka. He will conduct an airdome this summer on the lot adjoining the theater.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Slanker have left Matherville, where they had been conducting the Russel moving picture theater, and gone to Rock Island, where they will reside. Lee Olson is now operator and Charles Rettig, pianist.

TWO anti-trust suits filed by the attorney-general's department on behalf of the state of Texas were won by the state. Judgments by agreement were rendered by Judge C. A. Wilcox, of the Twenty-sixth District Court at Austin, Tex. The concerns involved are the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, of Wilmington, Del., and the William H. Swanson Film Company, of Denver, both with Texas headquarters at El Paso. No forfeiture of permits was asked, but each of the companies was penalized $1,500 and perpetually enjoined from making any agreements with each other in the future or with any other person, firm or corporation to violate any of the provisions of the anti-trust statutes.

The Overholser, at Oklahoma City, Okla., has entered upon a summer season of four acts of vaudevills and three reels of moving pictures for ten cents.

The Electric Theater is giving its shows in the opera house at Larned, Kan., while its new building on the west side of Broadway is being fitted up. The new house, which will be 25 x 125 feet, will have a seating capacity of 400.

Free moving pictures will be among the attractions at Colonial Park, Houston, Tex., according to Manager Breinig.

The Grand Opera House, at Bay City, Tex., has been sold by G. M. Magill, and the opera house company to Oskar Korn, who has been managing it for several years.

Pictures of the logging and lumber industries in Louisiana were shown at the Majestic Theater, in Houston, Tex., while the Lumbermen's Association of Texas was in session there.

Immediately after Mr. and Mrs. John Daugherty purchased a half interest in the Mystic Theater, at Columbus, Kan., from Mrs. Angie Smith, the house was closed for redecoration, the installation of a new ceiling, indirect lighting system and cooling and ventilating system.

The Tarrant Amusement Company, of Fort Worth, Tex., has been granted a charter with capital stock of $2,000. The incorporators are J. M. Reynolds, W. D. Reynolds, Jr., and J. B. Matthews.

C. E. Glamon, of Wellington, Kan., who operates moving picture theaters in Wellington and Kansas City, Mo., is said to have his eye on Wichita, Kan., as an excellent place for the photoplay and to have picked out two locations in that city.

The Empress Theater, at Greenville, Tex., is conducting a voting contest for the most popular young woman with a diamond ring as the capital prize.

Plans were made to film the 89ers' parade at Oklahoma City, Okla., the pictures to be shown at the Panama Exposition. Some of the horses and mules which were used in the rush into the territory when it was opened for settlement are still alive and add to the historical value of the reels.

The five-reel film, "The Boy and the Law," which is being used by playground associations throughout the country, was shown at the Marple Theater, in Wichita, Kan., sponsored by the Wichita Playground Association and local ministers.

A bargain day program was the method used by the Cozy Theater, at Shawnee, Okla., to remind the photoplay lovers that the house which has been remodeled has been reopened.

The Ministerial Association of San Antonio, Tex., which is making a fight on moving picture theaters as well as other Sunday amusements, is said to have announced that, if compelled to, they would ask for writs of mandamus against the sheriff, the constable and the mayor, compelling them to close the places. The spokesmen for the church people were informed by the county and the city officials that the proper proceedure was to make complaint against theater owners and others who violated the law. The clergymen reported that no jury would convict. However, they decided to try this plan and if it failed to resort to the mandamuns writs. Notice was served that affidavits would be made against all proprietors who kept open on Sundays after May 3.

Roy Crawford, theatrical manager of Topeka, Kan., on his return from a trip to New York, announced that the Majestic would be closed for remodeling during the summer, but at the opening in September feature pictures, six reels or over, would be shown exclusively, for either a twenty-five cent straight or for 10 and 20 cents admission. After the close of the regular season at the Novelty Theater, May 30, that house will be given over to feature films.

A Pine Bluff, Ark., union of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Operators has been formed with P. M. Bridges as president: Charles O'Donnell, secretary, and Merle Royster, treasurer.

W. L. Smith, of Little Rock, Ark., has purchased the Queen Theater, at De Queen, Ark., from A. M. Middleton.

M. H. Rumbleu, who has been conducting moving picture theaters in Weatherford and Altus, Okla., contemplates operating the airdome in Anadarko, Okla., this summer.

William D. Thompson has purchased an interest in the moving picture business at Edmund, Okla.

The City Council of Harrison, Ark., proposes to regulate the construction of moving picture theaters, an ordinance to that effect having been introduced.

The city council of Houston, Tex., has granted a permit to J. M. Carbajal to operate a moving picture theater at 2516 Pierce avenue, in that city.

Good business with the pictures of Fort Smith was reported by the Lyric Theater, at Fort Smith, Ark.

The Atchison, Kan., Globe recently published some information in which many persons are interested under the head of "Who's Who in Movies." Instead of being a guide to the actors, this column told who conducted the local photoplay houses, the names of the attaches, the kind of music given, the brands of service used with some of the stars and other interesting facts.

The Publicity League of San Antonio, Tex., conducted a moving picture show during the week of the annual Fiesta. The object was two-fold to show every beauty spot about the city to the visitors who might not leave the uptown district and to raise funds for the Publicity League. The program included films of general interest, in addition to the pictures of San Antonio.

E. Ferrari is erecting a new building at Rockdale, Tex., to be occupied by a moving picture theater.

M. W. Bailey, of Hutchinson, Kan., filmed the inter-class athletic meet of the high school in that city.

It is reported that an attempt wil be made to secure the enforcement of the moving picture censorship law, passed by the last Kansas legislature. The statute has virtually been a dead letter because it provides that the state superintendent of public instruction shall be the censorship and he is too busy to give proper attention to the scrutiny of pictures. Exhibitors intimate that the revenue to be derived from inspection fees is one of the causes of an agitation for a resurrection of the law.

E. F. Maxwell, owner of the Empress Theater, at Atchison, Kan., will devote more attention to special features, having booked up his house for this class of pictures until July.

E. C. Carson, who operates theaters at Madill and Roff, Okla., has leased the Epic Airdome, at Henrietta, Okla.

The McMurray Saxaphone Band and E. F. Haberlein, zitherist, were recent attractions at the Cozy Theater, at McPherson, Kan.

J. C. Wells has purchased the Forum moving picture theater at McAlester, Okla.

Joe Korkamos has arrived from Alexandria, Egypt, to take the place held by his brother, George Korkamos, who, in joint partnership with O. A. Englebrecht, operates the Gem Theater on North Main street, in Temple, Tex. George Korkamos and his partner have opened a new moving picture house in Tyler, Tex.

Callaway & McInnes have purchased the opera house at Llano, Tex., from W. C. Barker.

The strike of the moving picture operators who recently went out at Dallas, Tex., asking for shorter hours and more money was indorsed by the Central Labor Council of that city. President F. J. Geller, of the Council, announced that the strikers had waived their first demand and sought only recognition of their union. About twenty-six operators went out, but all of the houses except one continued operation by filling the places with non-union men.

Hoyt Kirkpatrick, the pioneer moving picture man of Fort Smith, Ark., is elated at the public approval of his new Joie Theater manifested at the opening of the beautiful house. The house will give pictures daily and nightly, except Sunday.

The Grand Theater, at San Antonio, Tex., has opened its summer season of photoplays. Miss Antone Southern, a singer, is a feature. Country stores, amateur nights and other like attractions probably will be offered.

A new use for industrial moving pictures has been found by the Ford Motor Car Company, of Detroit, Mich., which will try out the plan in the Southwest. Pictures of the manufacture of the automobiles were made at the factory. Ford Clubs will be formed among owners of that brand of cars and the film will be exhibited to them in order to make them familiar with all parts of the machines.

The Gazette, at St. Joseph, Mo., and the Lyceum Theater, of that city, have conducted a travel festival. Admission was secured by a coupon from the paper and ten cents. Seats for elderly persons were reserved for twenty-five cents and the coupon. Seats for the entire series could be reserved upon the same terms.

Moving pictures of the fight against nicotine among the school boys were taken at Houston, Tex. A feature of this campaign was the painting with silver nitrate of the tongues of boys who had been injured by the cigarette habit.

John Lutes has taken a three-year lease on the new moving picture theater in Scranton, Kan., which is to be erected by W. R. Batton. The house will seat 400 persons.

A balcony will be added to the Block Theater, at Atchison, Kan.

I. Mandelstein and others of Kansas City are said to have been negotiating with E. G. Bylander, of Sedalia, Mo., for a ten-year lease on Woods' Opera House, in that city, to be used as a hippodrome show, including moving pictures. The first plans called for extensive remodeling of the house.

Manager Hermes, of the Photoplay Theater at Ellinwood, Kan., put his new Power's 6A on exhibition in a local store window before it was installed. There are thousands of small city residents who have little idea of a moving picture machine and the stunt has lost none of its advertising value.

The enthusiasm with which students and teachers of Belot, Kan., received the "Merchant of Venice" at the Electric Theater probably will result in the exhibition of several other educational films.

Carthage, Mo., was filmed by the Nugget Motion Picture Company, of Joplin, Mo.

FEATURE pictures will be used by the Bijou Theater, at Saginaw, in connection with vaudeville after improvements now under way have been completed. The present theater and two adjoining buildings will be thrown together, making a theater seating 1,400 persons.

Dean C. Worcester, formerly of the University of Michigan, recently showed at the Broadway Theater, in Detroit, 12,000 feet of moving pictures of native life in the Philippine Islands. Mr. Worcester has more recently been a member of the Philippine Commission.

Moving picture programs suitable for both children and adults is the Saturday afternoon and evening program decided upon by the board of trustees of the Auditorium, at Saginaw. The first subject was the six-reel feature, "The Fulfillment." Some time ago pictures especially for children were given, but these were discontinued.

Thomas Hosking is now in charge of the Hubbell moving picture theater, at Hubbell. The house which has been running four nights a week plans to operate nightly. The plans for remodelling, announced by Henry Opal, owner of the building, will add one hundred to the seating capacity.

The Star Theater, in South Range, which was closed three nights each week during the strike period in the neighborhood of Houghton, has resumed its regular schedule, but is giving only pictures. Later the vaudeville features may be restored. Miss Mildred Koppedo, of Palmedale, is pianist and Norman Haapanen, trap drummer.

The stockholders of the new theater company which will erect a $50,000 house at the corner of Germania avenue and Franklin street, in Saginaw, decided to call the concern The Franklin Theater Company, instead of the Saginaw Theater Company, as first planned. The title of the house has not been selected. The public probably will be asked to submit names. Julius R. Kirby has been elected president. Other officers of the corporation are: Vice-president, Max Heavenrich; secretary, David Swinton; treasurer, Otto Schupp, and directors, Egbert H. Patterson, Harry E. Oppenheimer, Peter Mitts and E. E. Bradley. President Kirby, Mr. Patterson and J. D. Pilmore, who is to be manager of the house, recently made a tour of inspection of modern theaters in Detroit and other cities.

The Italian societies of Iron Mountain are building a new theater. James W. Smith, an architect of that city, recently was in Calumet to inspect the Calumet Theater.

The building at 1 Monroe avenue, N. W., in Grand Rapids, occupied by the Vaudette Theater, will be remodeled at a cost of $60,000. The building also contains store-rooms. The location of the show will be changed in the building.

Pictures of the Calumet & Hecla mines, lectured by Major Phillips, of the Michigan National Guard, three other reels and the Hanna Triplets made up a program given by Dreamland, at Cadillac, for ten and five cents.

Arrangements were made to have moving pictures taken of the Flag Day ceremonies in Bay City. That place will be the center for a number of Michigan patriotic societies, who plan to observe the day with parades, flag-raisings and other rites.

"There is no necessity for a moving picture censorship in Grand Rapids according to Lester Potter, police censor of Detroit. "The persons behind this movement might better go out and direct their efforts against the dance hall," he said when the matter was up before the city council of Grand Rapids. "There is where our young men and women are ruined, not in the picture shows. Abolish the freakish dances and get rid of the pool rooms. That's the work. Let the moving picture shows, which are the poor man's recreation, flourish and do good. Instead of directing energy against them, let the energy be thrown against real evils that beset our children." The mayor delayed the appointment of a censor. He did not like the idea of the Social Welfare Association submitting a list of available candidates. "I don't want hand-picked committees from any one," he is quoted. "If there is to be a committee I'll pick it myself." "To save the children" was the reason Superintendent of Schools Greeson put himself on record as favoring a censorship. Representatives of the various woman's clubs have asked for the appointment of a woman censor if it is decided to scrutinize the films. City Commissioner W. B. Weston advocated a censorship for some of the "higher class" theaters in Grand Rapids. He is said to have stated that when a "grossly immoral French mistress," who was not an actress, appeared at a local theater the seats were sold from the stage to the "nigger-heaven." "And the play was far worse than a moving picture show could be," he added.

Manager Thompson, of the Alcelum Theater, of Northville, is having an old building removed from the lot in Main street recently purchased, preparatory to erecting a new theater.

W. J. Hall has opened his new Plaza Theater in the Tussing building, in North Washington avenue, at Lansing. Five reels will be shown for five and ten cents. Mr. Hall is proud of the appearance and construction of his new fireproof theater, and made a very dignified announcement of his policies at the time of opening. Joseph Essinger, of Detroit, will be operator.

"Censorship under police power has been more satisfactory in numerous cities of the United States than by committees," proclaims Lester Potter, police censor of Detroit, in a letter to Mayor Ellis, of Grand Rapids. "All pictures shown in Detroit at the present time have been passed by the national board of censorship and by myself. All objectionable parts in films are cut out at my request and are destroyed." Mr. Potter was invited to Grand Rapids when the city council was discussing the matter of censorship. He inspected the motion picture theaters of Grand Rapids and gave them a clean bill, but some of the residents and some of the papers still think there is need for regulating the exhibition of the films.

One of the buildings at White City Park, near Houghton, probably will be used as a motion picture theater this summer, according to M. J. Carroll, general manager of the White City Amusement Company. The park has been leased for the summer to Capt. Joseph Brassau.

John Sahlstein has sold the Lyric Theater, at Ishpeming, to Guy H. Freese, of Marquette, who has been conducting a barber shop for a number of years. One of the changes likely to come with the new management is the removal of the stage to increase the seating capacity. Eight-reel matinees for Saturdays have been announced.

The Board of Estimates of the City Council at Detroit made severe cuts in the portion of the budget covering a board of motion picture censorship. They removed one censor at $1,200, one assistant censor at $1,000, one operator at $1,200 and a machine at $350. Mrs. R. H. Asbaugh, representing the Twentieth Century Club, appeared before the estimate board and urged the appropriation for the censorship bureau as well as a fund for a horse ambulance. She was informed that Commissioner Gillespie, who advocated the censorship, has left enough men in his regular police quota to provide the services, if he so desires. In brief, the board left the problem up to the commissioner.

Nell Clifford has rented the Temple Theater, at Croswell, and will conduct a moving picture and vaudeville show.

Hawkins & Hull have reopened the Eagle Theater, in Olivet, as the Broadway Theater, and will give shows Wednesday and Saturday nights.

Little Marion Rice, who has been appearing in stunts at moving picture and vaudeville houses in the Copper Country, is said to have been taken on by one of the Chicago producing companies.

James Chapman, manager of the Temple Theater, at Cairo, is installing new seats in his house, having sold his chairs to the management of a new moving picture theater to be opened at Akron.

John Moore has resigned his position as manager of the Majestic Theater, at La Peer, to accept a similar position at Grand Ledge.

Manager Mackauin, of the Princess Theater, at Manistique, recently gave a benefit performance for the Kitchitikippi Club.

A. Arthur Caille will call his new moving picture and light vaudeville theater, to be erected at Mack and Baldwin avenues, in Detroit, the "Maxine." It will have a seating capacity of 1,046 on the auditorium floor.

Ollie Baker has purchased the interest of Fred Walker in the Star Theater, at West Branch, and renamed the house the Happy Hour.

Moving pictures of Grand Rapids business men were taken while they were inspecting the Ford automobile plant in Detroit, and will be shown in Grand Rapids.

A NEW method of fighting the Sunday moving picture show has been offered by its antagonists at La Crosse. Under the direction of the Pastors' Union, cards have been distributed among the residents. The card is in the form of a pledge not to attend theaters of any kind except upon a business day. All the pastors recently selected a certain Sunday when they preached upon "The Observance of the Sabbath."

The picture "Creation," given under the auspices of the International Bible Students' Association, is at the Auditorium in Milwaukee for a thirty-day run. The aggressive manner in which this organization has invaded the Middle West has caused a great deal of comment from churches of various denominations which disagree with the doctrines taught by the sponsors of the film, but no outward stand has been taken against the pictures.

C. J. Scharfenstein has purchased the Empire Electric Theater at Cassville. He contemplates giving two shows a week.

The Magee Opera House at Evansville is being remodeled.

Milwaukee physicians endorsed the film "The Drug Habit" when it was shown at a private exhibition at the Orpheum Theater.

Ralph W. Jackmann, of Madison, Wis., representing Chicago investors, is said to have secured an option on a site on North Fourth street in La Crosse for the erection of a theater and office building.

The pictures featuring the Dietz family of Cameron Dam fame were the first offerings of George McCollough and Roy Grovesteen after they had purchased the Unique Theater in Tomah from Smith & Robinson.

The Atlas Theater at Berlin has been re-opened under the management of Mr. Goessle, assisted by H. F. Westlan.

The Armory Board of Tomah has voted to operate a moving picture show starting May 1, but will continue to book theatrical attractions at the Armory. Frank Wells, formerly operator at the Unique Theater, will be manager. It is hoped by the board to add a gallery to the house soon.

O. H. Grondahl has purchased the building at Stoughton, Wis., in which he has been operating his Globe Theater for the last three years.

The profit-sharing moving picture theater in River Falls is attracting considerable attention. The photoplay house is owned from the desire that the citizens of that place have better entertainment than that afforded by the typical "town hall." A corporation was formed without stock. All revenues above expenses were to revert for the public good. The theater was equipped in a modern manner, but there were not enough good attractions. The board moving picture show was almost the typical "chore scow." The equipment and good will was purchased, and now when there is no theatrical attraction the public sees good pictures. In reality it is but a systematic adaptation of the social center idea.

Thomas Norman, of Chicago, formerly with the Laemmle Film Company, has taken a lease on the Racine Theater, at Racine, and after remodeling it at an expense of about $10,000 expects to reopen it May 16 as an exclusive picture house. In making the changes the Orpheum Theater, on State street, in Chicago, served as a guide. The front will have two main entrances. The ornamental stucco contract has been let to the Decorators' Supply Company, of Chicago, and the interior will be done by Mandel Brothers, of Chicago. The theater will be operated as a five-cent picture house. Under the new management the name will be changed to the Rex.

Schmidt & Newman, who have been operating an airdome moving picture show in West Allis, are reported to be negotiating for a site for the erection of a new theater.

Rolfe & Hurley, doing business as the Welcome Theater Company of Adams, have purchased the moving picture show of the Ideal Theater Company, of New Lisbon, in the opera house at Necedah and will give shows Wednesday and Saturday nights.

The public librarian at Oconto is increasing the interest in educational moving pictures by calling attention in her bulletins to books that may be secured and bring back recollections of literary classics presented in photoplay form at local theaters.

Eli Nelson, who formerly conducted the Gem Theater in the Carroll Building, at Chippewa Falls, has made application for a lease on the new moving picture theater to be erected at Columbia and Bridge streets, in that city, by Frank Dile.

The Masonic Lodge, at Friendship, will erect a new building, one floor of which will be used as an opera house.

Three life-sized metal-cast lions, costing $300 each, will be a decorative feature of the exterior of the new Lion moving picture theater, to be erected at Eighth and Lincoln avenues, in Milwaukee, by William P. Hedden and Fred Helm. The house, which will cost $25,000, will be opened about July 15. As most of the building will be of metal it will be practically fireproof.

Plans for a new opera house at Hortonville have been drawn by Messmer Brothers, architects of Milwaukee.

R. H. Hadfield, owner of the Savoy and Orpheum, photoplay houses in Superior, is said to have admitted that Duluth parties were negotiating for the purchase of both theaters.

The Unique Theater, at Marshfield, admitted free at a Saturday matinee all persons who clipped the advertisement of its program from a certain issue of a local paper.

Prof. John Lewis Gilpin, of the Department of General Information and Welfare of the University of Wisconsin, is using moving pictures in civic improvement work before improvement clubs in the state. A lecture on "The Town Beautiful" is accompanied by appropriate films.

Along with the ice cream parlors, the bowling alleys, and even the newsstands, the moving picture theaters of Beaver Dam were closed on Sunday in that town by orders of the sheriff. A ball game was allowed to go on. It is said to have been the first time in forty years that the saloons were closed on Sunday and evidently the order is the tactics generally followed in an attempt to keep the liquor lid off.

The new building code ordinance passed in Milwaukee provides that all theaters shall have a system of ventilation, in continuous operation while occupied, which will provide twenty-five cubic feet per minute of outer air for each occupant and for each light other than electric light.

It is the duty of the progressive Chamber of Commerce to pay attention to the photoplay, according to Munson Havens, secretary of the Cleveland Board of Commerce, who spoke to the Board of Commerce members at Madison. Where a few years ago these bodies spent their time in passing prosy resolutions they now do practical work and the good club "interests itself in such problems of attractive moving picture shows, public playgrounds and the methods by which children may be taught to play."

THE season of moving pictures at the Empress Theater in Spokane, Wash., has ended, and the house has been given over to tabloid musical comedies.

A two hour picture show, cafeteria supper, and a dance is the idea of entertainment for the residents of Kassen, Minn., carried out by the Commercial Club of that city.

The Brunswick Amusement Company, of Duluth, Minn., has taken out a permit to erect an addition to its moving picture theater in Second avenue, West, at an expenditure of $5,000.

A street car in St. Paul, Minn., struck rocks placed on the rails by small boys, jumped the track and ran into the front of the Topic moving picture theater in Prior avenue. The front of the house was damaged little, but Miss Annie Bavern, the ticket seller, fainted when she saw the car coming toward the small office in which she was sitting.

The Blue Mouse Theater, on Seventh street, in St. Paul, Minn., has been remodeled at a cost of $15,000.

Manager Critcher, of the moving picture theater at Bessemer, Col., has made plans for remodeling the Quackenbush building into a modern photoplay house, seating 600 persons, before July 15. He will spend $5,000 in improvements.

Hanten Brothers, of White Lake, S. D., have commenced the erection of a new business building, which is to contain an opera house.

Two new pavilions, which will be used for showing moving pictures as well as for other recreative purposes, are proposed for Duluth, Minn., by the social center organization of that city.

The Clyde Iron Works, of Duluth, had some pictures made in the Louisiana lumber regions, showing how the machinery made by the firm was used. The pictures were used as an attraction at the Empress Theater, in Duluth.

Moving picture theaters in Duluth, which play vaudeville, will be affected by a revision of the city building code which will allow the use of asbestos curtain. Steel now is required.

The films showing the activities of the state normal and industrial schools at Ellendale, N. D., are proving interesting to the residents of that state. They were recently shown at the opera house in Jamestown.

Although the new Alhambra Theater, to be erected on Hudson avenue, in Ogden, Utah, by the Alhambra Theater Company, will be chiefly a moving picture house, a stage will be built for other attractions. The early plans call for a house 180 x 88 x 45. The super-structure will be of steel and concrete. A large pipe organ will be one of the musical features. Charles Zeimer is president of the company and H. E. Skinner, manager.

It is one of the duties of the women's clubs to see that moving picture theaters are properly ventilated, according to Dr. A. E. Talbot, chairman of the health and hygiene committee of the Fifth District of the Minnesota Federations of Women's Clubs. In her annual report, at a meeting in Minneapolis, she declared this was just as important a matter as the censorship of films.

Mayor Nye, of Minneapolis, has announced his intention of trying to have free moving picture shows given in the parks of the city in conjunction with band concerts. Although the concerts given by the park band have proved attractive, the mayor believes that a program of photoplays, principally while the musicians are resting, would increase the attendance and get more results out of the city's pleasure plants. His idea is to have a machine transported from park to park.

Instead of the regular Sunday evening service at Plymouth Congregational Church, in St. Paul, Minn., two reels of moving pictures were used to illustrate a talk by Rev. P. P. Womer on "The Problem of Child Labor in the United States."

The American Anti-Alcoholic Foundation is using moving pictures in the Northwest to back up the oral arguments against the liquor habit. The reels recently were shown at the Lyric Theater, in Northfield, Minn.

Otto English, who has been conducting the American Theater, at New Ulm, Minn., has purchased the Gift Shop, at Springfield, Minn., and the theater is being conducted by his brother, who is his partner.

The Gem Theater, at New Ulm, Minn., rode the crest of the wartime wave of patriotism by the exhibition of three reels showing the Second Regiment, Minnesota National Guard, which includes the New Ulm company.

The copper mines in the vicinity of Butte, Mont., are soon to be filmed for an industrial feature. The pictures will be taken by the same methods in which the lead-silver mines in Idaho were filmed —using an 8,000-candlepower arc light for the underground work. The Montana picture will carry the copper from the first process to the finished plate.

The Duluth, Minn., club women and school heads whose activities for better pictures have been mentioned in the World, introduced a series of matinees at the Princess Theater for the children, at which especial attention was given to patriotic pictures.

Two Rochester, Minn., houses are attracting attention with their slogans. "All Sadness Abandon Ye Who Enter Here," announces the Majestic, but at that it runs some drama and is likely to get hold of a few which are shy the happy ending. The Metropolitan claims the title, "The Theater of Realization."

All persons over sixty-five years of age and all children in the kindergarten and primary grades of the schools in Logan, Utah, were admitted free at a special matinee of "Joseph and His Brethren," at the Lyric Theater. The children had to be under the care of teachers.

The Ruby Theater, at Harlowton, Mont., has been purchased by A. S. Vallos, of Miles City, who has renamed it the Olympia.

E. L. Wilson has sold his moving picture theater at Houston, Minn., to Axel and John Hanson.

The Albert Theater, at Albert Lea, Minn., is conducting a diamond ring contest.

Naja Temple, Mystic Shriners of Deadwood, S. D., recently held a day of entertainment for members of the Masonic orders and their families. One feature was the exhibition at the Deadwood Theater of "Quo Vadis?", with special music under the auspices of the Shriners.

Inauguration of Sunday shows by the Lyric Theater, at Marshall, Minn., has resulted in a movement against seven-day shows. The management of the theater was visited by a committee from the Ministerial Association and the matter was called to the attention of the city council. Later plans were made for appropriate programs with one show before and one after the church hour.

MIDWEST SPECIAL SERVICE.

IN THE MIDDLE WEST

THE film, "The Battle of Gettysburg," will be shown May 30 at the Auditorium, in Milwaukee, Wis., immediately after the annual Memorial Day parade, and will take the place of the customary patriotic addresses. The joint committee of the patriotic societies decided that the photoplay was more likely to inspire patriotic appreciation of the services of the civil war heroes than any oratorical outburst, because the films more graphically describe the horrors of war than any word-picture.

A bill providing for the censorship of moving pictures in St. Louis was introduced April 21 before the city council by Dr. Paul R. Fletcher, a member of that body. If it passes it will be necessary, before exhibition, to have a permit from the chief of police, showing that he has passed the film. The exhibitor will have the right to appeal, over the chief's head, to the mayor, whose decision shall be final. Penalty of not less than $25 nor more than $500 is provided for violation of the measure.

The humane side of the animal pictures is pointed out by a middlewest paper. "The people want to see the animals, but they do not want to see them suffer. The 'movie' shows the polar bear on an iceberg instead of panting on concrete in a park pit, and the elephant in the wilds of Africa, where he looks more imposing than in a circus parade, single file and clinging to the nearest convenient handle as though he were tugging at a bell cord in an endeavor to bring the undignified procession to a stop."

The O. K. Theater, at South Haven, Mich., was recently closed by Manager M. G. Hotchkiss, while the building was enlarged to give room for five hundred more seats. Several thousand dollars was expended for improvements, the additions including a new stage.

The Grand Theater, at Washington, Ind., is participating in a pony voting contest.

The Marion Theater, at Iron Mountain, Mich., notified its patrons not to see "Sapho" if they expected to see a sensational film.

MIDWEST SPECIAL SERVICE.

NORTHWESTERN NEW YORK.

"SMASHING the Vice Trust" in moving pictures has been featured by Manager Schlesinger, of the Academy Theater, Buffalo. In a half-page advertisement in Buffalo newspapers a picture of District Attorney Whitman, of New York, and quotations from Dr. Parkhurst appear. Gus Schlesinger, formerly of Buffalo, brother of the present manager of the Academy, has become manager of the Strand Theater, Toronto, Ont.

The World Film Corporation has removed its offices from the White Building, Buffalo, to 23 West Swan street. F. W. Young is in charge.

"Spartacus," one of George Kleine's attractions, will be given a premiere performance at the Majestic Theater, Buffalo, May 25th. Foster Moore, Mr. Kleine's local manager, will use live lions to advertise the production. One plan will be to have them follow a circus parade to be held in Buffalo on the day his show opens. "Spartacus" will be followed at the Majestic by other releases from Mr. Kleine.

The main offices of Warner's Features, Inc., in this territory, have been removed from 23 West Swan street, Buffalo, to 445 South Warren street, Syracuse. The concern will be represented in Buffalo by J. H. Beaver, at 32 Chapin block, and in Albany by R. K. Carpel, at 83 State street. D. J. Chatkin will have his headquarters in Syracuse and will have direct supervision of the offices there and in Buffalo and Albany. B. A. Gibbons, of Syracuse, will be assistant manager to Mr. Chatkin and will have direct charge of the Syracuse territory, which lies between Rochester and Utica and Elmira and Malone.

Albert Chatkin, formerly of Buffalo, has joined Warner's Pittsburgh forces as traveling representative.

The Small-Hanny Amusement Co., which intends to build a moving picture theater, has been organized in Buffalo with a capital of $30,000. The directors and subscribers are George F. Hanny, George P. Hall and Francis E. Cornish, of Buffalo.

The Fitzhugh Hall Amusement Co., which operated a moving picture theater in Rochester, N. Y., has filed a petition in bankruptcy. The liabilities amount to $21,722 and assets $8,725.

The Housewives' League recently put on "swat the fly" moving pictures at the Family Theater, Buffalo. Manager Foster, of that house, has been using as an extra attraction the "Lucille Love" pictures.

Henry M. Marcus, manager of the New Lyric Theater, Buffalo, is an experienced musician and directed the orchestra at Shea's Theater, Buffalo, for several years. Mr. Marcus has organized a New Lyric Symphony Orchestra, which gives concerts under his direction.

Moving pictures will take the place of burlesque at the Garden Theater, Buffalo, during the summer.

George W. Erdmann, manager of the new Elmwood Moving Picture Theater, Buffalo, was formerly with the Victor Film Co., of that city. At one time he was general manager of the Chippewa Amusement Co. and for four years managed the Bijou Dream Theaters in Buffalo and Rochester. His experienced operator is Charles Gale. At the recent opening of the Elmwood Theater, Mr. Erdmann received congratulations and floral tributes from the Victor Film Co., Mark-Brock Theatrical Enterprises, Moe Mark, Harold Edel, manager of the Strand Theater, Buffalo, the Buckeye Film Co., of Cincinnati, and others.

Manager Carr, of Shea's Theater, Buffalo, had as an extra feature recently B. A. Rolfe's "Porch Party," in which twelve musicians took part. George Cohan appeared at the Buffalo Press Club benefit at Shea's Sunday evening, May 17.

BILLY BISON.

INDIANA.

NINE hundred and fifty-three children witnessed the motion pictures, "The Last Days of Pompeii," at Anderson, Ind., recently. An hour or so later 1,000 children from the outlying districts saw the films and two hours thereafter 1,000 saw the pictures in the high school auditorium. Principal Denny, who is responsible for this educational moving picture campaign, has arranged for the presentation of the "Battle of Gettysburg" films at the high school building.

The Terre Haute Tribune, under its heading "Films and Frets," has something to say on the injection of vaudeville acts into the motion picture shows. The daily says:

"* * * Good music, instrumental and vocal is a desirable adjunct to the movie, but low-grade vaudeville stunts are to be shunned. The moving pictures appeal to men and women of refined taste. The vaudeville stunts which are interposed appeal to no one with an atom of discrimination. They are stupid, tedious and frequently improper. Nearly all the picture exhibitors have awaked to this important fact."

The new motion picture orchestra, the Wurlitzer, installed in the new Keystone Theater, Edward G. Sourbier's latest picture theater in Indianapolis, is attracting a deal of attention here. The instrument gives music of the equivalent of a ten to fifteen-piece orchestra. It is played by a single musician, being built in two sections, one part a double keyboard piano and the other a combination of trumpets, flutes, picoloes, cathedral chimes, tuba, drums, church organ, et cetera, et cetera. The new house is noting good business.

Roy Burke, 2148 Sehurmann avenue, Indianapolis, is building an airdome in which moving pictures will be given this summer.

The Fountain Theater Company, of Terre Haute, Ind., has incorporated to operate picture shows with a capital zation of $5,000. Directors: F. J. Rembusch, Shelbyville, Ind.; W. R. Beck, and G. Rembusch.

The Woman's Franchise League, of Delphi, Ind., used motion picture houses in Delphi the other day to further their cause. Films depicting the "rottenness" of politics and the "good influence" of women were put on in two houses, the suffragettes having charge of the affair.

"Sunny Hours in St. Joe Valley" will be the title of the moving picture story depicting the progress of South Bend, Ind., just completed by the chamber of commerce. The title was selected from forty-seven others. A contract has been closed with Robert Codd, of the Western Amusement Company, for a lease on the American Theater for six days and nights. Before being sent out for twenty-six weeks over the regular circuit, the films will be shown in all cities in the St. Joe Valley. There are 2,500 persons in the two reels.

For four weeks the Bible story of the Creation may be seen in moving pictures, gratis, at the Princess Theater, at Elkhart, Ind. The films are given under the auspices of the International Bible Students' Association, which uses this means to encourage individual Biby study.

As a treat to its readers the Journal-Tribune, Logansport, Ind., has purchased the rights for Logansport of the "Rise and Fall of Napoleon," moving pictures, and will present them at the Nelson Theater, where subscribers presenting newspaper coupons can obtain twenty-five-cent seats for fifteen cents.

A plan for the use of moving pictures in the schools of Indiana has been presented to the state board of education at Indianapolis by a Lafayette, Ind., man. Under his plan films would be made all over the world at various seasons of the year and rented to schools at about $5 a week, where the school corporation was unable to buy the films outright. The idea is to form a syndicate of local people and to supply a "practical education" course embracing transportation and commerce, mining of all types, and miscellaneous training in morals.

It is the claim of the management of the new Tuxedo Theater, of Indianapolis, that the house is the best equipped motion picture house in the city. The new house opened its doors April 28. It has a "$1,000 mirror screen."

The Central Avenue M. E. Church, of Indianapolis, is to institute moving pictures in its religious programs. "The moving pictures are here to stay and the children insist on seeing them," said a member of the church committee, "so we shall seek to interest them in the proper kind of picture." A fireproof cabinet for the picture machine will be installed soon.

WILLIAM.

SAN FRANCISCO

WORK will be commenced very shortly on the erection of a moving picture theater on Scott street, west of Union, San Francisco. This theater will be near the main entrance to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition grounds and is being planned by Charles J. Rousseau, 46 Kearny street.

A. H. Bosworth has been granted a permit by the Board of Police Commissioners of San Francisco to conduct a picture house at 3376 Mission street.

The Larkin Photoplay Theater, now in course of construction on Larkin street, near O'Farrell, San Francisco, will be opened about the first of June, according to present plans. This theater is a splendidly designed one and is located in the midst of a rapidly growing apartment house district.

It is announced that a five-cent policy will be inaugurated shortly at the New Theater, the house recently opened on Broadway, near Stockton street, San Francisco, by Ben Michaels. This is one of the largest and finest theaters in the North Beach section.

Dean C. Worcester, late secretary of the Interior of the Philippines, has made over twelve thousand feet of moving picture films, depicting the wild and ferocious head hunters of the Islands. The strange dances, unique costumes and weird scenes of these wild tribes and their gradual development from savagery to an educated condition are shown in these pictures, which are announced for an early date at the Columbia Theater, one of San Francisco's leading playhouses.

S. Horatio Smith, of Melbourne, Australia, who is making a tour of the world in the interests of that city, was in San Francisco this week for a stay of several days. He is also representing the I. M. P. Film Exchange, of Melbourne, and while in this country will make arrangements for securing a supply of features. Mr. Smith states that the moving picture industry in Australia lacks much of having reached the same development that it has here. Shows are advertised but little and the lobby displays cannot compare with those made here. But little attention has been paid as yet to producing, most of this being by companies from this country.

The Cuban Commissioners to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition have decided to strongly feature moving pictures showing industrial and scenic views of Cuba. Kinemacolor pictures only will be used, arrangements having been made to this effect.

A large moving picture hall is provided for in the state exhibit building to be erected for the State of Washington on the Panama-Pacific International Exposition grounds. Plans for this are being completed by architect A. F. Heide, 46 Kearny street.

War pictures are now being strongly featured by several San Francisco exhibitors. The Savoy Theater is showing pictures of the Greek-Bulgarian war and the Empress is featuring pictures of the Mexican disturbance.

A special meeting of exhibitors and exchangemen of San Francisco was held in the Assembly room of the Phelan Building this week at which matters of mutual interest were discussed. M. E. Gorg spoke on freak laws and conditions in other cities; R. J. Marks talked on the Sixteen-Year-Old Law, and H. J. Gosliner spoke on the need for reducing the number of reels at performances. The latter question was discussed at considerable length, but no definite steps were taken to bring about a change. Later in the week an informal luncheon was held at Taits Cafe, at which forty-five exhibitors and exchangemen were present, and these subjects were again gone into.

The Golden State Film Company has been incorporated at San Francisco with a capital stock of $25,000, the interested parties being A. W. Biggers, of 112 Market street; R. B. Kurrle, L. Gonsalves, G. F. Cosby and P. C. Mason. This concern has a well-equipped studio at San Rafael and is now working on a five-reel production along unusual lines. R. B. Kurrle is manager of the company.

Four special trains filled with Shriners left California this week for Atlanta, Ga., and within a few days the announcement is expected that San Francisco has been named as the convention city for 1915, this being one of the objects of the trip. Within the next three weeks these Shriners will have visited fifty-seven large cities through the United States, preaching the gospel of Northern California's manifold attractions. The San Francisco special has a full moving picture outfit aboard and not only will pictures be taken enroute, but exhibitions will be given wherever stops are made. The start was made from the Panama-Pacific International Exposition grounds, where moving pictures were made.

Exhibitors, producers, and all connected with the moving picture business in California are interested in a constitutional amendment that is to be voted upon next November, providing that no person shall be employed for more than eight hours in any one calendar day, or for more than forty-eight hours a week. The passage of this would be a blow to exhibitors and would mean that many houses could be operated but six days a week, unless additional help is secured.

O. V. Traggardh, secretary and treasurer of the Union Film & Supply Co., has completed a trip through much of the Northern California territory and is planning a trip through the entire State.

C. B. Price, district manager for the World Film Corporation, has spent several weeks at the San Francisco office getting business in good running order and is planning to go to Los Angeles shortly to start things moving there.

Walter C. Smith, assistant manager of the Hippodrome, one of the leading moving picture houses of Los Angeles, was in San Francisco this week and before leaving again for the Southland was married to Miss Blanche Kraimer, of this city.

The attendance at the Tivoli, conducted by Turner & Dahnken, is steadily increasing. The opera season caused a temporary set-back, but everything is again moving along smoothly.

A week ago it was understood in local moving picture circles that the Universal Film Manufacturing Co. had virtually completed a deal with the Panama-Pacific International Exposition for an extensive concession, but nothing further has been heard of this and the tentative plans of this concern are being held in abeyance.

The Moss Beach Amusement Company has been incorporated at Redwood City, Cal., by W. C. Leetsch, Henry Wollrich and F. A. Smith, with a capital stock of $200,000. It is planned to construct moving picture theaters and conduct a general amusement business.

The theater of W. R. Mensinger, now nearing completion at Modesto, Cal., will be opened on June 7 as a moving picture house by A. A. Richards, who has secured a long term lease on the structure. Mr. Richards is no stranger in the Modesto theatrical field, having formerly conducted the Star Theater.

The owners of the Majestic Theater, Tulare, Cal., are now conducting an airdome, warm weather having set in.

A theater building, to cost about $25,000, is to be erected shortly at Brawley, Cal., by J. L. Manahan. This will be occupied as a moving picture house.

R. E. Hicks and A. L. Miller, owners of the Plaza Theater, San Diego, Cal., have secured property adjoining the theater and will erect a moving picture house, to cost $100,000, the plans for this to be prepared by architect Walter S. Keller.

President C. W. Goddard and Secretary W. A. Cory, of the Exhibitors' League of California, will make a visit to Stockton, Cal., shortly, to effect an organization. Mr. Goddard was there a short time ago and made preliminary plans.

Beatrz Michelena, who is starring with the California Motion Picture Corporation, injured her knee while enacting a part in a play at the San Rafael studio, and was unable to perform for a time. She is now out again, but still feels the effect of the injury.

At the recent track meet between the Universities of Stanford and California the relay race was protested by California on the ground that one of the Stanford runners had made a running, instead of a standing start. The protest was not allowed, but the moving pictures of the event, made by the California Motion Picture Corporation, show clearly that the protestants were justified in their stand.

Ishi, the last of the Deer Creek tribe of Indians, and probably the most celebrated of all California Indians, visited the laboratories of the California Motion Picture Corporation this week and saw moving pictures of himself while making arrows, making fire by friction and building a stick and grass house. He was greatly pleased with the exhibition and laughed as much as if it had been a comedy film.

David Solari, who conducts the Palace Theater, at Pittsburg, Cal., the Empire at Napa, and who gives a show once a week at Yountville, has purchased the Haywards Theater at Haywards.

The Film Theater, at Stockton, Cal., has changed hands again, being conducted at the present time by H. Buerro.

A. Block has purchased a moving picture theater circuit from Collins & Mohr, embracing El Verano, Glenn Ellen and Cordelia. One show a week will be given in these places.

Collins & Mohr, who conduct a moving picture house at Sonoma, Cal., will operate a theater at Fetters Springs during the summer season.

The Gardner Amusement Company is preparing to open a moving picture theater at Lovelock, Nev. The Pacific Mutual Film Corporation of San Francisco has furnished the theater, including a Motiograph machine, and will supply the program.

The Pastime Theater, at Sisson, Cal., has been sold by J. M. French to Arens & Morgan.

E. F. Cunningham has sold the Mosswood Theater, Oakland, Cal., to F. F. Rickee, who has taken possession.

The Theater Fresno, Fresno, Cal., has been closed, the season of vaudeville not having proved successful. Moving pictures will be shown for a few weeks, except on the night of road attractions, and during the summer the theater will be remodeled.

The fire commissioners of Fresno, Cal., have ordered that the Rialto Theater must provide more fire escapes for the rear and install a new fireproof booth for the moving picture machine. They have also ruled that the Theater Fresno must make certain changes in the projection room before the place is reopened.

The Macograph Motion Picture Manufacturing Company, of which Walter L. McGinn is director general, has fitted up a studio at Forest Hill, San Francisco, and is now producing pictures there, paying special attention to comedies. Plans are being made for producing a number of plays in which children take the leading roles. A school of photoplay acting has been opened in conjunction with the producing company, where instruction is given by H. Ked Eakle, V. A. Van Antwerp and Miss Larline Lyons. The downtown offices of the concern are located in the Claus Spreckels building.

CINCINNATI

ANOTHER film exchange has been added to the already imposing number doing business in Cincinnati, the Eclectic Film Company having established a local branch on Fifth street under the management of S. P. Hettenberg. Mr. Hettenberg is well known to film men and exhibitors in this territory, as he was formerly with the Mutual and the General, as well as with other film concerns. He announces that from this branch, which is the twelfth now operated by the Eclectic, Pathe Freres' productions will be released hereafter in this section. Manager Hettenberg is sanguine of a big success for this office, as the quality of the films released through it well warrants.

With the approach of warm weather, the usual summer crop of airdomes is springing up in Cincinnati. Besides several airdomes of a substantial sort, which will open shortly under the management of competent exhibitors, there is the usual swarm of temporary affairs, projected by those who see a chance but easy money in the film business, and these are now besieging the offices of the film exchanges in search of information. Indications are that there will be more airdomes, large and small, at least at the start of the local summer season, than ever before.

The Ohio State Board of Censors is preparing to begin activity, having met recently for the purpose of going over a number of films released since its last meeting. Just now the board is worrying over the question of whether its members are under the civil service, and must therefore be appointed from certified lists of those who have passed an examination for that work, or may be appointed without examination. The Attorney General is wrestling with this knotty point, on request of Wallace D. Vaple, chairman of the State Industrial Commission, who has the appointment of members, in order that he may be governed accordingly in the appointment of an additional member. This appointment was delayed somewhat, pending the injunction suit brought at Washington by the Mutual Film Co., of Cleveland, to restrain the enforcement of the Ohio film censor law. The Supreme Court refused to issue the order, however, and the board will proceed with its work.

"A Million Bid," the recent Vitagraph release based on Cameron's play, "Agnes," drew large crowds at the Gayety last week, which was the first during which the burlesque house had run pictures. The numerous striking spectacles occurring in this film, including the great shipwreck scene, held the breathless attention of the audiences during every performance, and gave the house a fine send-off for its summer season of motion pictures. Other big attractions will follow, several features said to be equally as good as "A Million Bid" being scheduled for later exhibition.

The Lyric, one of the leading of Cincinnati's legitimate houses, is another theater which opened last week, following the close of its regular season, with motion pictures, combined with occasional bits of vaudeville. The program will be changed daily, and indications are that the house will do well, its location on Vine street, just north of Fifth and Fountain square, being very favorable.

Parts four and five of "Lucille Love, the Girl of Mystery," continued the hit made by this series at the Colonial last week. The management is highly elated with the way the series is going.

As a moral lesson, and also as a possible means of bringing together an estranged couple, Judge Fricke, in the Cincinnati Court of Domestic Relations, where quarrels between loving or unloving pairs are daily adjusted in one way or another, recently ordered that William Carlisle to take his wife, Clara, to the production of "Clothes," running at a local house. Mrs. Carlisle reported to the court that her husband had threatened her, and it seems that "clothes"—without the capital—was a part of the trouble. The couple will report back to the judge shortly, and he will be able to see whether his prescription had the desired effect.

The local motion pictures taken regularly and produced at B. F. Keith's theater are among the most popular features shown at the vaudeville house. Among the interesting events recently shown were the opening of the Cincinnati amateur baseball season, with a parade and marathon race, swimming contests in one of the high school pools, and the demonstration of how to bathe a baby, shown to the "Little Mothers' Club" at one of the schools. A live and kicking baby was used by the instructor for the purpose, and the demonstration was as realistic as could have been desired, pleasing the "little mothers" as well as the audience at Keith's. The war spirit rampant in Cincinnati, as well as elsewhere, was illustrated last week by pictures of a newly-organized cavalry troop, drilling for immediate service, were shown, and were greeted with vociferous cheers.

As the result of an ordinance recently adopted in Norwood, O., a suburb of Cincinnati, making it unlawful for groceries to keep open on Sunday, it is possible that all places of business and amusement, including motion picture shows, will be inspected upon by the grocers. They have employed detectives to secure evidence and swear out warrants covering the handling of business by picture theaters, drug-stores and other concerns on Sunday, and will fight the matter to a finish, they declare.

The Elite Movie Company has been incorporated in Dayton, O., with a capital stock of $15,000, by Joseph R. Zehnder, Peter J. Zehnder, Albert F. Kinseler, Gust. G. Kinseler and William H. Durkin. It will build and operate a theater.

KENNETH

KENTUCKY.

THE motion picture men of Louisville report that business is improving steadily, and until the hot weather drives the crowds to the parks, business should be entirely satisfactory. New house are opening rapidly all through the state, and the exchanges are doing a land office business. Managers of most of the exchanges are kept on the job constantly at present, and have very little time for anything outside of hard work. Collections are coming in very well from most of the rural exhibitors, films are being returned in better shape and more rapidly, and prospects never looked brighter. The wheat crop outlook at present is excellent and the rural districts, with any kind of luck, should have plenty of money during the summer.

The Preston Amusement Company, of Louisville, will shortly open its new airdome at Preston and Camp streets. Manager C. Groves has purchased a 6-A Power's projecting machine for the new show. The location is a very good one, and has supported a regular house for some time.

H. W. Phipps, of Bells, Ky., is making arrangements to open a new picture house in Bells, and was recently in Louisville, where he purchased a 6-A Power's machine, and a lot of other equipment.

The Rev. A. Madison, of Bardstown, Ky., is making arrangemnts for opening a colored motion picture house in that town. He has rented quarters for the new house and purchased a second-hand Motiograph machine. Bardstown has a large colored population, and a show of this kind should be successful.

Judge W. A. Kinney, of the Princess Amusement Company, Louisville, is rushing the work on his new Star Theater, at Fourth and Jefferson streets, that city, and expects to be able to get in shortly. The box office is nearly completed and interior work is advancing rapidly. The screen will be set rather high, and the floor will not be lowered.

The Warner Feature Film Company, which recently opened an office in Louisville to handle Kentucky bookings, is now carrying a stock of films to supply immediate demands. Business is improving steadily.

R. E. Gumm, who recently opened a new picture show at Lagrange, Ky., has rented a building at Eminence, Ky., and expects to open a new house shortly. Mrs. Hogue, also of Eminence, recently purchased a new machine for her show in that city, and it is reported that some other parties are on the verge of opening another house. Eminence is not a large enough town to support very many shows, and someone will shortly find this to be the case, it is believed.

The four-reel Famous Players "Tess of the Storm Country," in which Mary Pickford takes the leading role, made one of the biggest hits of any picture ever shown in Louisville. This feature was shown at the Majestic Amusement Company's house, and it was almost unable to handle the crowds, though the house has a seating capacity of 1,200. According to recent regulations of the city authorities, local houses must not allow patrons to stand at any point in the house, and the law was observed as closely as possible at the Majestic. The lobby was jammed in the evening with a large crowd which extended out over the sidewalk. Until seats were available in the house, the box office refused to sell tickets. This made it a good deal easier for the man at the door, because after a patron once has his ticket, he thinks he is entitled to go on into the house, and it is hard to hold a restless crowd back. A good many houses in some cities believe in getting the admission, regardless of what the public sentiment is concerning the action.

Carpenter & Johnston, Louisville cameramen, are making arrangements to take moving pictures of the Kentucky Derby. These pictures are generally shown over a wide area and are subjects of much interest. For the past two or three years, however, the weather has been so dark and dismal on Derby Day, that the pictures have not come out as well as they might have done. The race this year gives promise of being an unusually good one, and it is hoped that some good pictures will result.

The work of remodeling the old John C. Lewis annex, Louisville, for the new Switow house, will start soon. The Lewis Company is holding some special sales and making rapid arrangements for vacating the annex. When completed the picture house will have two stores in the front of the house. One of the officials of the Lewis Company said that the store would probably occupy the two stores when completed. Their soda fountain and confectionery department are now located in what will be one of the stores when completed, and will very likely remain where they now are.

R. E. Smith, of Paris, Ky., has completed arrangements for the opening of a new picture show for negroes in that city, and will open the house at once. He has purchased a machine and all of the necessary equipment, and will conduct a straight colored house. The admission will be five cents. The colored houses are opening up thickly all through the central part of the state.

Rowland Clark, of Lebanon, Ky., is figuring on opening a new house at Bardstown, Ky., and another one at Springfield. He also expects to reopen his old house at Lebanon, which has been closed since he opened the new Lyric. This will give him a string of four houses, but some of them will only be opened and operated during the summer months. His new house at Lebanon is doing a fine steady business.

Alf Oldham, proprietor of the Woodland Airdome, Louisville, reports that his show will start on Saturday, May 16. He will start off with the Universal program.

The West End Colonels' new house, Louisville, will be ready for business shortly and the first run of pictures will be made on May 16. A diversified program will be used at this house.

Manager Joseph Goldberg has announced that Goldberg & Levy will close the New Grand, at Twenty-seventh and Portland avenues, Louisville, for the summer. Manager Goldberg will manage the Olympic, on Market, between Preston and Floyd streets, during the summer months.

Carpenter & Johnston have purchased a new 1914 Motiograph machine, which is expected in shortly, and a fireproof portable booth. They expect to handle a good many special affairs, such as running off pictures at conventions. This form of entertainment is becoming very popular with a good many of the associations. At a recent meeting of the Kentucky Laundry Owners' Association, in Louisville, plans were made for having a special demonstration on the screen to suggest methods of saving fuel. The sheet was set up and the windows in the large convention hall covered with sheathing paper. However, the lecturer turned up sick, and the crowd was rather disappointed in not getting to see the demonstration.

The Pastime Moving Picture Theater, of Maysville, Ky., will hereafter be in charge of Miss Anna Belle Ward, formerly of Covington, Ky. Miss Ward is a well-known motion picture singer, and is the first woman to attempt the management of a picture show in Maysville.

Mike Purtle, Ashland, Ky., has taken up the lease on the old Ashland Opera House. He expects to improve the service to a marked degree. Lawrence and Steele, local druggists, have charge of the ticket selling while the house is not open.

G. D. CRAIN, JR.

MISSOURI.

THE airdome season is on in Kansas City, and is providing added competition for exhibitors who cling to orthodox methods of displaying during the summer months. The latter, however, are making the usual arrangements for the comfort of their patrons and expect to maintain their previous records in the way of box office receipts, despite warm weather.

The Royal Theater, the new motion picture house going up at 1024 Main street, Kansas City, will not be thrown open to the public until about June 1, according to a recent announcement by Frank L. Newman. Mr. Newman hoped to have his new theater in operation by May 10, but was forced to abandon original plans because of delay in construction.

Samuel Benjamin, who had the 1913 concession for moving pictures at Electric Park, Kansas City's leading summer resort, will again be in charge. The park will open May 17 and the motion pictures will follow a week or so later.

John Hughes, not the Milwaukee ball player, is doing a Jekyll-Hyde role in Kansas City. Mr. Hughes, who is operator at the American Theater, has leased the Starlight at Twenty-ninth street and Lister avenue, but will continue his work at the American, thus being operator at one house and vicarious manager at another.

A visitor of note to Kansas City recently was John B. Rock, son of the famous "Pop" Rock, of the Vitagraph Company of America. While in the city, Mr. Rock gave a special exhibition of "A Million Bid," to exchange men and exhibitors at the Tenth-street Theater. So much he's been heard of the Vitagraph feature that members of the craft turned out in numbers for the performance, and gave it their stamp of approval after witnessing it.

The old Electric Theater, at Twelfth street and Grand avenue, Louisville, has been remodeled and will be opened in the near future by William Scoville. The old name has been dropped, Mr. Scoville expecting to dissipate all impressions which cling to that name. A contest which will determine the new name of the theater has been launched. The house will seat 400 persons under the new conditions.

A new $18,000 motion picture house will be erected in Kansas City in the near future. C. H. Bussey is the promoter. He has exhibited in Kansas and other states.

The management of the Alamo Theater took advantage of the suffrage movement in Kansas City to show Alice Nielson in "A Militant Suffragette." The presentation of the five-reel feature preceded the holding of a suffragette parade in Kansas City, and attracted feminine patrons from all sections of the city.

The Empress Theater, Kansas City, a vaudeville house which has presented a feature film each afternoon, has extended the silent drama to the evening performances as well. Attendance at the matinees overtopped that in the evenings and the management arrived at the conclusion that absence of pictures was the cause of the slump at night.

Charles W. Harden, formerly manager of the Lyric Theater, Kansas City, is the new assistant to Manager Paul A. Englars with the Kansas City branch of the Mutual Film Corporation. He succeeds Frank L. Newman, who recently resigned to devote all his attention to construction of the new Royal Theater. Thomas Tasffe, who has been with the Lyric Theater for seven years past, was appointed manager in Mr. Harden's stead.

The Holt Feature Film Company, of Manhattan, Kan., has contracted to make pictures of the dedication of Memorial Hall, at Topeka, on May 27.

The Elite Theater, of Ellsworth, Kan., has attracted considerable attention recently, as the result of its stability, as compared to the average small-town motion picture house. The Elite opened in 1908, which is some time ago, considering the age of the industry, under the management of Karl W. Bornschein. While the latter has made a good many changes in the Elite, the house still resembles the original in many ways. Its career seems to indicate that efficient management is as fruitful in small cities as in large.

The management of the Maze Theater, located in the Sexton Hotel building, at Twelfth street and Baltimore avenue, Kansas City, has created some comment recently by using a balcony to the left of the screen for office work. While silence is maintained, the presence of the office staff in plain view of the audience apparently exercises a disquieting effect on the patrons and militates against full appreciation of the picture.

ST. LOUIS, MO.

MOVING picture films showing how to take care of babies, how to prepare their food, and lessons in hygiene will be shown at the Plaza Theater, at Clara and Etzel avenues, on May 9, and at the Shenandoah Theater and the Empress Theater, May 23. The campaign is being carried on by the Baby Welfare Association and the Visiting Nurses' Association under the direction of Mrs. Edmund F. Brown, chairman of the Welfare Association.

Kathlyn Williams, of the Selig Polyscope Co., is the eighth winner in the St. Louis Times "Popular Player Contest." Interest is getting very warm as the contest nears its final heats, when the big voting to decide which photoplayer is St. Louis' favorite will be run.

The American Theater has closed its regular dramatic run for the season and will show moving pictures for several weeks, beginning with the Universal feature film, "Samson," with J. Warren Kerrigan in the title part. Four exhibitions of "Samson," together with three reels of Sterling and Keystone comedies, will be shown daily. The local press is giving much space to "Samson," and no doubt the run will be a successful one.

The Virginia Airdome, which is operated in connection with the Virginia Theater, under the management of B. M. Warner, will be open for summer business on May 25.

A. Wiltmann, E. McCutcheon and F. Daxel, proprietors of the McKinley Theater, on South Jefferson avenue, have built a fine 1,500 capacity airdome at Morganford road and Juniata street. The new outdoor theater will be called "The Paris," and will have a radium gold fiber screen, and will use General service. Two nights a week, one of them Sunday, will be feature nights, when ten cents admission will be charged; the rest of the week one reel films will be shown, when the admission will be only five cents. The firm will operate under the name of "The Paris Amusement Company."

Pathe's Weekly is being handled from 3210 Locust street, Eclectic Film Company's building, since May 5th, by Chas. Soutier. Mr. Soutier was formerly manager of Gayety Theater, at Springfield, Illinois.

The Worlds Feature Film Corporation has moved from the fifth to the third floor of the Navarre building. This gives the company more room, and a much better place to handle its stock of features. Manager J. C. Conner says business is growing by leaps and bounds. This makes the third move in three months for the Worlds Features, and each move has been to larger quarters.

Talbot's New Gem Theater was the first in St. Louis to run the Vitagraph special feature, "A Million Bid," during the week ending May 10.

The Rainbow, 107 North Broadway, has a small wagon drawn by two very small and very shaggy burros. On top of the wagon are mounted two frames that reach ten or twelve feet in the air. These frames form a peak at the top, and are covered with posters, advertising the program at the Rainbow. No doubt, the chief attraction to the many children following the wagon, were the burros, but the whole outfit, wagon, children and burros, caused talk, and talk about a show generally means good business.

Managers of theaters in St. Louis have been notified by Building Commissioner McKelvey that all electric wires must be placed in steel conduits and that all woodwork under the floors must be covered with sheet metal or metal lathes and plaster.

J. Warner, manager of the Lafayette Theater, on Jefferson, near Lafayette avenue, says he will open the Russel Airdome, which he also controls, on June 1.

ESSANAY.

THE UNEVEN BALANCE (May 19).—Jake had a craving for liquor and his wife, Samanthy, reprimanded him. Jake magnifies upon everything and being a good prevaricator, the men sympathize with him. Some of the women said, "they knew from the first that Samanthy was mean." Samanthy was a good woman and went to church regularly every Sunday. The minister decided to put Samanthy on trial before the congregation. She is furious. The minister's child became ill and Samanthy nursed her back to health, sacrificing her time for one who had so terribly wronged her. The minister begged forgiveness for the wrong he had done her, and he told his congregation of the goodness of heart of Samanthy concealed within her. Moral: "Judge a woman by herself and not by the tongues of her neighbors." Jake was worthy of the ill-treatment at the hands of his wife for leading a life of degradation.

ACTOR FINNEY'S FINISH (May 20).—James Finney, a would-be actor, is discharged from the Gaiety Theater and thrown bodily into the street. He succeeds in securing a position with a motion picture concern as leading man. The new surroundings, the absence of an audience and the camera pantomime him. His blunders will cause a great deal of laughter, and the exciting chase that follows is indeed one of the most comical ever registered on film.

A SNAKEVILLE ROMANCE (May 21).—Nell writes to Dick that she will return from boarding school and to meet the stage the following day. Bud is in love with Nell, and when Mr. Canby, Nell's father, tells him to meet her with the buckboard, he is delighted. Dick makes a short cut on horseback, stops the stage and takes Nell home. Bud is furious when the stage arrives in town empty. At home Nell is given a hearty welcome by her father. She becomes peeved when she discovered she has been sitting on a freshly-painted bench—her father, in his excitement had forgotten to tell her that he had just finished painting it. That night, Bud steals into the ranchman's home and robs the safe. He brushes against the bench, which later solves the mystery of the stolen funds. Dick and Nell elope and all ends happily.

RED RIDING HOOD OF THE HILLS (May 23).—Marguerite becomes weary as the hours and the Overland Limited roll on. Her trip from New York to the far West was a tedious one, and it is with a sigh of relief that she steps from the observation platform to pluck some flowers. The train had stopped for water. Marguerite wanders into the woods and when she returns, discovers that the train had pulled off. She is alone in a new country, without friends or funds. That evening she wanders into a deserted cabin and throws herself on a cot for a rest. In the meantime, her father has discovered her absence—gets off the train at the next station and, with the aid of the sheriff and his posse, they form a searching party. Broncho Billy and his pal, Lee, return to the cabin, and it is with difficulty that the former prevents the sleeping girl from being disturbed. Her father later finds her thanks Broncho Billy for the protection and kindness extended to his daughter and continues on his journey, taking Marguerite with him. In the many long days and nights following, Broncho dreams of the little Red Riding Hood who had taken possession of his cabin.
